Thought so Too.

Detroit Free Press

As a citizen was driving up Jefferson avenue in a cutter, yesterday, keeping to the right, as the law directs, he encountered a man coming down in a similar rig. The latter wouldn't turn out and presently the horses came to a stand-still, with noses almost touching.

"Why don't you turn out," shouted the man going up.

The other stood up in his sleigh with unsteady motion, looked right and left, and thickly answered back:

"Which one of you is hollering at me?"

"Which one? Why there is only one of me."

"Zhat so? Looks to me zif there was two horses' and two cuzzers right ahead."

"I guess you are drunk," said the man going up, as he pulled clear of the track to get by.

"I zink so. I can see fourteen street-cars down here, plain's day, though I know zhat they never 'low over ten to get on one switch at once. Want to drive zhis horse down town for me?"

An English clergyman at St. Leonards-on-Sea has a brave footman. Early in December the burglar tore out a bar from the boot-room window and entered the parsonage. The footman slept near the pantry, and was disturbed by hearing something fall. He opened his door and seeing a light in the pantry, went out, taking a sword stick. He shouted out

"Whose there?"

Immediately a man put his head out of the pantry door and whistled.

The footman sprang forward and struck the man twice on the head. The burglar ran towards the outer doors, carrying a part of the plate in an apron, but being struck by the footman, he fell between the doors and dropped his plunder. The next moment the footman was struck voilently on the head and arm by another man from behind. The men then ran out the back door, which the footman had bolted, and went for his master. In the pantry was found the rest of the plate, collected and ready to be carried off. The only thing taken was the footman's watch and chain.

Vermont people tell this for a fact: A young widower in Windham county not far from Brattleboro, who was greatly in need of a housekeeper, rode day after day in vain search for a hired girl. At last, almost discouraged, he drew up at a small dwelling among the hills.

"Can you tell me where I can get a woman to do work in a farmhouse?"

"Where are you from?" asked the old man, viewing the handsome horse and buggy with a critical air.

"My name is ——, and I am from —"

"Oh, ya'as, I've hern of ye; ye lost yer wife a spell ago. Wal, I've got six gals—good gals, too—and ye may take yer pick among 'em for a wife; they wouldn't none of them think of goin' out to work. Should as full as lives you'd take Hannah, because she's the oldest, and her chance ain't quite so good, seeing as she's near sighted, and can't hear so well. But if ye don't want her ye can take yer pick o' t'others."

The widower went in, selected the best looking one, drove to a Justice's, was married, and carried home that night a permanent housekeeper, who proves so far to be in every way satisfactofy.

How Jinks was Counted Out

Mrs. Jinks was seated before the fire trying to knot in the toe-end of her stocking to keep things from dropping through that she expected Kris Kringle to put into it last night, hanging to the mantel-pece. Jinks entered full of 'ice-water' and 'enthusiasm,' turned loose fourteen packs of shooting-crackers on fire into the room, threw his hat at the clock on the mantel-piece and commenced an Indian war-dance, yelling like Comanche Bill, "Here I am, Nancy, Woop-ee! Look out! I'm red hot, bilin' full, and still a heatin'! Rah! Nancy, I'm a walkin' volcano right now. It's runin' out my ears, and if you ain't ready to die, leave, for I'm a b-a-d man, and I don't intend to stand any more foolishness from that old pug nosed, long-jawed, cat-eyed mother-in-law o' mine any longer, nor you either. Do you under—" Just then things turned very dark to Jinks and all was quiet. Mrs. Jinks put the skillet back on the stove, opened the doors to let the smoke out, hung up her stocking, and went over to see her mother, leaving Jinks doubled up in one corner of the room, nursing a badly bruised nose and wondering whether he was inside the cannon when it went off or on the top of it when it bursted. There are times in the lives of women when 'forbearance ceases to be a virtue,' and the time for Mrs. Jinks to lift the friendly skillet and lay Jinks out had come when he came home in Tam O'Shanter's fix. "Roarin' fou' an' unco' happy."

A CHRISTMAS DINNER.

A Holiday Table all alone with one Guest and one Ghost.

"What do you do on Christmas-day on board of a ship at sea?" said a World reporter to an old salt yesterday.

"What do we do?" said the mariner, "why we don't do anything, and that's where the day is different from others days. It's all the same as a Sunday, you see, arter we gits washed down in the morning, we jist lays off and does nothing, 'cept to make and take in sail. Then we has plum-duff for dinner, grog on Christmas night—thats about all. I mind one Christmas, though, when I got a feed that I'll never forget if I live a thousand years. The way of it were: I was comin' home in the ship Mount Vernon, with Capt'n Bill Abrams, and we'd got to the longitude of about forty degrees or thereabouts, when one night we hauled the jib down and some of the hands went out for stow it. Its a mighty nasty sail to stow in a hard breeze of wind, unless you keep her off, which they never would do in that ship and one of the chaps, by some means, missed his hold and went overboard. The helm was put down at once, and when her head got to the east'ard we got a boat down and me and three other chaps got into her and pulled off, lookin' for our shipmate. We didn't find him, and that wern't all, we lost the ship, and arter pullin' about for and hour or two, we give up and let her lay till daylight. When it come, there we was, in an open boat in the middle of the ocean and not a sail in sight anywhere. It ain't no use tryin' to tell you of our sufferin' for the next week, for I can't do it. One of us died on the sixth day, and on the seventh another chap in the course of the night got crazy and jumped overboard, and on the eighth day me and Bill Murray was left alone in the boat. Me and him had been a chawin' away on our sea boots for the past three days, but both of us felt that we must have somethin' more nourishin', or we'd croak sartin'. Somehow or other I got kind of skared at Bill, and he were the same of me, and we each took a end of the boat, and kept our knives in our hand.

'Tom,' says he at last, 'these are hard times.'

'Your right,' says I, 'they are.'

'If it's got to be done,' says he, 'let's do it fair, and draw for it.'

'Good enough,' says I, and with that unlays the end of the boats painter, and cuts off two yarns of different length, and holds his hands out for me to come and choose, sayin' 'the longest man wins'.

I creeped for'ard as well as I could, for I were blessed weak, and I drawed the longest yarn. That day was Christmas, sir, and that day I had a feed. Two days arter, I was picked up by the the ship Nonpareil, and what were left of Bill, were hove overboard. If you'd like to stand somethin', sir, I think I could stand it now, cause I always feels melancholy when I think of Bill."

Fritz's Troubles.

Fritz has had more trouble with his neighbors. This time he determined to appeal to the majesty of law, and accordingly consulted a legal gentleman.

'How vas dose tings?' he said.

'Vell, a vallar's got a garden, und der odder vallare got some shickens eat 'em up. Don't you got some law for dot?'

'Some one's chickens have been destroying your garden?' asked the lawyer.

'Straw in mine garden? Nein, it vas vegetables.

'And the chickens committed depredations on them?'

'Ish dot so?' asked Fritz in atonishment.

And you want to sue him for damages?' continued the lawyer.

'Yaas. Gott for tamages, und der gabbages, und der lettuges?'

'Did you notify him to keep his chickens up?'

'Yaas, I did nodify him.'

'And what did he say?'

'He nodify me to go to haal, and wipe mine shin off down mine vest.'

'And he refused to comply with your demand?'

'Hey?'

'He allowed his chickens to run at large?'

'Yaas, some vas large und some vas leedle vallars, but dey bos scratch mine garten more as der sefen dines ideh.'

'Well, you want to sue him?'

'Yaas, I vant to sue him to make von blank fence ub sixdeen feed his house all aroundt, vot der tam shicken don't got ofer.'

The lawyer told him that he could not compel him to build such a fence and Fritz left in rage, exclaiming:

'Next summer time I raise me shickens, to, you bate! I raise fidin, py tam! Vipe off you vest down.'

TWAIN INTERVIEWED.

The Humorist Disclaims all Responsibility for the State of the Country.

[New York World.]

Mr. Mark Twain has been "hanging around" New Yoak with a great deal of mischief in his eye for several days. He says positively that he came down from Hartford with no other purpose than to buy a boot jack for the holidays and meekly to eat his atom of the New England dinner, but the officials at the St James hotel, where he has retained a bed, affirm that his goings and comings have been, if not mysterious enough to excite suspicion, at all events marked, and it is not denied by any one that the sugar loaf seal-skin cap with which he has seen fit to adorn his head is quite large enough to hold a very fair supply of "papers and documents," in adition to its usual miscellaneous cargo. It is doutless well remembered that Mark Twain took what with other men might be called an "active part" in the republican canvass last fall—so active that Rumor, with her 18,762 tongues, loudly proclaimed his zeal to be begotten of an ambition to be appointed statistician of deaths, or some other office congenial with his temperament, his movements since the campaign have therefore been watched with some interest, not to say alarm, by all lovers of political veracity. The exact date of his arrival in this city is shrouded in the deepest mystery. Either he registered under an assumed name, affixed his solemn signature to a napkin and announced his arrival by "chucking" it at the head of the dignified clerk, or, as is quite likely, avoided the form altogether, for certain it is that neither the name nor the well known initials 'M. T.' appear upon the hotel records. Possibly he couldn't have tarried here even longer and escaped unperceived but for the absurd dignity of a waiter who said he'd be vummed if he was going to crawl around on the floor and pull tacks out of the carpet with his teeth, "not to please no gentleman as he ever waited on." This, to use a parliamentary term, "gave him away," and after incessant waiting and watching a reporter of the World succeeded in intercepting him and it may be said, in frustrating any contemplated nefarious design, as Mr. Twain began rapidly to pack his valise on the instant of the reporter's arrival and smiling the sad, wan smile of an unearthed coyote, fled with all possible speed to the depot.

At the moment of his discovery Mr. Twain may not have been reading a special despatch from Zach Chandler, but he was certainly not reading the Bible. It may not have been a note from Kellogg instructing him to indite a hymn for the down trodden republican negroes of Louisiana that he crumpled into a wad behind his back on seeing the reporter, and subsequently devoured in mouthfulls, his eyes meanwhile fixed religiously on the gas fixtures overhead, but this by no means proves that it wasn't. Indeed, there was an air of guilt about Mr. Twain that no extraneous observations upon the state of the Sabbath school in New Zealand availed in the least to dispel.

"Mr. Twain," said the reporter, "what have you to say on the political situation?"

"Sir," replied Mr. Twain, bundling a long white garment into his valise, "it is mixed."

"And?" said the reporter.

"I didn't mix it and I don't know who did, and I can't straighten it, and I don't know who can and—what do you think, sir, of paving Broadway with—"

"Excuse me, Mr. Twain, now there are the southern outrages———"

"Never heard of them, never, never, never."

"Never heard of them, Mr. Twain?"

"No, sir; I never did (by this time Mr. Twain had one side of his bag packed, and was sitting on it); ain't in my line; let's talk of something else."

"Mr. Twain, I understand you voted the republican ticket?"

"Yes, sir; where's the whisk broom? Ah here it is, in you go. Sir, would you journey through life swiftly and in peace?"

"Yes," replied the reporter; "but Mr. Twain———"

"Never mind the buts. You must make a rule of always packing the whisk-broom first. Now the pipe and the Bible, and then I'm all packed; must go; got to catch a train in three minuts; good-by; and in a twinklin Mr. Twain was on his way to Hartford.

The reporter turned sadly to leave when the pensive voice of the republican politician was again heard, and turning aroud he beheld Mr. Twain, with his body in and his head out of the elevator.

"I say, now, you had better not print the information I've given you."

"Why not?"

"Because it's private; if you do I'll kill one of the editors you can't spare; I will, I will. Merry Christmas."

WOES OF A WART.

How a Man Feels With a Conspicuous Excrescence On the End of His Proboscis.

[Chicago Times']

Mr. Homer Hawkins is a blighted being—a blighted being with a wart on the end of its nose. The world looks dark and dreary to a man with a wart on the end of his nose. The sun may shine, but it shines not for him. The flowers may bloom, but their beauty and fragrance are not for him. Think of a man inhaling the perfume of a flower with a nose with a wart on the end of it! The heavens may be blue, but they bring no holy calm to the soul of a man with a wart in the end of his nose. All nature may smile, but no ray of happiness gladdens his gloomy heart. The world is a desert dryar, arid to such a man. Life is an empty bauble and existence a curse. He may be wealthy, but riches will not take the wart off the end of his nose. He may have genius, but the cold relentless world frowns upon genius with a wart on the end of its nose. He may possess a kindly heart and generous impulse, but the jeering world questions the motives of a man with a wart on the end of his nose. It never goes below the wart. Whatever may be the qualities of his mind or heart, it passes the man with a wart on the end of his nose coldly by. He is an insignificant, low-spirited being, is the man with a wart on the end of his nose, without love, without happiness and without hope. From the very hour when Mr. Homer Hawkins was big enough to see the wart on the end of his and to observe that the rest of the world had no wart on the end of its nose, he became a low-spirited being. That wart crushed out the happiness of his boyhood. That wart crushed out the natural sweetness of his nature and destroyed the bloom and freshness of existence. That wart followed him through life, and though now he is a middle-aged man, that wart still rankles in his bosom and blooms on his nose. He is a disappointed, cheerless man, whose life has been a miserable failure through having a wart on the end of his nose. If the world in general had a wart on the end of its nose, Mr. Hawkins might well be proud of the wart on the end of his nose. As warts go, it is a beautiful wart. It is a wart of fine, well developed proportions. It sits gracefully on the very tip end of his nose. It is a seed wart without the liability to decay and pass away. If everybody wore warts on the ends of their noses, a great many of them would look with feelings of bitter envy upon Mr. Hawkins's wart. It would make him respected and looked up to. People would say that Mr. Hawkins's nose was elegantly wart-mounted. Society would exclaim, "What a beautiful nose!" The people with weak, puny, diminutive warts would shrink away, be cast down and thrown into utter insignificance by Mr. Hawkins's wart. Mr. Hawkins has often felt this way, and wished that everybody had warts on the ends of their noses. But the usual and most desirable nose has no wart on the end of it, and the cruel world laughs and jeers at Mr. Hawkins.

Gabriel Amusing Himself.

New York World

'I hope your honor will be as lenient as possible,' said John Van Drahl's brother to the recorder in Hoboken yesterday morning, as John Van Drahl was arraigned for drunkeness.

John, who had been arrested Thursday night while driving furiously up and down the Hoboken streets with a thousand-dollar team, is charged by his neighbors with occasionally blowing a big tin horn, under the impression that he is the angel Gabriel.

'Why?' inquired his honor, in response to John's brother's appeal.

'Because he is liable to occasional fits of insanity.'

"Do you pretend to say that it was insanity that caused him to get drunk on Hoboken beer last night?" asked his honor with great severity.

'I presume it was.'

'And to drive at an unlawful rate of speed on Washington street to the peril of foot-passengers, at the same time shouting so loudly as to frighten them away, 'That the end of the world had come?'

'I presume so, your honor. He does curious things sometimes.'

'What does he do?'

'He takes a horn on top of his barn at night, and——'

'Where do you say he takes a horn?' interrupted his honor.

'On top of his barn and he——'

'That's a most extraordinary place. Is there no saloon near?'

'No, sir. He blows it all night long some times.'

'Blows it! Blows what? The barn?'

'No sir, the horn. It's a tin horn your honor, a very large one.'

'Don't trifle with this court, sir, if you want any leniency shown.'

'No, sir. And he fights with his family, sir. A little while ago he shot two men.'

'Shot two men!' exclaimed the court.

'Yes, sir because they laughed at him. He's wealthy, sir, and has a farm of his own in Seacaucus, and does no work himself.

'Oh! A gentleman farmer.'

'Yes, sir.'

'And amuses himself like that?'

'Yes sir.'

John Van Drahl, the court finds you guilty, but in view of the extenuating circumstances just explained by your brother you are find $10. But don't choose Hoboken the next time you travel for amusement.

OUR CENTENNIAL CHURCH.

A Few Facts in Regard to its History, Cost and General Appearance.

The work on the new Presbyterian church, on south Jackson street, has progressed so far that the end of this week will see its completion. It was the intention at first to dedicate it on the last sunday in the centennial year, but owing to several causes, this was found to be impossible, and the members were reluctantly compelled to pospone the ceremonies.

The church is the finest, costliest and most complete in all its appointments of any in the county, and a brief description will therefore be interesting. The lot upon which it is erected, was purchased at a cost of $400, some years ago by the ladies of the society. Upon this lot it was decided to erect a church less than a year ago, and the contract was let by Messrs. Joseph Abright, E. D. Hartman and S. B. Miller, the trustees, to Bumpus & Hollinger. Under the supervision of these gentlemen, the entire work, except the seating was performed and the result is seen in the excellent workmanship and substantial character of the building, as both the gentleman are skilled mechanics themselves, and have therefore been able to see that everything was done correctly and in good style. The architects were Gibbs & Moser, of Toledo, Ohio. The masonry was laid under the direction of Al. Wheaton, and the brick work by Geo. Picker.

The structure itself is of a modified Gothic style of architecture. Below is a room which will not be completed until next season. This is intended for Sunday schools and lecture purposes. Above this is the main audience room, in which the regular meetings will be held. This has a seating capacity of 500. It is provided with a desk and chairs instead of the cumbersome pulpit, and seatings used in older style of churches.

Like many of the churches erected of later years, the ceiling is replaced by a lattice truss roof, which gives the inside of the church a lofty appearance unatainable without its use.

All the wood work which is made of oak, walnut and spruce pine is oiled and varnished, showing the natural grain of the wood.

Stoves are dispensed with, and the entire building is heated by a furnace of the most approved pattern, furnished by Mr. J. L. Davis.

Gas is used in lighting instead of oil, thus adding much to the cleanliness of of the church, and lessening the chances of explosions and fires.

The windows are of stained and enameled glass, which is also an innovation in our style of home churches.

The building committe, upon whom the care and attention to details involved in building the church fell, were E. E. Williams, R. Elson and Dr. Allen.

The church has a membership of 115, under the pastoral care of the Rev. Henry Johnson.

It is hoped to pay off the entire cost of building in all, before the church is dedicated.

THE INDIANAPOLIS

SENTINEL.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1877.

Every reader and thinking man in the state who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for at least one of the editions of the Sentinel. Farmers, Merchants and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL.

The Weekly Sentinel will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than Compare Favorably with any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be Newsy, Literary, and full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

THE NIGHT BEFORE NEW YEARS.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

The trees on the hillside stand cheerless and lone;
The leaves of the woodland are scattered and strown;
The harvest is gathered; the meadows are bare;
And the snowflakes are falling like down through the air.

The windows are frosted with crystalline leaves;
The glittering icicles cling to the eaves;
The night-wind is wailing, o'er mountain and plain,
With a sound like the moan of a mortal in pain.

'Tis the night before New Year's. Time, hoary and gray,
While the sands in his glass are fast gliding away,
Lifts the curtain that hides every mortal from sight,
And beholds the whole world and its wonders to-night.

The gaslights are gleaming in Vanity Fair,
While beauty and fashion are worshiping there;
Where envy, where malice and selfishness reign;
Where the lowly are greeted with haughty disdain;

Where flowers are fragrant in many a bower;
Where men are displaying their riches and power;
Where red wine is running in bounteous flow;
Where diamonds are sparkling on bosoms of snow;

Where money is better than genius or brains;
Where music is heard in voluptuous strains;
Where wild eyes are glancing at each lovely face;
Where gay forms are dancing in satin and lace;

Where the prodigal squanders the ill-gotten gain
That his miserly father has hoarded in vain;
Where revelry dwells; where the reckless will cry:
"Let us dance and be glad, for to-morrow we die!"

In many a desolate hovel, to-night,
The poor and the friendless are hidden from sight;
Where the doors and the windows are broken and old;
Where the cupboard is empty, the hearthstone is cold;

Where, wearily working in hunger and dirt,
The sewing-girl sings her sad "song of the shirt;"
Where mothers are sighing o'er hopes that have fled;
Where children are crying and begging for bread;

Where vice in its hideous garb is revealed;
Where strong men are raging; where crime is concealed;
Where forms that were lovely, and cheeks that were fair,
Are wretched with woe, and are haggard with care;

Where beggars are crouching in squalor and cold;
Where misers are counting their ill-gotten gold.
Heaven pity the poor, and the ones led astray;
May their woes and their burdens be banished away.

In many a home on this bountiful earth,
A bright fire burns on the family hearth,
And innocent pleasures and pastimes are seen,
Where nothing is heard that is vulgar and mean;
Where friendship and filial affection are found;
Where kind words are spoken, and comforts abound;
Where the needy are clothed, and the hungry are fed;
Where God is revered, and the Bible is read;

Where family voices are blended in song;
Where nothing is seen of oppression and wrong;
Where the father each night, with an unselfish prayer,
Commits his loved flock to the Lord's tender care.

Though over the wide world we wander and roam,
We find in no place the pleasures of home;
The world-weary come from a far-distant land,
To meet with a welcome and clasp of the hand.

The sailor, afar on the billowy main,
Is longing to be with his loved ones again.
O home! thy sweet joys are more lasting and fair
Than all the wild follies of Vanity Fair.

O Vanity Fair! what hunger and care,
What pitiful scenes of distress and despair,
What moments of anguish, and hours of woe,
You bring to the bosoms of beings below!

You prodigals, wasting your substance away;
You libertines, hastening to early decay;
You maidens, fast losing your beauty and bloom—
Why rush with such reckless resolve to the tomb?

You wrest from the lowly the comforts they need,
To revel in riot, and grovel in greed;
Never knowing the joys of a satisfied mind;
Never being a blessing to one of your kind.

You creatures that cower in hunger and cold;
You pitiful wrecks that are friendless and old;
You heart-broken sinners, now loaded with care,
Are drinking the dregs of earth's Vanity Fair.

You hands that are idle, in haunts that are low,
May find in employment a cure for your woe;
You forms that are fading, be hopeful and brave,
And look to the Lord for the comforts you crave.

You beings of earth who are sordid and vain,
Why struggle for greatness, and grovel for gain?
All grandeur must come to the coffin and shroud;
"Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

All hearts that are human have hopes of their own;
There are hundreds renowned; there are millions unknown;
Some are merry and young; some are wretched and old;
Some are timid and weak; some are valiant and bold;

Some are holy and pure; some are sinful and vain;
Some are doing good deeds; some are striving for gain;
Some are softened by love; some are hardened by crime;
And all are the sport and the playthings of time.

'Tis the night before New Year's; the morrow will dawn;
The year, with its pleasures and griefs, will be gone;
The bells will ring gayly, with sounds of good cheer;
God bless you, and give you a Happy New Year.

THE BAMBER FORTUNE.

A New Year's Story.

On the last day of the old year Mrs. Bamber entered her shop and served her customers abstractedly, for her mind was full of trouble. She was the most cheerful and sprightly of little women, with bright, keen, blue eyes, a ruddy bloom in her soft, wrinkled cheeks, and flaxen hair arranged in stiff curls about her forehead; but to-day the demand of a small boy, in shrill tones, for a bottle of Bamber's Drops failed to produce the delight usually manifested by her under such circumstances. Bamber's Drops was the remedy of her late husband for all the ills flesh is heir to, and Mrs. Bamber believed in it firmly with the ardor of a sanguine nature and loving heart. The late Dr. Bamber's star had set in sadness and gloom before an unsympathizing world had consented to take his panacea by the teaspoonful. As far as the will of one fragile and very determined woman could make the world rescind its objections Mrs. Bamber had prepared herself for the battle. When the small boy had taken himself off with his purchase she leaned her elbow on the counter and sighed deeply.

"To think of the Platts coming to this! If Archibald was alive, instead of only his wife! He knew a deal about law, poor dear, and needed to, what with imitators and spurious articles to injure the trade. I would sell out and give them every penny if I could find a purchaser, and it wasn't all so sudden. Archibald was grateful to his dying breath, and I'm not likely to forget that we owe everything to Dr. Platt. Dear, dear! Five thousand dollars, or a foreclosed mortgage. I tell you it's pure spite in that Hiram Driggs; he don't know how to behave himself yet as a rich man."

Mrs. Bamber's gaze strayed anxiously about the place, as if searching for a way out of her difficulties. Did the clew actually lie in her grasp without her being aware of it? The shop was very tiny, but exquisitely neat, and the variety of articles for sale, which made it almost a museum, was arranged with a certain artistic perception of harmonious coloring. The late Dr. Bamber had been a chemist, and one side of the place was still devoted to those medicines which a woman may dispense without being a licensed apothecary; but the rest of his stock had been removed across the way to the new drug-store, which was a grief to Mrs. Bamber's soul, and replaced on her shelves with a few books, stationery, and gay worsteds.

"Why should I not be the apothecary after Archibald?" she had said to Dr. Platt, with an energetic nod of the head. "Don't I know as much as Peyton."

Peyton was the rival over the way. Dr. Platt, a rosy, good-natured gentleman, had made some soothing response calculated to mollify feminine vanity, and suggested the stationery department as a fresh field of usefulness.

Mrs. Bamber's eyes rested on the volumes opposite, a package of valentines in which the town indulged at the proper season, a jumping-jack dangling helplessly from a nail. Never by any chance did her gaze wander to the shop window. She went over to the other side and opened a show-case, which contained fat pin-cushions and impossible pen-wipers, articles made by old ladies of the reduced-gentlewoman type and presented here for sale.

"I believe that I would sell my own soul to raise the money and help them out of trouble," said Mrs. Bamber, vehemently; and then she took up a pin-cushion as if in hopes it might turn to gold in her hand. "Pooh! these things have lain here for years. What good are they?"

An aquarium occupied a place in the center of the shop—a crystal house where silky fibers of seaweed grew about mimic grottoes, and fish of metallic hues flashed through the water. A guilty pang smote the little woman at the sight of it. In all these years of hard work and lonely widowhood the aquarium was the only extravagance she had allowed herself, and often would she spend her time of rest gazing into the miniature water-world. If she could now give the money it had cost to the Platt family!

A white gleam came softly through the window from the snow-covered streets; winter seemed to muffle the town of Stoneport in a mantle of silence, setting each household in a separate atmosphere of individuality. Up on the hill, where genteel Stoneport dwelt in large, old-fashioned mansions, the music of sleigh-bells and merry voices was to be heard, but down here, on the main street, the afternoon fell in quiet cold, deserted by traffic as soon as the sun quitted the narrow thoroughfare.

Miss Simmons, the milliner, peered from her window, and Mr. Peyton, the druggist opposite, polished his door-panes mechanically with a bit of chamois leather. The harbor, now dark and wind-fretted, lapped up to Mrs. Bamber's very back door. Pirates might have landed and carried her off at midnight, if they had been disposed, although Mrs. Bamber was not daunted by fear of such violent abduction. In the old days piratical crews in rakish craft from the Spanish Main had not been unknown in the waters of this very harbor, and Stoneport had been more intimately associated with the slave-trade than was good for its reputation at a future date. Like so many towns on the coast of New England, prosperity had ebbed away, the bud of promise been blighted by some mysterious fluctuation of commerce. There were those who detected a righteous Nemesis in the decay of Stoneport, and here it was left to crumble away in the sunshine, a moss-grown memory of the past. The shop-bell rang suddenly, and a girl entered.

"Oh, Mrs. Bamber!" she cried; and, throwing her arms impulsively about the little woman, burst into tears.

The girl was taller and larger than her companion, and yet clung to her.

"Has anything more happened?" inquired Mrs. Bamber, alarmed. "Now don't give way, my dear."

"I can't help it," sobbed the girl, excitedly. "Mr. Driggs has been to see me again. He came to the school-room, with all the children staring, and told me he would not foreclose on the Platt property if I would marry him. Oh, what a cruel, cruel bargain!"

"You never promised—" began Mrs. Bamber, breathlessly.

The girl drew herself up.

"I said no."

Charlotte Eaton was very attractive, certainly, even in her anger, with flushed cheeks and tearful eyes. A little scarlet hood covered her golden hair and gave her something of childish beauty. At this moment there was a stir in the deserted street; people appeared like magic. A sleigh, curved like a shell, and lined with robes of fleecy-white fur, drawn by spirited black horses in flashing harness, and driven by a solemn negro coachman in livery, slowly passed. The sole occupant was a small man, wrapped in sable, with a keen, narrow face, who gazed down on the commotion his splendor excited with irrepressible exultation. This man was Hiram Driggs, and to show himself ostentatiously to his world of Stoneport was a pleasure which had not yet palled on the rich man.

"His mother learned her trade when I did," said Miss Simmons, the milliner, "I am sure nobody thought her son would come to owning everything."

The elder Driggs had, indeed, worked in secret many years, directing little rills of wealth, gleaned from any humble source, to his own dingy warehouse. Miserly and reticent in the extreme, Stoneport had not divined his riches until the son, now 45 years old, suddenly emerged from the bondage in which he had been held by his stern parent while living to assume the role of millionaire. Hence the astonishment of the town; hence Hiram's love of display.

In Mrs. Bamber's shop the two women grew rigid as the sleigh passed, the widow with indignation, and the young schoolmistress with a curious admixture of envy and repulsion. Had she not been urged, nay, almost threatened in all that she held dearest—her plighted troth with Charley Platt—to share the sleigh with its fleecy robes? Might she not save the Platt homestead, indeed, by paying this very price of marrying Hiram Driggs? Mrs. Bamber took her hands.

"Charlotte, let us go to this man and beg him to release them," she said, earnestly. "You must have influence with him."

"I am afraid to go," said Charlotte.

"Afraid! When you are to be Charley's wife? We must fight for him, my dear."

These two champions saw the sins of Mr. Driggs in the light of intense partisanship. He was a mean man, and the power of money would naturally make him tyrannical; moreover, he had selected Charlotte Eaton to fall in love with as the sweetest and most blooming young lady in Stoneport. Hiram Driggs could certainly afford to please himself at last! Unversed in the delicate phases of romance, he could by no means win a smile from Charlotte, and discovered in wrath and consternation that Charley Platt was his rival. He would foreclose and take possession of the house. Stoneport saw in this measure only the grasping tendencies of the man who wished to establish a home, while the victims detected revenge. Probably both factions were wrong.

Mrs. Bamber, with trembling Charlotte by her side, presented herself before the tyrant. He still dwelt in the wing of the warehouse where his father had been contented to abide. Perhaps he was chagrined to be found in the small parlor, which he had furnished with yellow satin curtains and sofas, when he would so soon take possession of the house on the hill. The mission was scarcely a successful one, although Mrs. Bamber made herself spokeswoman on the occasion with all possible energy. She even offered up her shop, since Dr. Platt had given it originally, and was laughed at for her pains. Mr. Hiram Driggs was not a pleasant man to ask for favors, especially when he came quite close to Charlotte and said, harshly: "You know my terms."

After that Mrs. Bamber drew her companion away without another word.

"He is a brute," said the little woman, tingling with mortification at the remembrance of the coarse laugh which had greeted her proposal of yielding up her all.

They met a young man at the corner of the street.

"Take care of her," said Mrs. Bamber, transferring Charlotte to his charge.

"My dear Mrs. Bamber, I do not need the injunction," said Charley Platt in a voice he strove to render steady and cheerful as he drew the girl's hand through his arm with an air of tender protection. Charlotte and Mrs. Bamber looked at each other meaningly; then the latter turned away with a little pang at her heart. These two were made for each other, handsome Charley and pale, frightened Charlotte; but how would it be with them if evil in the shape of Hiram Driggs stepped between? When she reached her own door Mrs. Bamber was not only disturbed and distressed, as she had been all day, but thoroughly out of temper. She would have liked to set the world to rights, and had only succeeded in ruffling her own amour propre in the interview with a brusque, rude millionaire. Perhaps it was this mood that made her shake her head at the three pictures in her window.

"Oh, there you are! I only wish I could recover the sum your frames cost me. Old masters, forsooth!"

The pictures were small and dark, as if some shadow obscured their original meaning, even as brambles and moss might have overgrown the artist's grave. The sun shot a golden arrow in the window as Mrs. Bamber paused, and illuminated the dim canvas. Perhaps the radiance of revelation reached her soul in that glimpse, however faintly, the gleam of an angel's wing cleaving the sky, the wonder of the Virgin's up-turned face; but the sunset faded, and Mrs. Bamber was left to sorrowful contemptation of the garish frames. "Some papist trash," she soliloquized. "Whatever possessed me to get 'em new frames? I shall never see the money back, I'll be bound! I'm sure I would be thankful to get $25 apiece, allowing $20 for the frames; and I suppose the pictures are worth $5, if they amount to anything. Nobody will give that, though."

A year before the shop-bell had brought Mrs. Bamber from her supper to the contemplation of a thin, cadaverous stranger of the brigand type, wrapped in a cloak, and with a broad hat drawn over his brows. The man was faint with cold, and coughed dolefully; he had no money and no friends. Mrs. Bamber was not the person to send away such a waif empty-handed. She placed him before the fire in her own tiny kitchen, and made Nanny, her small hand-maiden, serve him with hot tea; she wrote a note to the clergyman, who dispensed charity, to find a lodging; and she finally dispatched him with a bottle of Bamber's Drops as a gift. The stranger lingered in the garret furnished him, reserved, a trifle sinister and only known to smile when Mrs. Bamber preached to him in a language which he but imperfectly understood.

There came a day in rude March, when so many leaves drop from the tree of life, that the foreigner sent for Mrs. Bamber, bequeathing to her solemnly three small pictures set in carved wood.

"They are worth their weight in gold," he had whispered, and turned his inscrutable face—in which there lingered a triumph to the end—to the wall.

Mrs. Bamber had shed a few tears, and carried her gifts home cautiously, as if she held some explosive projectile. The clergyman surveyed the pictures through his spectacles, and chilled the possessor's enthusiasm somewhat by expressing a preference for engravings. He recommended replacing the quaint olive wood frames with new ones and exposing them for sale in the window. Clergymen are not always the best financial advisers. Mrs. Bamber's face grew very long when she saw the framer's bill. Stoneport was skeptical of these daubs; besides, the widow asked a fabulous price for them. Stoneport knew a chromo and a modern landscape full of lively coloring, but such dismal things were not to its taste.

The last night of the year closed in sadly. Mrs. Bamber sat long beside the morning-glory stove in the parlor back of the shop, sipping her tea, in which beverage alone lay consolation. A portrait of Dr. Bamber, representing him as a somewhat wall-eyed gentleman, hung above her, and opposite a cabinet displayed, among other relics, several skulls prepared by the lamented Archibald. Her thoughts went back to a dreary day on an emigrant wharf, when she landed with her husband, who had been injured by a fall on the voyage. The sense of desolate homesickness again swept over her now, twelve years later, and a gentleman with a good-humored, rosy face spoke to her kindly. Could she ever forget that this Samaritan was Dr. Platt, of Stoneport, now gone to his reward? He had asked few questions, but had brought the friendless chemist to his own town and established him in business. No one knew the cost of it all. It was not the good physician's way to make his charity a burden. Mrs. Bamber wiped her eyes as she sipped her tea by the stove and the night closed in.

Up on the hill the old Platt homestead was shrouded in gloom, and revealed only one dim light in the dining-room. It was a brick house, with white pillars supporting a projecting roof, shaded in summer by large trees, and seemed in the clear, crisp evening surrounded by tender memories. Now it was all to be swept away, for the doctor's purse had been ever open, and he had left wife and son in straitened circumstances. The lovers stood in the window, hand clasped in hand, as if claiming a silent mutual support, while Mrs. Platt, a stout lady with a querulous mouth, wandered from room to room gazing at her precious household gods.

"Even little Mrs. Bamber owns the roof over her head, and all owing to the doctor," sobbed the poor lady, taking up a favorite tea-cup with loving touch.

The young son set his teach and drew a long breath. Charlotte could only lean her brow against the cool pane. If they knew all! The night brought sorrow, but the ensuing day was only anticipated with dread.

Hiram Driggs made himself comfortable on the yellow-satin couch of his little parlor, with a decanter of wine at his elbow and a cigar. If conscience is a matter of education, he should have been wholly at ease, but there had been an expression in Charlotte Eaton's eyes as she departed that day which pricked him smartly even in remembrance. This look he might never forget. The wonderful, backward glance of the Cenci haunts a world. Lounging on the yellow sofa, he reasoned himself out of these fancies. He would gain at a cheap rate a fine home. Dr. Platt was a reckless spendthrift in his day, and his creditors need not be blamed for that. As for Charlotte, he might make terms with that proud young lady yet. Altogether the evening passed not unpleasantly for him in planning improvements on his new property.

New Year's day dawned on Stoneport, bringing joy to many hearts and striking like a knell on other lives that found their burden greater than could be borne. All nature smiled beneath a cloudless sky; the snow was rose-flushed on the slope, and shrubbery glistened as if powdered with diamond-dust; the harbor, where two schooners rode at anchor, was a deep blue. Stoneport did not keep the holiday especially, although it still adhered to the Puritan belief that New Year's day should be sanctified rather than Catholic Christmas. On the hill the young ladies appeared in pretty dresses of blue and pink, and there were cake and wine on the side-boards, should the young men call. The shops were open. At 10 o'clock a man passed along the main street, paused before Mrs. Bamber's show-window, shaded his eyes a moment, and walked on. Mrs. Bamber observed him with the habitual curiosity of the resident of a small place. He was an insignificant person in a gray coat with red whiskers and a round face. That was all. Pale and anxious after a sleepless night, she stood with her eyes fixed apprehensively on the clock. It could not be long before Hiram Driggs would do his worst. The shop-bell rang sharply.

"What do you ask for your pictures, ma'am?"

"Five thousand dollars," muttered Mrs. Bamber, abstractedly, still staring at the clock.

What was that? The insignificant stranger in the gray coat had reached for the pictures, and was unceremoniously striking off the splendid gilt frames with his stout cane.

"Mercy! Stop! What are you doing?" Mrs. Bamber ran nimbly to his side and arrested his hand.

"I don't want these frames," said the Granger, contemptuously. "You set your own price, and I will give you $5,000."

Mrs. Bamber sank down on a stool in speechless astonishment. How unreal everything had become—the snowy street, the shop, the man in a gray coat! Surely Nanny would soon tap on her bedroom door and tell her it was time to get up. Then, by a sudden and not unnatural transition of awakening, she became suspicious and vigilant. Her visitor wasted no superfluous words; his broad, ruddy face betrayed not a trace of emotion as he produced a crisp bit of paper, dipped a pen into Mrs. Bamber's ink, and began to write.

"If you are not cheating me, let me see the money," interposed Mrs. Bamber, sharply.

He wiped the pen, restored it to a silver sheath in his pocket, and took up the draft.

"Very good," was his sole comment, and he went out.

Mrs. Bamber laughed hysterically. Would he ever return? Perhaps he was a maniac. It seemed an hour before he returned and counted out a pile of broad, shining gold pieces that made a pleasant clinking music as they fell in a glittering heap—$5,000!

Still phlegmatic, and apparently unmoved, the purchaser folded the pictures beneath his ample coat and returned to the Stoneport Hotel, where he was the solitary guest. Once in his chamber his reserve melted; he beamed in broad smiles, and rubbed his hands with a subdued chuckle of triumph.

"Dirt cheap!" he said to himself, and fell to studying the dim canvas with the aspect of a connoisseur. He then wrote the following letter:

To the Right Honorable the Earl of H——:

MY LORD: I have the satisfaction of informing you that I have found the three pictures, after two years' search in the States. They were in the possession of an ignorant woman, keeping shop in an obscure town of the New England coast, who sold them to me for £1,000. The pictures are undoubtedly the missing originals of Raffaelle Sanzio, and will complete your Lordship's collection. I tracked the Italian, Luigi Carnole, to the haunts of his race in the city of New York, and was obliged to proceed with greater caution from the fact that he appears to have been actuated by revenge in the theft of the pictures. Your Lordship will be better able to determine than I am whether this revenge was a loyal attachment to the palace of his master, the Duke, and consequent rage at the dispersion of the works of art to foreign lands, or a more strictly personal motive. He made no effort here to sell the pictures as originals to dealers or private individuals, and after a quarrel with some of his countrymen he disappeared, in company with another Italian. Pursuit led me across the plains to the Pacific, where I found the second Italian, a wandering musician, only to learn that he had parted with Luigi Carnole six months before in the city of New Haven. In the latter place he had lived in poverty and bad health, and I was able to follow his steps to my present locality, where he died. I return to England by the next mail. I have the honor to subscribe myself,

Your Lordship's most humble and obedient servant, ALGERNON SMITH.

Mrs. Platt sat in her best parlor, her eyes swollen with weeping, and the curtains drawn to exclude the curious glances of Stoneport. She held fast the hands of her son and Charlotte Eaton, and trembled at the stroke of the clock. The young people gazed sadly at each other across the black figure of the mother, who was attired as if for a funeral. Would Hiram Driggs relent, and give them more time? Was it not probable that he would appear and claim all? The young man could only chafe at his own helplessness in the emergency and inability to protect his own.

The sound of flying feet made them all listen. Mrs. Bamber, breathless and without a bonnet, rushed into the parlor and cast a leather purse down in Mrs. Platt's lap.

"Oh, you needn't count it! I've done so a dozen times already. Here's $5,000, and the house is saved."

Between laughter and tears she explained her unexpected wealth, and restored it to the wife of her benefactor of years ago. Then a shadow crossed her face, just dimming its brightness for a moment. Much could have been done to advance the interests of Bamber's Drops, and place the remedy properly before an enlightened public, with the aid of this money. She plucked Charley's sleeve in the midst of the thanks which overpowered all coherent speech, and said, tremulously:

"You will not forget the Drops when you receive your diploma, will you, Charley?"

"Neither the Drops nor my debt," returned Charley, in an unsteady voice.

Then Mrs. Bamber, through a mist of tears, saw Charlotte Eaton rise, tall and proud, and take the purse from Mrs. Platt; for Hiram Driggs stood on the threshold.

Thus a very humble little woman placed her gift on the altar of the New Year.—Harper's Weekly.

Leather from Human Skin.

The experiments of two ingenious shoe makers are now exciting some attention among the curious, the result being the production of good leather from the skin of a human being, and the manufacture of a handsome pair of boots from it. The skin was taken from the heart, stomach, and back of a man in a dissecting room, who had died suddenly from accident, and upon whom decay had not yet begun to act. It was placed in a solution of hemlock and white oak barks, used in tanning, and in three weeks from the first steeping, appeared as the upper leather and legs of the boots in question, the soles being made of cow skin. The tanning created a light-brown color, and the leather proved somewhat warmer than calfskin, and more porous. It appears that after allowing for the necessary waste, the skin of an average-sized man will make two pairs of boots, including the soles, but the latter would not be sufficiently hard for economical use.—New York Sun.

New York Real Estate.

Speaking of the depression in New York real estate, a correspondent of the Boston Journal says: "There is scarcely a house in demand in Brooklyn over $1,000, and scarcely one in New York over $20,000, and it must be a $40,000 house at that. Vacant lots nobody will take. A single case will show this state of things. When the great boulevard was open in the upper part of New York, the ring was on hand for bargains. On the line of it Connolly built his magnificent dwelling at the public expense. Genet placed his more magnificent house, built on the same terms, near Connolly's. Tom Field, not to be behind, bought an elegant mansion on the boulevard with sixteen city lots. Nobody placed its value, when the great driveway was opened, at less than $125,000. One of our most prudent cash companies loaned on the estate $50,000. It was sold under a foreclosure, and the company had to buy it in. It is in the market at $40,000, with no takers."

Japan's Congratulations.

The Japanese Minister has presented to the President a letter addressed to him by the Mikado, of which the following is a translation:

To His Excellency the President of the United States, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant:

GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: Now that the great Exposition in honor of the 100th year of your Excellency's National Government has been eminently successful, I write to congratulate you and the people over whom you preside. From my subjects in the United States I have heard nothing except words of kindness in regard to the manner in which they have been treated; and I believe the recent intercourse between our countries will have a tendency to strengthen the friendship already existing. I would here express the sincere hope that the incoming century will not only witness the continued progress and prosperity of your nation in all branches of industry but also prove an era of peace. This will be handed to you in person by my Minister residing near your Government, who has been directed to emphasize my very friendly congratulations.

Chinese Justice.

Chinese justice is a curious travesty. A mandarin was committed for trial at the mixed court outside the walls of Shanghai for theft from a lodging-house. He was taken into the city, where the Hsien recognized him as the son of an old friend, whereupon he was acquitted. The mandarin then brought a charge against the accuser. The lodging-house keeper was thrown into jail, beaten for refusing to sign a paper declaring that he had made a false charge, beaten again for attempting to poison himself with opium, and threatened with another beating for declining to pay his enemy $40.

IT is a pitiful sight to see a heavy ulster overcoat try to go home with a weak young man in a rain-storm.

THE OLD YEAR.

BY VIOLET FULLER.

Now the gray Old Year is dying,
Sadly winter winds are sighing
Round him sad and low;
Fast his sands of life are falling,
Voices from the shadows calling,
"Old Year, thou must go!"

Old Year, there was cause for grieving
In the life which thou art leaving,
Cause for bitter tears—
Tears for many a promise broken,
Tears for words unkindly spoken
In beloved ears.

Friends have failed us, hopes have perished,
Precious hopes most fondly cherished,
All with thee have gone.
Though the past has thus bereft us,
May the future that is left us
For the past atone.

Oh, the years that have been wasted!
All earth's pleasures have been tasted—
Pleasures that beguile—
But with wild, unspoken longing
For the purer visions thronging
Round us all the while.

Friends, when time hath ceased forever,
And from soul the body sever,
In that awful day
Can we meet the dead years' faces,
Bearing of our lives the traces
Ne'er to pass away?

Carved as if in stone, revealing
Every hidden thought, concealing
Naught of good or ill—
Hear the Old Year gently pleading,
"Oh, my solemn teachings heeding,
Time is left ye still!"

For the gray Old Year is dying,
Sadly winter winds are sighing
Round his aged head;
Fast the sands of life are falling,
Voices from the shadows calling,
And the Year is dead!

Pith and Point.

ONE touch of nature makes the whole world grin.

"AN eel is not as slippery as a politician, but it can live on water longer."

A MAN accustomed to the Elysian fields of poetry, who slops over into politics, will find the change agreeable in proportion to his capacity for being flayed and sand-papered for the sake of promoting the circulation of his blood.

AFTER an Arctic lover has set up with his girl three or four hundred hours it is no uncommon thing for the young lady's papa to come floundering in from another snow-hut and ask the pleasure of the young man's company to breakfast.

"CHARLES," said a young wife to her husband, as they sat at the window watching the fashionables on their way to church, "when you die, and I got hold of the insurance money, I intend to have a fur cape and muff just like that lady has on over there."

A 6-YEAR OLD girl of Anoka, Minn., was overheard telling her playmate that she had attended a church sociable the evening before, and that a little boy kissed her while they were engaged in play, but she said, "That's no harm, 'cause it was our preacher's boy, you know."

"I'VE often seen men," said a veteran General, "who could stand a fire of shell or canister without showing any sign of uneasiness, but I never yet saw a man who could sit in a room where a bottle of soda was about to be opened without screwing up his eyes and looking nervous."

A LOCOMOTIVE engineer, who had been discharged for some cause, gave vent to his spite, eminently characteristic of American humor. He said it was about time he left the company, anyhow, for the sake of his life, for "there was nothing left of the old track but two streaks of rust and the right of way."

A LAWYER and a parson were talking about which way the wind was. The former said: "We go by the court-house vane." "And we," replied the parson, "go by the church vane." "Well," said the lawyer, "in the matter of wind that is the best authority!" And the parson went home to cogitate.

THE LOVERS.

To church the two together went,
Both doubtless on devotion bent;
The parson preached with fluent ease
On Pharisees and Sadducees;
And, as they homeward slowly walked,
The lovers on the sermon talked;
And he—he deeply loved the maid—
In soft and tender accents said:
"Darling, do you not think that we Are Pharisee and Sadducee?"
She flashed on him her bright black eyes,
In one swift look of vexed surprise,
And then he hastened to aver
He was her constant worshiper;
"But, Mary, I insist," said he,
"That you are very fair, I see;
I know you don't care much for me,
And that makes me sad, you see."

THE CLOSING YEAR.

The year is dying, dying;
And watching his bier, in sooth
'Tis as hard to believe in sun and flowers,
As for age to realize golden hours.
When hope, and joy, and trust arose,
As violets waken from winter snows,
Ah! at April's call they return once more,
But never for us on the farther shore
Dawns the morning of love and youth!

The Russian Siberian Expedition.

Capt. Vigans, the Englishman who last year opened a new passage through the Sea of Kara from St. Petersburg to the northern shores of Siberia, was intrusted at the commencement of the present year with a new expedition, organized by means of a subscription of Russian and Siberian merchants. It is now feared that the expedition has perished, as now news whatever has been received of it. Funds are being collected in Russia to send another party in search of Capt. Vigans and his companions, who possibly have fallen victims to their courageous attempt to discover a route to Northern Siberia through the frozen seas.

ARCTIC ADVENTURES.

Dr. Van der Horck's Journey to the Spitzbergen Seas—Travel Beyond the Polar Circle.

At a meeting of the Geographical Society in New York, on the evening of the 29th ult., Mr. Alexander Humboldt Van der Horck read a paper giving an account of a journey to the Spitzbergen seas as agent of several of the learned societies of Berlin. The following is an abstract of the lecture comprising a narrative of the principal events of the voyage:

"We left Hamburg by steamer early in the summer, following the Norwegian coast across the Arctic circle to Hammerfest, the most northerly town on the globe, where our ship, chartered for the purpose, awaited us. We had, however, procured en route our final supplies at Bergen, that neat little town, warmed by the Gulf stream whose fjord juts into the North sea. The wild and beautiful scenery of that jagged Norwegian coast, with its bold, rocky outline, impressed us deeply; but I will not detain you with a description, but take you at once on board ship, a tight, well-built schooner, fitted especially for Arctic service, with a Norwegian Captain (an experienced old sea-hunter), his mate, and eight stout seamen as crew, beside my assistant and photographer. We had all necessary instruments and equipments for our work, such as dredges, deep-sea thermometers with patent iron cylinders, hydrometers, microscopes and instruments for taking astronomical observations, etc. Keeping close to the coast we held our course toward North cape. Although the sun shone warmly, the black, rocky hillsides were covered with patches of snow. Toward midnight we came in sight of the high promontory, and dropped our anchor not a cable's length from North cape. The beautiful weather—the perfect calm of the sea, stretching away toward the north a limitless waste of water—the stern, majestic rock rising 1,000 feet perpendicularly out of the sea—the rays of the midnight sun (if we may so speak of a sun that did not set) falling in softened splendor directly upon the headland—the transparent purity of the atmosphere, all blended into a scene too beautiful to describe. The remarkable clearness of the atmosphere during these northern summers makes distance so deceptive that the far-off mountains seem to nestle closer, and one dare not trust to the eye in computing distances.

I will recall the clear, bright morning when the "lookout" first called "Ice-blink to the north'ard," and a scene of surpassing beauty lay before us as we drifted nearer. One great, unbroken field of ice, as far as the eye could reach, lay glancing and glittering under the morning sunbeams; here and there were high hummocks or ridges, irregularly piled upon the surface, where the ice-floes had been jammed together, all sparkling and reflecting the rays of a cloudless summer day. We sailed along the edge of the pack many days, sometimes shut in between the detached masses, but nowhere able to make a passage through the field.

Toward the beginning of August a change in the weather, heralded by cold, stormy winds, then heavy fogs, drove our schooner, under pressure of a heavy gale, to the southeast. When the weather cleared we sighted land, which (according to our reckoning) must have been in the vicinity of Cape Britwin on the southwest coast of Newaya Semlya. My plan was to enter the deeply indented bays that stretched into the interior, until we came to the mouth of the numerous small rivers. Here we unloaded, packed our goods in bundles, secured porters and started overland. Our porters were the so-called "Sjo Lapps," or "Sea Lapps," a set of broad-shouldered, low legged fellows, diminutive in stature, who are to be found along the shores of the lakes and streams in the summer fishing. We marched Indian file along the marshy banks of the rivers. The country abounded in game; the rivers teemed with salmon and trout, while water-fowl of every species were in great plenty. Sometimes the scenery was exceedingly charming. The streams of North Lapland are interspersed with waterfalls and rapids, one falling into the other, and thus rendering navigation at many places almost impossible. The entire region is undulating, but barren and desolate, covered with short, stunted grass, or fields of reindeer-moss, or interminable swamp, intersected with lakes, having the character of the Siberian Tundras. The deep valleys mark the water courses of the numerous creeks and rivers creeping between the hills. The soft, spongy ground yielded at every step, and made our march extremely tiresome, especially as the only change was to hard, rough and stony ground. Traversing the hills in this way through the day, we would usually return at nightfall to the river bank to make our encampments. Here the banks were dotted with little groups of stunted trees, such as the dwarf birch, etc.

Toward September I made preparations for returning overland, taking a route which has hitherto escaped description. My man was to proceed from Vadso to the Patts Jokki (holy river), thence across the Lake of Enata (the largest of the Lapland lakes) to the river Ivallo, which we were to ascend; then, crossing the mountains forming the water-shed, follow down the river Kitinin to the Gulf of Bothnia, thus passing through Norwegian, Russian, and Finnish Lapland. Everything being in readiness for departure, we left Vadso. Our outfit consisted of instruments, furs, and preserved fruits, meats, vegetables, with several cases of liquors and wines, as well as boxes of ammunition and guns—for the country through which we were to pass abounded in game. I had sent to the south with the ship all the material we had previously gathered. Leaving the island we crossed the bay and entered the mouth of the Patts Yokki. We had before us a broad, majestic stream, which is the outlet of Lake Enara, its length scarce fifty miles, but in that short distance it has a fall of 400 or 500 feet. In fact, it seems to be but a chain or succession of larger and smaller lakes, connected by waterfalls and rapids, there being no less than eight of the former, and twenty-seven of the latter. These present almost insurmountable difficulties for navigation, and sometimes portages of a mile or more in length would have to be made, in which we were compelled to drag our boats over felled trees, or clear a way through the brush. At other times we had to pole up the rapids, so that our progress was slow, and the men, discouraged by the hard work, were only prevented from deserting us by the promise of additional pay and presents if they would hold out to the end of the journey. Starting at early dawn, we journeyed through the day, making our meals at the portages, which were without number. Scarcely would we pass one waterfall before we would hear the roar of the second, and it seemed that we never should succeed in ascending the river. At night we selected a suitable camping-place, spreading our furs on the dry ground before a large fire. The nights were intensely cold, the thermometer falling below freezing point; in fact, this entire region is, according to the latest meteorological observation, the European center of cold. We had ample opportunities for seeing the wonderful play of the aurora borealis flashing brilliantly over the heavens.

On one occasion we had a curious adventure. While crossing a lacustrine part of the river called Kjoaime jaure, in the early part of the night we were suddenly surrounded by swarms of lemming (Myodes torquatus), an animal like the mountain rat. They swam round the boat and attempted to clamber into it, so that it was with the greatest difficulty we could keep the fierce little creatures from boarding us by beating about with the oars, at which they would set up sharp, shrill screams similar to those of the muskrat. After some time we succeeded in passing them. These little animals come unexpectedly down from the mountains—no one knowing exactly whence—and appear in millions, swarming over the whole country, eating up almost everything that comes in their way. Neither rivers nor lakes seem to deter them, both of which they swim with ease, usually keeping on their destructive path until reaching the open sea, which they vainly attempt to cross, never swerving from the direction once taken until they sink exhausted beneath the waves. Thus perish countless numbers. They commit great ravages, and are as dreaded in the north as the locusts are in Egypt. Years, however, elapse between their reappearance, or until they suddenly descend from their rocky retreats. The Lapps tell us that they rain from the sky, many of them stating that they have actually seen them fall.

Upon reaching the newly discovered gold mines of Kultala, we secured porters and immediately prepared for our journey over the mountains. As to the difficulties to be encountered, in contradiction of all that may have been said or written, there is scarcely more of danger to beset the mariner in these polar seas than is common to all who "plow the changeful deep. Nor should imaginary fears make us unreasonable, or difficulties weaken our purpose. The extreme healthiness of the Arctic regions is a fact well established, and it has been observed that persons suffering from pulmonary or bronchial affections were exempt from them while in those latitudes. Official statistics have shown that, of almost all seas visited by Government vessels, the polar waters have been the healthiest.

In Case of Fire.

The season is at hand when fires most prevail, and when the precautionary hints of the late Dr. Hall are most important to be heeded. They are as follows:

Keep doors and windows of the structure closed until the firemen come; put a wet cloth over the mouth, and get down on all fours in a smoky room; open the upper part of the window to get the smoke out; if in a theater, church, or school-room, keep cool; descend ladders with a regular step, to prevent the vibration.

If kerosene just purchased can be made to burn in an open saucer by igniting with a match, throw it away.

Put wire work or glass shades over gas-lights in show windows and in bedrooms with curtains; sprinkle sand instead of sawdust on floors of oil stores; keep shavings and kindling wood away from steam boilers, and greasy rags from lofts, cupboards, boxes, etc.; see that all stovepipes enter well the chimney, and that all lights and fires are out before retiring or leaving the place of business; keep matches in metal or earthen vessels, and out of the reach of children; and provide a piece of stout rope long enough to reach the ground in every chamber.

Neither admit any one, if the house be on fire, except police, firemen and known neighbors; nor swing lighted gas brackets against the wall; nor leave small children in a room where there are matches or an open fire; nor deposit ashes in a wooden box or on the floor; nor use a light in examining the gas meter.

Never leave clothes near the fire-place to dry; nor smoke or read in bed by candle or lamplight; nor put kindling wood to dry on the top of the stove; nor take a light into a closet; nor pour out liquor in an open light; nor keep burning or other inflammable fluids in rooms where there is a fire; nor allow smoking about barns or warehouses.—Scientific American.

The English Farmer.

As a reason why American farmers ought to be contented, the Agriculturist gives this account of the farmer in England: "He does not own his land, except in very rare instances, and is obliged not only to pay a yearly rental of $20 to $25 per acre, but to keep the hardly-worked land in good condition, is forced to employ a working capital of at least $50 an acre, to be expended in artificial fertilizers. He is prohibited by law from killing wild animals, such as rabbits, hares, foxes, partridges, and pigeons, while his cats and dogs are killed by his landlord's gamekeeper, lest they might injure the game. This game feeds on his crops, and he must submit to see his fields sometimes ravaged by them. He is obliged to raise such crops as the landlord considers best for the land. He is bound to all these requirements by an exacting lease, which makes him a species of serf to his landlord."

ENGLISH aristocracy is shocked at the career of Viscount Maidstone, now only 24 years old, and heir to several valuable titles, who, having gone through his property and into bankruptcy, has enlisted in a cavalry regiment.

THE BLACK HILLS.

Result of the Labors of the Sioux Commission.

The commission appointed some months ago to negotiate with the Sioux Indians for the relinquishment of the Black Hills reservation has concluded its labors and made its report to the Secretary of the Interior. The commission has more than succeeded in inducing the savages to comply with the terms of last session's Indian Appropriation bill, namely: That the Indians should relinquish all right and claim to any country outside of the boundaries of the permanent reservation established by treaty of 1868 for said Indians, and also so much of their reservation as lies west of the 103d meridian of longitude; also a convenient and accessible way over said reservation to the country thus ceded for wagon and other roads from points on the Missouri river, in all not more than three in number; that the Indians hereafter shall receive their supplies at such places on their reservation in the vicinity of the Missouri river as the President may designate, and also that no further appropriation for them for subsistence shall hereafter be made until some agreement shall have been entered into by them with the President which is calculated to enable them to become self-supporting. Accompanying the report is a treaty entered into by the Commissioners on behalf of the Government with the Indians. The principal provisions of the treaty are as follows: By the terms of this agreement the Sioux surrender all claim to any country lying outside the boundaries of their permanent reserve, as defined by the treaty of 1868, and so much of said reserve as lies west of the 103d meridian of longitude and as is included between the north and south forks of the Cheyenne river east of said meridian. The Government thereby secures full possession of a tract of country which includes the Black Hills and is defined by natural boundaries. The Indians grant a right of way over their reservation for three routes from the Missouri river to the ceded territory, the routes to be designated by the President. They also agree to receive all subsistence which may hereafter be furnished at such points on or near the Missouri river as the President may designate. In consideration of these concessions the Commissioners on behalf of the United States agree to furnish subsistence to the Sioux until such a time as they shall become self-supporting, the rations to be issued to heads of families, and in case the Indians are located on lands suitable for cultivation, farming machinery will be afforded by the Government, and educational facilities provided. The issue of rations is to be contingent on the performance of labor by the Indians and the attendance of their children at school. Assistance in the way of schools and instruction in agricultural and mechanical arts, as provided by the treaty of 1868, are guaranteed. The building of comfortable houses on allotments in severalty is provided for, and the Sioux are declared amenable to the laws of the United States. The Indians further agree to select allotments as soon as possible after their removal to their permanent home, and to use their best efforts to cultivate the same. It will be seen by this abstract that the Sioux have granted the Government so much of their permanent reservation set apart in 1868 and lying east of the 103d meridian as lies between the north and south forks of the Cheyenne river, which exceeds the requirements of the act creating the commission, and completes the title of the Government to the entire Black Hills country. The rights of way granted over the permanent reservation to the newly-ceded territory will afford transit through a country which has been, in recent years, the most unsafe to travelers of any in the West. The area ceded in the treaty is estimated at from 10,000 to 12,000 square miles.

Don't Get in a Panic.

"People shouldn't get in a panic. Now if those folks had only retained their presence of mind and gone quietly out of the theater, they'd all got out safe." This is Mr. Peter Prosy's lecture about the fire. He has delivered it 500 times to as many people since Tuesday morning. And last night, just as Mr. Prosy had got into bed, two bricks came tumbling down his chimney into the grate, scattering a few live coals about and setting the carpet on fire. Then Mr. Prosy got out of bed, picked up a coal with his fingers, got burnt, stepped on another, put on one boot, ran up stairs, hollered fire, ran down again, got partly into his drawers, ran out of the house, tried to find the crank to a post-office box for the fire alarm, ran back to his house and met Mrs. Prosy, who had easily extinguished the flames with water from the pitcher. And she grabbed him by his night-shirt and yanked him on the bed and said, "You old fool! Keep quiet, or I'll choke you!" And when she took her forefinger off Peter's thorax the first thing Peter commenced saying was, "People now shouldn't get in a panic, you know!"—New York Graphic.

MR. ELLIS, a lithographer, of Liverpool, was murderously attacked on Nov. 23 by a lunatic in a railway train, on its way from Liverpool to Chester. After making furious attempts to cut his throat with a sharp knife, the madman bit him so terribly that the thumb of his left hand had subsequently to be amputated. An alarm having been given, the train was brought to a stand-still, but not before the assailant had leaped through the carriage window and been held by the heels by Mr. Ellis until that gentleman fainted from loss of blood.

MERCHANT'S GARGLING OIL.—This very useful article is now receiving the very highest commendations from the press, and multitudes of witnesses who have tested its efficacy. It is considered as one of the very best remedies, and in its refined, purified state it is regarded as one of the most powerful liniments for the removal of rheumatism, neuralgia, and the sufferings arising from sprained joints, bruises, etc.—Aylmer (C. W.) Times, Feb. 25, 1857.

THIS WORLD appears very beautiful when you are well. To remain well, healthy and strong, take Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, the greatest tonic in the world. It strengthens the body and purifies the blood. Dr. J. H. McLean's office, 314 Chestnut, St. Louis, Mo.

THE Boston Daily Advertiser mentions "an organ specially constructed by the Mason & Hamlin Organ Company for the celebrated Dr. Franz Liszt is now on exhibition at their warerooms. The instrument is to be used in the Liszt concerts in Europe. It is constructed in many respects on an entirely new principle, and is in all respects a truly wonderful instrument. Its quality of tone and power are simply surprising." It is certainly a great compliment to these American makers that the great European musicians send for their organs.

AT our request, Cragin & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of 15 cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbin's Electric soap. Try it. Send at once.

A Universal Remedy.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" for Coughs, Colds and Bronchial Affections stand first in public favor and confidence; this result has been acquired by a test of many years.

THERE can be no mistake about it, "Matchless" plug tobacco takes the lead. Old fine-cut chewers say it gives better satisfaction and is cheaper than fine cut. You cannot be imposed upon, as each plug has the words, "Matchless P. T. Co." on a wooden tag. Try it once and you will always chew it. Manufactured by the Pioneer Tobacco Company, New York.

SINCE our last issue we have heard of several persons who have used Durang's Rheumatic Remedy for rheumatism; and all pronounce it a success. It comes to our market highly recommended; and, as it is the only reliable remedy now in use, it will have a large sale. It is taken internally. Price, $1.00; six bottles, $5 00.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ring-worm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

"HEALTH Corsets, and why not? Hasn't there been evil enough yet from the old style of corset?" Dr. Warner's Health Corset is approved by all physicians. Price by mail $1 75. Warner Bros., 763 Broadway, N. Y.

IF your horse is lame, sore or galled, you should use Johnson's Anodyne Liniment; wash the part with castile soap and warm water, rub dry with a clean cloth, then apply the Liniment; rub in well with the hand.

EVERYTHING about Sanford's Radical Cure for catarrh invites confidence. It is the prescription of one of our ablest physicians, and is prepared by one of the largest and most reliable drug houses in the United States.

HAVE the readers of this paper ever used any of Parsons' Purgative Pills? If not, why not? They are the best family physic, besides being the greatest anti-bilious remedy there is in this country.

PENSIONS!
ARE PAID TO EVERY SOLDIER who was disabled while in the service of the United States, by reason of wounds, accidental injuries, hernia, or rupture (no matter how slight), loss of eye-sight, diseases of the lungs or heart, rheumatism, loss of hearing, varicose veins of the legs, piles, falling back of measles, or chronic diarrhœa. Even the loss of a finger or toe, in any way, by accident or otherwise, or any other injury or disease, entitles a soldier to a pension. Pensions and bounties procured where discharge papers are lost. New discharges obtained when lost. FULL BOUNTIES PAID TO ALL SOLDIERS who were discharged by reason of wounds, rupture, or accidental injuries, under new laws. PENSIONS INCREASED. It is from 10 to 15 years since many received their wounds, or the disease for which they were pensioned, in some manner the disability has increased from what it was at first. Previous to March 3, 1873, invalid pensioners could not draw more than $8 per month, no matter how badly disabled. Now $18 may be divided between $3 and $18, for invalid pensioners after the $8, the pension is raised to $10, $12, $14, $16 and $18. Where the pensioner can't labor, $24. Under the old law $3 was given for finger or thumb, now it is $4 to $5 per month. So apply at once and get an increase. No charge for advice, and no pay until claims are paid. Thousands are yet entitled to pensions and bounty, and don't know it. CIRCULARS FREE, "SOLDIERS' REVIEW," an eight page paper on pensions and bounties for 75 cents per year. Specimen copy FREE; send address on "postal." Send 25 cents and get a book with all pension, bounty and land laws. It shows what every soldier and his heirs are entitled to; it contains all acts of Congress for 15 years past, including last Congress. Address (with stamp), F. M. CLARK, 316 LOCUST ST., ST. LOUIS, MO

WOOD'S IMPROVED
HAIR RESTORATIVE
What It Does!
It restores, quickly, Gray Hair to its glossy Natural color. It has the effect of Restoring the Hair to prematurely Bald Heads. It Removes Dandruff, Humors and all Eruptions from the Scalp. It prevents Irritation, Itching and Scaly Skin. It Restores Dryness of the faded, dry, harsh and falling Hair. It renews, dresses, softens and gives vigor to the growth of the Hair. It accomplishes more desired effects in a short time than any Restorative ever made, always leaving the hair soft, lively and glossy, whether used as a Dressing upon the natural hair or upon the hair in an unhealthy condition; thus rendering it, for the Old and Young, an article of unequaled excellence. No preparation offered to the public produces such wonderful results. Try it! Try it!! Call for "Wood's Improved;" as it contains no injurious qualities.
HAIR
It was originally introduced 20 years ago by Prof. O. J. Wood, but the recent change of ing edients in this article is making a demand for it in all parts of the United States, Canadas and foreign countries.

ANNOUNCEMENT
TO CONSUMERS!
The great radical improvement introduced in this article has induced us to take the agency and advertise its virtues to the world. Its effects as a Restorative are what has been long sought for and wanted for many years, being more decided and satisfactory than has ever before been attained. No Druggist in the world knows the compound, and cannot make it; therefore when you call for "Wood's Improved," do not let any unprincipled dealer convince you that he has a Restorative or Renewer as good, or something similar, as there is none like it! Insist upon having "Wood's Improved," and take no other, for your money! It will not be long before all dealers everywhere will have it. If you should fail to find it, you can send $1 to us by mail for a bottle, or $5 for six bottles, and we will send it to you, prepaid, to any Express Station desired.

Auburn Courier.

W. G. THOMAN, EDITOR

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 4, 1877.

Political Notice.

The Democratic County Central Committee will meet in Auburn, on Saturday, January 6th, for the purpose of consulting on the present political crisis and to appoint delegates to the State Convention, to be held at Indianapolis, January 8th. A full attendance is requested on the part of all who are in favor of honest government and fair elections, as opposed to radical fraud and corruption.

J R. LANNING,
Auburn, Jan. 2. 1877. Chairman.

The centennial opened beautifully, and for six months the nations of the world joined in the general joy that was awakened by the hundred years of life vouchsafed the republic. The year is now ended, and what is the outlook? A great conspiracy to cheat the people of their rights—a President to be counted in by fraud—civil discord threatened in every state in the Union! These are some of the fruits of our centennial harvest!

A MOST dreadful accident occurred on the Lake shore railroad on last Friday evening entailing a greater loss of life, than has ever marked any similar casuality in this country. During a fierce snow storm the eastward bound passenger train, drawn by two locomotives, went through a high iron bridge spanning Ashtabula creek, just beyond Ashtabula, Ohio, killing and wounding over one hundred passengers. The scene at the wreck beggared description We will give the full particulars next week.

That Mr. Hayes is in an awkward position there is not the slightest doubt If he is an honest man he cannot help feeling that there is at least great doubt of his having been fairly chosen President, and if he is a just one he must instinctively revolt againt accepting the result of the infamy of the great conspirators. Then, on the other hand, a tempting prize is held out to him, and that is something which even a Hayes does not like to "go back" on. It is altogether useless, however, to treat Mr. Hayes' case from a moral point of view. With him it is clear that might is right, and no matter how tainted the presidential office may be with fraud he will accept it cheerfully and reward with smiles and confidence the men who pushed him up the ladder.

The announcment of Mr. Tilden's election administered an impetus to trade which was felt immediatly in all branches of buisness, but upon the development of the radical conspiracy the business interests of the country were struck with a paralysis. The leading commercial journals are raising a warning voice that unless a speedy settlement of the presidential question is found failure and panic will be the result. The business men of New York feel their danger and are moving in the matter. A meeting of leading business men was held lately at the residence of Wm. E Dodge, at which the business aspects of the presidential situation were discussed, and a movement for the holding of a large meeting of business men was set on foot.

THE TWO SIDES IN LOUISIANA.

Both parties in Louisnana have submitted their briefs to the Senate committee, and the public can now judge between them. What is the Republican case? They charge their opponents with producing a reign of terror in the State, by whippings, assassinations, murders, massacres, threats, mutilations, beatings, &c., so that more than twenty thousand Republican voters were prevented from voting the Republican ticket, and most of them from voting at all. The inquiry at once arises, why is it that we first hear of this reign of blood after the election? If Republican voters were being beaten and murdered by the thousand, why did not Governor Kellogg interfere to protect them? He has the power to appoint an unlimited number of subordinates to guard his voters, and the so-called laws of Louisiana give him authority really despotic. Why did he not use it, if he knew that violence was being employed to rob his party of its control of the State? Why did he not call for troops? Mr. Governor Kellogg, if these stories were true, or a tithe of them were true, you would have made the North resound with your cries for help, for troops, for correspondents to expose the iniquity! This very silence proves that you and your party are engaged in a monumental scheme of lying. Whatever lawlessness there was you allowed to exist in order that you might charge afterwards, if necessary, that it was political in its nature.

The Democratic case contains little that is new The people know all the charges they have to bring because at the time of the acts of which they complain were committed they protested. The arrest of thousands of prominent citizens just before the election, the issue of thousands of fraudulent registrations papers, the preparations for falsifying the vote—these are all familiar to Northern readers, because, at the time they happened, the Democrats called the attention of the whole people to them as outrages upon populer rights. The Democratic statement is straightforward and bears the impress of truth. The Republican is a mass of concocted lies after the event.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE WHOLE WORLD.

Holloway's Pills.

"I had no appetite; Holloway's Pill gave me a hearty one."

"Your pills are marvelous."

"I send for another box, and keep them in the House."

"Dr. Holloway has cured my headache that was chronic."

"I gave one of your pills to my babe for cholera morbus. The dear little being got well in a day."

"My nausea of a morning is now cured."

"Your box of Holloway's Ointment cured me of noises in the head. I rubbed some of your Ointment behind the ear, and the noise has left."

"Send me two boxes; I want one for a poor family."

"I enclose a dollar, your price is 25 cents, but the medicine to me is worth a dollar."

"Send me five boxes of your pills."

"Let me have three boxes of your pills by return mail, for chills and fever."

I have over 200 such testimonials as these, but want of space compells me to conclude.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDER,

And all eruptions of the skin, this ointment is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Invariably cures the following diseases:

DISORDER OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel or with aches and pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

For Stomachs out of Order, no medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these pills; they remove all acidity occasioned by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasm—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and stomach.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the best known in the world for the following diseases: Ague, Asthma Billious Complaints, Blotches on the Skin, Bowels, Consumption, Debility, Dropsy, Dysentery, Erysipelas, Female Irregularities, Fevers of all kinds, Fits, Gout, Headache, Indigestion, Inflammation, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Lumbago, Piles, Rheumatism, Retention, Stone and Gravel, Tic-Douloureaux, Tumors, Ulcers, Worms of all kinds, Weakness from any cause, &c.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

None are genuine unless the signature of J. Haydock, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills, and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be suspicious.

Sold at the manufacture of Prof. Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable druggists and dealers in medicines throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

Office, 112 Liberty street, New York.

"Unquestionably the best sustained work of the kind in the World."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

ILLUSTRATED.

Notices of the Press.

The Magazine has attained in its one quarter century and more of existence to that point where it may be said of it, in the words of Dr. Johnson, "It is vain to blame and useless to praise." The lustre of its long-ago attained reputation has increased as the years have passed, and its future seems as bright if not brighter than at any time since the golden hue of prosperity settled around its later and better years.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Harper's Monthly is marked by the same characteristics which gave it circulation from the first with the better class of readers. It combines reading matter with illustations in a way to make clear and vivid the facts presented. Pictures merely designed to catch the eye of the ignorant are never inserted.—Chicago Journal.

Housewives complain of played out cisterns.

There will be no services by the Presbyterians next Sunday.

With this number begins the seventh year of the Courier's career.

The prospect of starting a literary society in Auburn has fallen through.

Advertise and you will not be complaining of dull times in a week or two.

There was a watch meeting on New Years eve at the German Methodist church.

Let some enterprising philanthropist now see that we have a series of good lectures.

The streets were filled with teams on New Years day and everything passed of quietly.

Now is the time to resolve yourself into a committee of one and pass good resolutions.

Mrs. P. Brandon and Miss Mary Moore were baptised by immersion in Cedar Creek on Sunday last.

The First National Bank transacted no business on Monday, the time being devoted to balancing its books.

The schools were in session as usual during holiday week with the exception of a days vacation on Christmas.

Mrs. L. H. Jackman, returned from a four weeks visit to her old home in Ohio, last week.

There are but two colored men now residing Auburn, being those employed at Hollister & Benedicts restaurant.

The auction bells have been inaugurating a minature pandemonium in front of the Odd Fellows Hall for a week past.

The Presbyterians united in church services with the Methodists on Sunday evening, filling the house to repletion.

Miss Lora Walter, an accomplished young lady from Bucyrus, Ohio, is here spending the holid ys among her friends and relatives.

There were over thirty-five guests at Hollister & Benedicts on Tuesday last, and this is only a sample of the attendance dur ng court weeks.

Mr. Jas V. Hazzard, Cashier of the First National Bank, and his accomplished wife, returned form their holiday trip to Southern Indiana last wee.

Mr. James Gilliland, after a short engagement elsewhere, has returned to Zachers, at the old headquarters, where he can be found during the coming year.

John G. Davis, of Jackson township, died on Wednesday. He was one of the old settlers, and was greatly respected. His funeral takes place to-day, under masonic auspices.

Prevention is better than cure. Check a Cough or a cold at once, which may lead to consumption, by using Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, an old, reliable remedy which never fails. Price 25 cents. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Mr. William McIntosh, an old time resident of Auburn, who has been engaged in literary labors in the east for nearly a year past, is expected home soon.

L. M. Kramer will give an exhibition of dissolving views, in Auburn, on Wednesday and Thursday of next week, for the benefit of the Catholic church. For particulars see small bills.

We can safely assert that Dr. Marshall's Lung syrup is the best remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis and all pulmonary complaints. Call on your druggist and try a bottle. The price is only 25 cents. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

The printing of the county delinquent tax list, has been let to Mr. Baxter, of the Waterloo Press, at ten cents a description. This is much below the legal rates and the tax-payers will get the benefit of it.

The columns of the Courier have been somewhat crowded with advertising during the last few weeks, but in future we intend to give our readers a much fuller report of local and general news than ever.

Dr. Kelley, of Syracuse, Ind., gave the Courier a call on Tuesday. The Dr. was in attendance at the wedding of the daughter of S. J. Locke, of Waterloo, on Monday evening, and stopped at this place while on his way home.

C. P. Houser has just received a splendid assortment of walnut brackets, ornaments and picture frames. If you have any pictures, portraits or engravings you wish to have framed, bring them on.
C. P. Houser.

The county clerk put a corps of carpenters at work in his office on New Years day, for the purpose of placing a counter between his desk and the area set apart for those having business with the office. The improvement a good one.

T. C. Mays made a flying visit here on Christmas, and returned to the East on Thursday last, stopping first for a few days in Eastern Ohio. We expect to publish one of his piquant and readable Washington letters as usual next week.

F. D. Ryan, at his old established boot and shoe store, west of the Court House, keeps a good substantial stock of goods, and sells for a fair living profit and no more. He sells such goods only as he can recommend to customers and at as low a figure as any other dealer either here or elsewhere.

Notice.

All persons knowing themselves indebted to the undersigned will pleas all and settle on or before the 15th e January next. I wish to settle up my books at the end of each year.
Dr. J. J. Littlefield.
Dec. 14-4t.

Messrs. Cuppy and Ralston, on last Saturday shelled 2000 bushels of corn in the ear, for shipment east. The firm within the last two weeks has purchased over 3000 bushels of corn of the farmers living in this county. Many at first held back for higher prices, but finding that there was no advance, they have been bringing in the grain briskly.

The Pe ople ant Proof.

There is no medicine prescribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe Coughs, Colds settled on the Breast, Consumption, or any disease of the Throat and Lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case, Try it. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

A Chance for a Sleigh-Ride.

The Presbyterian Social will be entertained by Mrs. Geo. Patterson, next Wednesday afternoon and evening. Come one, come all, and have a fine sleigh ride, as well as to enjoy the social, "the more the merrier." Supper at four o'clock. Mrs R. Elson, Sec.

The dedication of the Presbyterian church will take place on Sunday, the 14th. The dedication sermon will be preached by the Rev. J. D. McCord of Allegan, Mich, and a leading divine of that State.

The following is a list of officers elected last week, to preside over the Auburn Lodge, No. 116, I. O. O. F., for the ensuing six months: Noble Grand, Robert McDougal; Vice Grand, D. Kahn, Secretary, S. T. Golloway; Treasurer, J. L. Davis; Trustees, F. E. Davenport, T. B. Totter, A. Robbins.

C. Klotz enters the new year with a splendid stock of ready-made clothing and gentleman's furnishing goods, which he offers to his patrons at the lowest prices, and warrants as to quality. In his custom-made clothing, he still maintains the high standard for excellence which has always characterized this old established house.

Mr. G. W. Weamer, late of Wheaton, Illinois, has purchased a half interest in the DeKalb County Republican. The name of new firm will be R. H. & G. W. Weamer. The new member of the firm is a nephew of R. H. Weamer, and has considerable experience in the newspaper business. We welcome him as a member of the DeKalb county press, and hope his stay among us will be pleasant and profitable.

☞ Ladies' Cloth and Fur Trimmed Cloaks.
☞ Cashmere in all shades
☞ New fall style Prints
☞ A full line Dress Finish Plain Prints
☞ Readymade Comforts from $2 to $3 00
☞ A new line of Alpaccas and all and winter dress goods
J. R. LANNING.

Harry Stamets is still offering the finest stock of furs and hats ever brought, to this county, at lower figurers than ever. We call the special attention of the lady readers of the Courier to the fact that they can procure at his place the finest styles of goods at lower prices than they can be bought at in Ft. Wayne or any of the larger cities. Besides the specialities mentioned, which are being offered at cost, to close out, he keeps his fine stock of goods up the old standard, so that you will be sure find everything you want on his shelves.

Messrs. Altenburg & Lockwood are engaged in getting up a complete abstract of titles to all farm lands and town property in DeKalb county, back to the times of original entry from the government. The firm have also an alphabetical index, showing the number of acres owned by each land owner in the county as well as all judgments or other liens against the same. The firm has purchased Rose & Hartman's abstracts and devoted a year's labor besides in completing and perfecting the same.

The following named gentlemen elected as officers of the Auburn Lodge of Knights of Pythias, were installed last night. Chancellor Commander, J. A. Wherrett; Vice-Chancellor, D. E. Carruth; Prelate, D. S. Littlefield; Master of Exchequer, R. H. Weamer; Keeper of Records and Seals, and Master of Finance, J. J. Martin; Representative to Grand Lodge, D. Kahn. The Lodge has been organized less than a year. At the outset it had a membership of but ten; it has now twenty five members, including many of our most meritorious young citizens, and is in a flourishing financial condition.

A sleighing party from Auburn, consisting of Mr. George Kent and wife, Mr. Nicholas Ensley and wife, Mr. Thompson Scott and wife, Mr. Hiram Weaver and wife, Mr. Ed, Correll, of Canton, Ohio, and Miss Saddie Grogg, and others took an excursion to Waterloo last week. They were royally entertained at the residence of Mr. Frank Francis His generous hospitality, and the entertainment so lavishly provided by his amiable wife and accomplished daughter, Miss Josie, will long be remembered by the recipients. If there should ever be a call for volunteers for another trip like that, you may count in the members of that party unanimously.

Didn't Consist.

We met one of our Auburn nimrods near the postoffice on Friday, and were informed that he had just returned from a hunting trip. In reply to our query, 'what luck,' he answered:

'Fair, fair; only bagged two turkies ten rabbits, and about half a bushel of quails.'

The same evening we met him carrying home six pounds bologna sausage, three sirloin roasts, a dressed turkey and enough extras to start a small butcher shop of his own. His purchases and stories of wholesale slaughter of game did not consist, and hereafter if they wish the Courier to believe in hunting stories, the same must be accompanied by affidavits.

Miss Cowan's Reading.

There was a fine audience at the new Presbyterian church on Tuesday evening, to listen to Miss Irena Cowan's readings. The young lady is a daughter of Washington Cowan, Esq., of Garrett, and in the rendition of the programme evinced unusual talent. She has a fine voice and expressive features Evidently Mis Cowan has subjected herself to careful training, in order to gain her wonderful command over herself before an audience. Competent judges who listened to her, say that in many particulars she showed herself the superior of Murdoch as an elocutionist. There were two large sleigh loads of Garrett folks present among the audience.

The Albion Amateurs.

The Adelphians, of Albion, were favored with a fair audience on Saturday evening at Ensley's Hall. The house was nearly two thirds full, which, considering the dull times, was much better than anyone expected. With the exception that several among the audience indulged in rude and profane language during the early part of the evening, nothing occurred to mar the pleasure of the entertainment. The programme consisted of the play of "The Seven Clerks," and two farces, "Not a bit Jealous," and "The Ghost in a Pawn Shop," which were given in the order named. Several of the actors were visibly afflicted with stage fright so much so as to seriously embarrass them in their parts. The best characters were those sustained by Miss Mary Kuhn and little Mary Saltzgaber. The former represented the part of Victorine, very creditably indeed, and her elocution was much superior to that of most of the gentlemen in the cast. Miss Saltzgaber, in her character song and dances, was the success of the evening. Miss Frances Tousley, daughter of Judge Tousley, and Miss Adelia Clapp, also made a very favorable impression

The County Commissioners.

The county commissioners adjourned Tuesday evening of this week, they will meet again in extra session January 15th, in order to pass on the Thompson-Lockwood ditch case.

The petition for a road in Wilmington township, presented by James H. Maxwell, and others, was taken under consideration. After hearing evidence on both sides and consumming two days over the case, the petition was refused, it was hotly contested by both the litigants. The expenses were greater than the entire amount represented by the land involved.

There has been more important business transacted at the session just closed than at any previous session of the commissioners. There were established over 24 miles of ditches, and the final reports on other ditches were accepted, in the consruction of which many thousand dollars were expended. In one ditch, that in Franklin, Smith field and Wilmington townships, the estimated cost is over $4,000, and the estimated benefits over $9,000, while in many of the other cases the cost and benefits are also unusually heavy.

We will publish the allowances made during the term in our next issue.

Civil Circuit Court

The Grand Jury adjourned on the seventh day of the session. We have already given the indictments returned. The foreman, Benjamin F. Blair, in behalf of the members, reported that they had examined the county jail in a body, and found the same well kept and in good condition as pertaining to health and convenience of persons who are or may be confined therein, except as to the supply of water; that was found to be entirely inadequate. The Grand Jury therefore recommended greater facilities for obtaining and keeping on hand a supply of the same. Otherwise the jail was in good repair and trustworthy. There being no further business before them they were discharged.

Isaac E. Knisely acted as Judge of the Court on December 26th, having been chosen by the parties in the suit of the Toledo Agricultural Works vs. Wesley J. Work, at the September term.

The case of the State vs. Henry H. Houser, charged with embezzlement, was continued until next term. Houser, it will be remembered, was charged with embezzling the funds belonging to Butler township, while acting as township trustee.

In the case of the State vs. Joseph Ulm, indicted for getting goods under false pretenses, from E. D. Bryant, of Garrett. The indictment was quashed. The indictment read that the goods were obtained of Edwin D. Bryant, whereas his real name was Edward. The defendent was accordingly discharged.

State vs. Samual Edge, selling liquor in violation of the law, nollie prosequi, the court holding that the indictment was bad. A similar disposition was made in the case of the State vs. Arthur Dewitt, charged with the same offense, and the defendants were discharged.

State vs. J. Stough, assault and battery. Fined one dollar and costs.

State vs. John Whittington, same offense, and acquitted on the plea of former conviction.

State vs. Whitfield. The defendant was indicted on a charge of burglarizing a drug store at Waterloo some weeks ago. The offense was really a malicious trespass, and it being impossible to convict for burglary, the defendant, who is a negro, was discharged

The trial of David Sharley, indicted for forging a note for $200, and selling the same to the DeKalb bank, of Waterloo, was tried on Tuesday. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and fixed the punishment at a $25 fine, and four years in the State Prison.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

WATERLOO.

—The Central House has a new landlord in person of Ed. Long.

BUTLER.

—The livery men wear smiling faces and wish that sleighing lasted all the year.

—Dr. W. H. Madden, our representative in the Legislature, left for Indianapolis on Tuesday.

—J. B. Boyle has laid aside his law books for a few months, and is teaching school in Smithfield township.

—Sleighing excursions have been the order for several weeks past. On New Years night a large party left to attend a ball at Edgerton, and another went to Waterloo.

—A spirited revival is going on in the United Brethern church, at Mt. Pleasant, south-west of Auburn. The attendance is quite large.

—Isaac Ochs, Esq., who has been ill for some time past with billious pneumonia, is again out on the streets. He was attended during his sickness by Dr. Madden.

—No live stock was shipped from here on New Years day, and none but perishable freight was forwarded, in order that all the railroad employes possible might have a holiday.

—A young man named Heist, from Michigan, has been prospecting here with the intention of repeating the oft tried experiment of running a newspaper. It is said that he has already rented a room for the purpose.

—While W. L. Blair was driving near the Lake Shore track last week, his horse took a sudden fright and threw him violently out of his cutter. One of his legs was severely bruised by being caught between the overturned cutter and the frozen ground. He was confined to his bed for several days, but is now able to go out with the aid of a cane and crutch.

—Mr. Fred. W. Hunter, late of Bryan Ohio, where he was connected with Sinks Hotel, has taken charge of the Waverly House, and is running a first-class hotel there. Mr. Hunter is well known to the traveling public, and will make all his old friends and the public generally, welcome whenever they come to his hospitable hostelry. Good sample rooms on the first floor.

THE JUNCTION.

—Business is on the increase.

—James Smith has been on the sick list for the past week, but is much better and is around again.

—Mr. Flickinger, from Whitley county this state, is visting friends and relations at this place. He is the guest of Mr. Martin, the father of Mrs. M.

—A watch meeting was held at John Rudalphs, by the German Lutherans. They watched the old year out and the new one in with all the salomnity of the occasion.

—There is a prospect for starting a singing school at the school house, under the instructions of Prof. Reed, of Waterloo. Let us lend our aid in this matter, for it is something we are in great need of.

—Mr. Barnes, of Waterloo, passed through our place one day last week on his way to Spencerville, to hold a three days institute. He visited our school while here, and seemed well pleased with our choice of a teacher and the way our school was conducted.
Don Pedro.

—We regret to learn that the wife of W. B. Adams is dangerously ill.

—For sale or trade, a first class Chickering piano forte. Address.
"Chickering," Corunna, Ind.

—Rall Peters, the night operator, carries the gold medal as the champion domino player of Corunna.

—Dave Dunfer has sold out to L. J. Miller, and we understand proposes emigrating to California next summer.

—Uncle Geo. McMillin is putting up the largest amount of ice in the county, preparatory to the summer campaign.

—It is rumored that the "benedicts" propose getting up a dance or sleigh ride soon; then look out for "fun."

—The appalling accident on the Lake Shore, on last Friday, near Asthabulia, Ohio, has been the principal topic of interest for the past week.

—Jimmy Carney, the village barber, has fitted up a tonsorial saloon in the room formally occupied by Uncle Geo. Mac.

—There is a certain man about town who is desirous to sit upon some Democrats "dead" body. That man perhaps reads the New York Ledger.

—Your correspondent was called upon the other day by a narrow headed young man, who desired to know whether Hayes would be inaugurated. We reply, "Not much Mary-Ann."

—The holidays passed over with the usual grist of merrymaking, and we presume your numerous readers have made many good resolves, that are to be regarded of solemn pledges for the new year.

—It would seem from appearance tha the most energetic business man in the village is our friend S. J. Miller. On Friday, Saturday and Monday last he unloaded on an average 40 loads of grain a day.

—Ike Reed, one of our subscribers, has sold the span of 'crack' ponies that bounced over a sawlog with himself and your correspondent, while turning a short corner "on the road to Brighton."

—A man from Ft. Wayne, visiting Henry Kreuger residing two miles west of town, fell dead on Monday last week. Deceased, whose name we did not learn, was about sixty years of age.

ASTRONOMICAL—1877.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

The following are the principal astronomical phenomena of the year 1877. The times given are Chicago mean-time; and the appearance is that presented to an observer in this city, unless otherwise stated:

SUNDAYS.

Jan. 7, 14, 21, 28.
Feb. 4, 11, 18, 25.
Mar. 4, 11, 18, 25.

November	5	2	57½ a. m.	20	4	29 p. m.
December	4	4	13¾ p. m.	20	6	1 a. m.

The * indicates an eclipse.

The apparent motions of the moon will be more irregular in 1877 than usual. The north node is now near the vernal equinox; so that she will swing back and forth through about fifty-six degrees of declination each lunar month. For this reason the moon will "tip" much more than the average; and people who are prone to prognosticate the weather from the position of the "horns" will have extraordinary opportunities for doing so in the spring and autumn.

THE SEASONS.

Earth in perihelion	Dec.	31	0h	—m p. m.
Vernal equinox	Mar.	20	6h	22m a. m.
Summer solstice	June	21	2h	28m a. m.
Earth in aphelion	July	3	8h	—m p. m.
Autumnal equinox	Sept.	22	4h	58m p. m.
Winter solstice	Dec.	21	11h	—m a. m.
Earth in perihelion	Dec.	31	6h	—m a. m.

ECLIPSES.

The year is a very barren one in regard to eclipses in this region. There will be five, as follows:

A total eclipse of the moon, Feb. 27, at 1 h. 19 m. p. m.; below the horizon of the United States.

A partial eclipse of the sun, March 14, at 10 h. 17 m. p. m.; visible in Western Asia.

A partial eclipse of the sun, Aug. 8, at 10 h. 42 m. p. m.; visible in Alaska, Kamtschatka, the North Pacific ocean, and the Arctic ocean. Behring's strait is nearly in the center of the area from which this eclipse can be seen.

A total eclipse of the moon, Aug. 23, at 5 h. 16 m. p. m.; partially visible in the Eastern and Southern States.

A partial eclipse of the sun, Sept. 7, at 8 h. 4 m. a. m.; visible to all that part of South America situated in more than 15 deg. of south latitude, and extending nearly to the south pole.

The times given above are the instants of conjunction or opposition in right ascension.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

BERTHA VON HILLERN, of Chicago, has succeeded in walking 350 miles in six days, at Boston, Mass., her last and greatest undertaking. This effort has attracted the attention of many scientific persons and leading physicians there, and her success is regarded as a surprising demonstration of the possibilities of woman's endurance.

THE WEST.

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY friendly Indian scouts have just joined Gen. Crook's command.... California has been suffering from a protracted drought, and the first rain for a long time has just fallen on the southern part of the State.

THE Chicago Tribune of Dec. 22 says: "The most remarkable meteor observed in recent years passed over Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, and Indiana last night at 8:30, going northeastward. At Bloomington the aerolite presented a disk three times the apparent size of the full moon. At all places reported from, the roar caused by the passage of this great mass of matter through the dense atmosphere of the earth was alarmingly audible, and the tremendous friction to which the surface-parts were subjected caused continuous superficial disintegration, with accompanying explosions, filling the air with multifarious points of light tinged with every hue, and presenting a very beautiful phenomenon. At Mendota and Garrett, in Illinois, the inhabitants were mystified by a sudden illumination of the atmosphere, accompanied, in the latter place, by a detonation louder and sharper than an ordinary cannon."

CAPT. J. W. HALL, of Detroit, who has just prepared the marine statistics of 1876, places the number of lake disasters at 639; valuation of the property lost $1,173,260; the losses of timber rafts on the lakes amount to about $101,000. The greatest losses during any month were in September, amounting to $276,133. The number of disasters this year is 417 less than in 1875. The total number of deaths, either on board ship or on shore, among seamen, is 155, of which number 36 were vessel-owners. Financially, the season of 1876 is the worst on record.

MCVICKER'S Theater, Chicago, is probably the best constructed theater of any in the country, and the most perfect in discipline. While the entire audience go in at one entrance—each person having a coupon for a seat—they separate in eleven different ways to make their exits. There are five outlets on the first floor, three on the second, and three on the third. It may be called a model theater, and its plans should be copied by all who desire to serve the public.

CHICAGO elevators contain 3,265,643 bushels of wheat; 565,863 bushels of corn; 537 837 bushels of oats; 151,724 bushels of rye, and 1,147,307 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 5,653,474 bushels, against 3 512 711 bushels for the corresponding period last year.

THE House Louisiana Investigating Committee, sitting at New Orleans, in executive session on Thursday, instructed Mr. Morrison, its Chairman, to report the members of the Returning Board to the House for contempt in refusing to produce the records called for. The committee has been divided up into sub-committees and dispatched to different portions of the State for the purpose of investigating the charge of intimidation and bulldozing. Messrs. Morrison, Jenks and Townsend will remain in New Orleans and continue the investigation of matters of a general nature relating to the late election in sections not included in the districts allotted to the sub-committees. The investigation will probably not be concluded before the 1st of February.... There is considerable apprehension of trouble in New Orleans on the 8th of January, when the Governor is to be inaugurated. Both Packard and Nicholls will be inaugurated. The Republicans, it is said, will not oppose the inauguration of Nicholls, but should he attempt to exercise the functions of the office he will in all probability be resisted, and a call will be made for troops, 1,100 of whom are now stationed in the city.... A Charleston (S. C.) dispatch of the 22d says: "At an immense meeting of conservative taxpayers last night, resolutions were unanimously adopted recognizing Hampton and Simpson as lawfully elected, and pledging them moral, financial, and material aid."

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., had still another conflagration on the night of Dec. 21. Loss about $196,000. This makes three heavy fires in the city within a week—all incendiary—entailing a total loss of $469,000.... Both of the South Carolina Legislatures have adjourned sine die.... The Florida Supreme Court has issued an order directing a recount of the vote by the State Canvassing Board, and a declaration of the result as shown upon the face of the returns.

RUMORS are current in New Orleans of a coalition between Warmoth, Pinchback, and the Democrats, by which a Democratic Legislature is to elect them to the United States Senate, and they are in return therefor to assist the Democrats in installing Nicholls as Governor.

A RESOLUTION was adopted by the House Investigating Committee, at New Orleans, on the 24th, ordering that the refusal of President Orton, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to appear and produce certain telegrams be reported to the House, and that the House be asked to proceed against him for contempt.

A TALLAHASSEE (Florida) dispatch of the 27th ult. says: "Atty. Gen. Cocke made the canvass of the vote this morning, after the other members of the board refused to canvass. This gives Drew 497 and Tilden 94 majority. This canvass he filed in the Clerk's office in obedience to the order of the Court. Subsequently the other members of the board agreed to recanvass, and the full board met at 4 p. m. Their canvass gives Drew a majority of 195 and the Hayes electors 206. Cocke filed a protest."

WASHINGTON.

THE House Committee on the Pacific Railroads has referred all the bills and propositions in regard to the Texas Pacific railroad to a sub-committee, consisting of Atkins, Lamar, O'Neill, Garfield, and Luttrell.

THE Democratic messenger bearing the Democratic electoral vote of Florida called on Acting Vice President Ferry one day last week, and handed him an envelope containing the so-called electoral vote of the State. Upon being interrogated, the messenger said there was a contest in the State as to the electors, whereupon Mr. Ferry declined to give any receipt for the package handed to him. Mr. Ferry said that in the case of the contested States he would not give a receipt or voucher to either of the messengers, for the reason that he cannot break the seals of the packages to ascertain which are the proper returns, that being a matter which cannot be decided until the second Wednesday in February.

THE treasury has another robbery case on hand. A package of $10,000 passed from the redemption division through the treasury proper to the express company for delivery to the Illinois National Bank of Chicago, which delivered the package as received. On opening by the cashier of the bank, it was found to contain only brown paper. The treasury claim that the money was delivered to the express company, and charge the loss upon the company..... President Grant has again been interviewed by the Associated Press agent at Washington, to whom he expressed no fear of armed collision over the Presidential imbroglio. He remarked to the interviewer that he should welcome the approach of the 4th of March with pleasure, as it would relieve him wholly from the cares of office, and enable him to carry into effect a projected tour to the West Indies before returning to his home at Galena, Ill. He says he will promptly recognize as his successor the man who shall be so declared, whoever he may be, and this without regard to his own political preferences.

THE President sent to the Senate last week the correspondence between the United States and Great Britain on the subject of extradition. Some of it, says a Washington correspondent, has heretofore been published, and the conclusion is that the treaty has been restored to vitality by the act of Great Britain receding from its former position, and the consequent surrender of Brent, the Louisville (Ky.) forger, to the United States. Our Government is now prepared to consider the question of an amendment of the treaty, so as to increase the class of offenses for which extradition may be claimed. The correspondence is regarded by the Senate, at present, as confidential, and hence there is no access to it for the public.... Through the premium on bonds and accumulation of interest, the Alabama claims fund has gained about $6,000,000; and the claimants who failed to get in on the first dividend are growing daily more importunate for a share of the cash. It is expected that a bill of some sort will get through at this session for the disposition of the remainder of the fund.

GENERAL.

THE Board of Directors of the Western Union Telegraph Company, at a meeting in New York, unanimously adopted a resolution authorizing the President of the company to make all proper legal resistance to the demand of the House of Representatives and its committee for private and confidential papers; also giving the managers of the company power, and directing them to destroy original copies of all messages as soon as this may be done without interfering with auditing accounts.

ADVICES from Chihuahua, Mexico, state that Messrs. Degeton, Miller, Molievan, Horne, and Faber, prominent foreigners residing in that city, while out in the mountains, near by, endeavoring to locate a gold mine, were all kidnapped by a Mexican banditti, and will be held until ransomed. Degeton is German Consul at Chihuahua, and Miller was a former resident of St. Louis.

THE statistician of the Department of Agriculture in his December report makes the corn crop only 2 per cent. short of the great crop of last year, and fully 50 per cent. greater than the crop of 1874. The aggregate, subject to possible future revision, is 1,295,000,000 bushels.

THAT monster aerolite which shot athwart the heavens on the evening of the 21st of December was a most startling and wonderful phenomenon. It is variously described by persons along its line of progress through Southern Iowa, Central Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. From some points of observation it seemed more than double the size of the full moon, very brilliant, with a train of star-like fragments following in its wake; from other localities it looked like an illuminated barrel, out of which poured a flood of luminosity of various colors, as it sped onward. At some points along its line of movement it exploded with a terrible noise, causing the earth to tremble, a portion of its mass flying off in fiery fragments. From all accounts, its path was distant from the earth between forty and fifty miles. As far as now known, it was first seen in Kansas, and it finally disappeared from view in Eastern Ohio, and the time of its passage from Lawrence, Kan., to Dayton, O., was less than half an hour.... The bullion shipments from San Francisco to China, from Jan. 1 to Oct. 26, 1876, have been as follows, according to the report of the Director of the Mint: Trade dollars, $4,255,378; Mexican dollars, $1,820,040; fine silver bars, $2,055,575; gold coin, $191,093; total, $8,322,086.... The fastest voyage and quickest time between England and America is recorded in favor of the steamship Britannic, Capt. Thomson, which has just made the voyage from New York to Queenstown in seven days and thirteen hours.

POSTMASTER GEN. TYNER has received a cable dispatch from the British Postoffice Department announcing that it has discontinued ocean subsidies and adopted the United States plan of paying for the service performed.... Christmas night a fire broke out in the Convent of St. Elizabeth, nine miles from Joliette, Can., and in a few moments the whole structure was ablaze. The convent was a two-story brick building, and was occupied by Sisters of Charity, fifty lady boarders, and some fifty charity children and infirm persons. When the fire broke out all was panic and confusion. Thirteen of the inmates, mostly children under 11 years of age, were burned to death. The remainder barely escaped in their night-clothes.

POLITICAL.

THE Democratic State Committee of Illinois have called a convention of the party, to meet at the State capital, on the 8th of January, for the purpose of considering the political situation.... A Washington correspondent of a Chicago journal has interviewed President Grant. The latter inquired the probable chances for Gen. Logan's re-election to the Senate from Illinois, and then used the following language: "My old friend, Houghton, of Galena, suggested my name for United States Senator from Illinois as Logan's successor, and the suggestion was copied approvingly into one of the Chicago papers. When I saw this article I immediately wrote to my friends in Illinois that I could not be a candidate for three reasons. First, although I consider myself a citizen of Illinois and not a citizen of any other State or Territory, yet I do not consider that I have resided in the State continuously enough during the last twenty years to entitle me to a candidacy for the office of United States Senator. Second, I have been a servant of the public for the last sixteen years, and on the 4th of March next I propose to see how it will seem to be a sovereign. Third, and more important than all, I am in favor of the re-election of Gen. Logan as against any other candidate."

WE print below a table showing the popular vote for President at the recent election. The returns are complete in all the States with the exception of Alabama, where only the majority is declared for Tilden in one county, and Mississippi, from which one county is lacking. The vote of South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana is given as returned by the State Canvassing Boards. The total vote of the country is 8,425,977, against 6,457,315 in 1872, and 5,716,788 in 1868. It will be seen that no returns are made of the vote for Peter Cooper, the Greenback candidate, and Green Clay Smith, Prohibitionist, in a large number of States:

A MEETING of the leading Democrats of Minnesota, held at St. Paul last week, declared their firm conviction that Tilden is elected, repudiated the assumption that the President of the Senate has the determination of all questions in dispute with regard to the electoral vote, and declared that the House of Representatives has an equal right with the Senate in such a settlement; and it proposes, in common with all patriotic citizens, to support the House in the exercise of its constitutional rights.

THE State Committee of the Oregon Democracy met at Salem last week and issued an address calling for mass-meetings to be held in every county of the State on the 8th of January to consider the political situation. Tilden and Hendricks were declared elected, and the course of Gov. Grover in issuing a certificate to Cronin was approved.... The Democratic State Committee of Illinois, at its recent session at Springfield, affirmed "the constitutional right of the Senate and House of Representatives, after the President of the Senate shall have opened all the certificates received by him, to count the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States, and declare the result of such count;" denied "the existence of any constitutional right or power in the President of the Senate, independently of authority from the two houses, to count said votes and declare the result thereof, and would regard such a proceeding as revolutionary."... A conference of the leading Democrats of Pennsylvania was held at Harrisburg, last week, at which they declared their conviction of the election of Tilden and Hendricks, and called upon Congress to adopt such lawful means as may lead to the official declaration of that result.

THE Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post claims to have been assured by "a well known Democrat who recently visited Gov. Hendricks at Indianapolis" that the latter expressed an entire willingness to have the Presidential imbroglio "adjusted by the election of Tilden by the House and Wheeler by the Senate. Gov. Hendricks said that he had no desire to re-enter public life in Washington; and, if the difficulties could be satisfactorily adjusted, he would much prefer accepting the mission to England or France."

FOREIGN.

HEAVY rains and floods are reported in England, causing much damage to property and great distress among the people.... A cruising Austrian war vessel on the Danube was fired upon, the other day, by a Servian fort at Belgrade, and great is the excitement in consequence. At last advices the Servian Government had made an apology and dismissed the indiscreet commander of the fort, and this will probably allay the Austrian indignation.

A SEVERE famine exists in Montenegro.... The Captain-General of Cuba has published a decree prohibiting cipher messages to and from the island.... The Emperor William closed the session of the German Parliament with a speech from the throne. He said, in reference to foreign affairs: "The negotiations of the powers on the Eastern question, as far as proceeded with, justify the hope that my efforts and mutually-conciliatory and peaceful intentions of the powers immediately concerned, will be successful in solving the pending questions without prejudice to the good relations existing. Germany will continue, by friendly and disinterested mediation, to lend her co-operation for the attainment of this end.".... A dispatch from Constantinople states that the reforms adopted by the preliminary conference are very sweeping. They include the admission of Christians in the Ottoman army, and the transformation of the villayet of Sophia into a Christian province, under a Governor. Opinion is pretty evenly divided as to whether the Porte will yield to the recommendation of the powers.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch of the 25th says: "The first sitting of the Plenary Conference was held yesterday. Savset Pasha presided, and in an address opening the conference referred to the liberal views of the Porte. He said the Porte was ready to grant to its subjects all the privileges which were not contrary to the dignity and integrity of the empire. During the sitting salvos of artillery were heard. Savset Pasha explained that these salutes were fired to announce the promulgation of the constitution, which would effect a complete change in the state of Turkey".... A successful revolution in San Domingo has deposed Gonzalez and restored Baez to the Presidency of that republic. Gonzalez has quitted the country, and Baez will resume the reins of government.

LATE advices from the City of Mexico furnish the following interesting items regarding the progress of the revolution in that unhappy country: The Iglesias Government is established at Queretaro. The States of Guanajuato, Queretaro, Aguas Calientes, Zacatecas, Durango, San Luis Potosi, Jalisco, Colima, Sonora, Sinaloa, and Tabasco recognize Iglesias. The States of Mexico, Hidalgo, Puebla, Vera Cruz, and Oaxaca are occupied by Diaz troops. Iglesias has about 12,000 good troops, while Diaz has 18,000 of every grade, but he is well provided with artillery, in which Iglesias is deficient. On the 6th inst. 6,000 men, with twenty field howitzers and ten rifled cannon, left Mexico for Queretaro. Iglesias has about 7,000 troops in Queretaro, with six pieces of artillery. This force is sufficient to garrison the place, which is strong and easily defended. All parties are anxious to be recognized by the United States.

MAYEBARA, with eleven other leaders in the recent insurrection in Japan, were beheaded Dec. 3. Others were variously punished by imprisonment and deprivation of rank.... The largest fire in Tokio, Japan, since April, 1872, occurred Nov. 29, beginning just before midnight, and lasting about eight hours. Sixty-five streets, containing 5,000 houses, were destroyed. Fifty lives are believed to have been lost. The loss of property is estimated at $10,000,000. The residence of the Austrian Minister was burned. That of the United States Minister narrowly escaped.... The Russian Gen. Nikitin arrived at Belgrade the other day, to take command of the Servian army, vice Tchernayeff. At the review of the Russian divisions Gen. Nikitin declared that he had come to Servia by order of the Emperor of Russia to assume command of the army. He said that all foreigners serving in the Russian corps in Servia would be considered a part of the Russian army.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Debate in the Senate on the Oregon Electoral Case.

The discussion upon the resolution of Mr. Mitchell, authorizing an investigation as to the appointment of Cronin for Presidential elector in Oregon, being under consideration, Mr. Bogy said the Committee on Privileges and Elections of this body had got to be a most important committee. No man could be a Senator, whether elected by his Legislature or not, unless he was also elected by the Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. This committee reminded him (Bogy) of what is called in modern times a Returning Board. The Committee on Privileges and Elections had got to be the great Returning Board of the Senate. These Returning Boards were a new invention. It was conceded that Tilden had a popular majority of 300,000, but Hayes had three Returning Boards, so that to cipher the thing down one Returning Board was worth just 100,000 votes.

Mr. Mitchell said if the Returning Board in Oregon could carry out its purpose it would be equal to 45,000,000 of people.

Mr. Bogy said he was glad that this Oregon matter had happened. It was a most fortunate thing, as it had compelled the Senators on the other side to investigate all these questions as they should do. The Oregon case has upset all this argument about a prima facie case. If it had not happened there would have been no end to the arguments on the other side about the returns from Louisiana and Florida constituting a prima facie case, and Congress could not go behind the action of the Returning Boards of the other States. Now, it was plain that Congress had a right and the power to carry out the will of the people.

Mr. Morton said the Returning Boards were not a new invention. They were as old as the constitution of the United States. There was not a State in the Union which had not authorized one or more persons to count the votes and certify who was elected. In some States, as in Louisiana, these boards had discretionary and judicial powers. The decision of the Returning Boards in some States, by the laws of the State, were made final. In Louisiana the Returning Board had broad judicial power. It may have made a wrong decision; he would not discuss that question now, but the Governor of Oregon exercised powers not given him by the laws of the State.

Mr. Eaton said he would not count a vote which he believed was illegally thrown to elect a man who had triumphantly been elected President by the American people. He did not desire advantage of any wrong in this canvass of votes by the Senate. He argued that every ballot cast for Watts was no more than a blank piece of paper, and the Governor of Oregon, taking that view of the case, saw his way clear to give Cronin the certificate. If every vote given for Cronin was a proper and legal vote, by a strict construction of the law of Oregon, the certificate of election to Cronin was right and proper, though he (Eaton) thought the Governor should have certified to the election of two men, and only two men. He (Eaton) would not vote to place in the Presidential chair the candidate of the Democratic party upon the vote of the Democratic elector in Oregon. The political stomach of the Senator from Oregon (Mitchell) seemed to be disordered now by a very small matter, but it could stand the garlic of South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida. He then read the recently published letter of John J. Long, Republican candidate for the Louisiana Legislature declining to accept the seat awarded him by the Returning Board, on the ground that he had been fairly defeated by his Democratic opponent, and resuming his argument said a single witness like this man weighed down a dozen affidavits. Long said there was no intimidation in De Soto parish, but the Senator from Ohio (Sherman) declared there was. In conclusion Mr. Eaton argued that the representatives of the people could not afford to do wrong. The President of the United States had been quoted as saying he would deliver the office over to Hayes if he should be declared to be elected. The President had nothing to do with it. It would not do to talk about enforcing anything. The good sense of the people of this country would see that justice was done. Mr. Eaton also argued that the President of the Senate had no more right to count the votes for President than one of the pages. The President of the Senate was not President of the joint convention unless chosen by the joint convention to fill that position.

Mr Sherman said he was not informed that the Returning Board had returned Mr. Long as elected to the Legislature from De Soto parish. He thought the gentleman leaped before he came to the stile. He then referred to the affidavits of intimidation in De Soto parish, and resuming, said the will of the people of Oregon had been fairly expressed in favor of the three Hayes electors, and he was entitled to three votes from that State.

Mr. Bogy—Apply the same rule to Florida.

Mr. Sherman said he was perfectly willing to apply the rule to Florida, but these things were governed by the laws of the State. Oregon had her laws and Florida hers. If Gov. Hayes should become satisfied that he had not a majority of the legal votes of Florida and Louisiana, he would not accept the office of President. If it should be clear that Gov. Hayes had not received that majority, he (Sherman) would not have him accept the office. Mr. Sherman then argued that the Louisiana Returning Board was a legally-constituted body, and it had not been shown that that board made a false return. He did not desire to see Gov. Hayes have the benefit of any wrong, and he was satisfied that he spoke the sentiments of Gov. Hayes when he said if that gentleman should be convinced that the Returning Boards of Louisiana or Florida acted wrong, he would make no claim to the office of President. There was an absence of any proof that these boards had acted wrong. As the returns from those States now stood they were just as much entitled to be counted as the returns from New York or Ohio, and he could show from evidence now before the Senate that the vote of the State of Louisiana in fairness should be counted for Gov. Hayes.

Funding the Legal Tenders.

Representative Chittenden, of New York, has matured and introduced in the House a bill providing for the funding of the legal-tender notes. It provides as follows:

First—That the Secretary of the Treasury be and is hereby authorized to withdraw, as soon as the necessary preparations can be made, the legal-tender notes of the United States whenever presented by holders thereof, and issue therefor, dollar for dollar, face value, coupon or registered bonds of the United States in the spirit of the original Legal-tender act, provided that bonds authorized by this act shall be payable in gold at the expiration of forty years from the 1st of January, 1877, and bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly in gold.

Second—That the bonds authorized by this act shall be available for deposit in the treasury of the United States for banking purposes under the provisions of the various laws relating to national banks.

Third—That the legal-tender notes received in exchange for bonds under this act shall be destroyed under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Territory of Huron.

The proposed new Territory adjoining the Red river of the North has received a new baptism in the Senate. As originally passed, the bill organizing it gave it the name of "Pembina." The Senate the other day reconsidered the bill, and Bogy said "Pembina" was not an Indian, but was a corrupt French appellation, meaning holy bread (pain beni). Sherman suggested "Wyandotte" and "Seneca," Spencer "Ogallalla," Bogy "Algonquin" and "Huron," and the latter name was finally agreed to. The wish of all the Senators who spoke on the subject was to apply to the new Territory the name of some once-powerful Indian tribe.

Regular Proceedings.

THURSDAY, Dec. 21.—Senate.—The Senate ordered 5,000 extra copies of the compilation from its journal, by its Chief Clerk, of all that has taken place concerning the counting of electoral votes.... A resolution was passed providing for an adjournment from the 22d to the 26th of December.... Mr. Davis called upon the report of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the bill to provide for the expenses of certain special committees. The committee agreed to give each house $35,000 to conduct the investigation ordered. The report was agreed to...... The Chair appointed as the special committee authorized by the recent resolution of Mr. Edmunds to devise means for the proper count of the vote for President and Vice President, in connection with a similar committee of the House, Messrs. Edmunds, Morton, Frelinghuysen, Logan, Thurman, Bayard and Ransom.... Mr. Frelinghuysen presented the petition of a large number of soldiers of the late war, asking for the passage of the House bill for an equalization of bounties. Referred. The Oregon electoral matter was discussed.... On motion of Mr. Davis, business was suspended, and the Senate then paid its tribute of respect to the memory of Senator Caperton. Appropriate remarks were made by Messrs. Davis, Wright, Withers, Edmunds and others. As a further mark of respect the Senate adjourned.

House.—Mr. Platt offered a resolution for the appointment of a select committee to investigate the charge made by Hewitt that his letters had been tampered with in the New York postoffice. In connection with it, Mr. Platt sent to the Clerk's desk, and had read, a telegram from Postmaster James, pronouncing the accusation utterly and absolutely false. Mr. Hewitt stated the circumstances under which he made the charge. He said, about a month ago he received a letter, the writer stating that he was an employe in the New York postoffice, and he felt bound to communicate the fact that "Slade's little Kettle" was at work on his letters. The only attention which he felt called upon to pay to this anonymous letter was to observe closely the letters which he received. He found that a considerable number of them presented the appearance of having been opened, the flaps of the envelopes presenting a puckered or corrugated appearance. Unfortunately he had thrown in the waste-basket the anonymous letter. [He received from ten to twenty a week.] Therefore its handwriting could not be identified. So, too, with the envelopes. They had been thrown away, and it was a remarkable fact that none of the letters received by him to-day presented the appearance of having been tampered with. After some little discussion, the previous question was voted down, by a vote of 79 to 77. Mr. Holman then moved that the special committee now in New York investigating the election frauds be directed to investigate this matter. Mr. Buckner moved to lay the whole subject on the table. Mr. Buckner's motion was lost, by a vote of 83 ayes to 143 noes. The resolution directing Mr. Cox's New York committee to investigate the charges was then passed.... The Speaker laid before the House a telegraphic communication from Wm. R. Morrison, the Chairman of the Louisiana Investigating Committee, transmitting a report of the proceedings before the committee in the case of E. W. Barnes, the Manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company in New Orleans. It was agreed that an hour's discussion should be allowed, and Mr. Garfield spoke against the resolution, on the ground that the House is not justified in treating telegraphic communications as an official report. Quite a long discussion followed, and finally the resolution was adopted without division.

FRIDAY, Dec. 22.—Senate.—The resolution of Mr. Mitchell, authorizing an investigation as to the appointment of E. A. Cronin as Presidential elector in Oregon was again the subject of discussion in the Senate. Mr. Mitchell accepted the preamble of Mr. Bayard, in lieu of that reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and the resolution was agreed to.... After the transaction of some unimportant business, the Senate adjourned until Tuesday, Dec. 26.

House.—The House passed a resolution giving to the widow of the late Speaker Kerr an amount equal to his pay up to the end of the present Congress.... Speaker Randall appointed the following as a committee to act with the Senate committee to consider the question of counting the electoral votes: Paine, Hunton, Hewitt, Springer, McCrary, Hoar, and Willard of Michigan.

SATURDAY, Dec. 23.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—Mr. Springer offered a resolution for the compilation and printing of the proceedings and debates relating to the counting of the electoral votes since the establishment of the Government. Adopted.... Mr. Reagan, from the Committee on Commerce, offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the President to furnish the House with copies of all the orders made by him or under his direction, and of the orders and correspondence of the War Department relating to the limitations made by the President of the appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and to specify how the $2,000,000, out of the $5,000,000 appropriated by the last Congress, have been expended, and also to state under what law such limitation was made.... The session lasted only twenty minutes, when an adjournment was ordered till Wednesday, Dec. 27.

TUESDAY, Dec. 26.—Senate.—The Senate met and had a brief formal session, only fifteen Senators being present. No business of importance was transacted.

House.—Not in session.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 27.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President in regard to obtaining certain concessions from the Sioux Indians. Referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Also, a message from the President in regard to the extradition treaty with Great Britain, reciting the conduct of that government in the cases of Winslow and Brent, and announcing that since Great Britain had voluntarily handed over Brent to this Government, he would continue to regard that treaty as still in operation, but he hoped that a new treaty would soon be entered into. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.... Mr. Hunton, from the joint committee to provide a form of government for the District of Columbia, reported a bill which was made the special order for Jan. 4. The bill provides that the District shall be governed by three Commissioners, one appointed by the President, one elected by the House, and one by the Senate. There was a three hours' debate on the Louisiana question, growing out of a petition from certain citizens of Cincinnati in regard to the counting of the electoral votes. Finally the petition was read and referred to a committee appointed to examine into the subject. It contains a resolution declaring that the President of the Senate has not the power alone to count and declare the result of the electoral vote.

WASHINGTON'S LIBRARY.

The Remaining Portion of It Hawked Off at a Philadelphia Auction-Shop.

[Philadelphia Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

The last volumes of the library of Gen. George Washington were scattered to the winds by the last heir of the family, Lawrence Washington, at Thomas' auction-room to-day. This young man, who was present at the sale, is a great-grandson of Gen. Washington's brother, and a son of the late John A. Washington. The books were stored in a room of a house belonging to the family, which was rented to a Pennsylvanian, who promised that it should be constantly locked. When Mr. Washington examined the library, he found that volumes had disappeared, that the autographs had been clipped from others, and there was danger that the whole collection would be scattered in a few years and its authenticity destroyed. There was no doubt whatever of the authenticity of the volumes at this time. There was a large number of literary men, librarians, booksellers, and private collectors present. The first lot put up was an edition of "Don Quixote" in four volumes, 16mo., printed in London in 1786. Each volume contained an autograph of Washington, which is alone worth $5. The four volumes brought $24, and were knocked down to a Mr. Baker Jones, of West Virginia, who also made many purchases during the day. A 16mo. Philadelphia Directory of 1796, presented to President Washington in the same year by the city of Philadelphia, was started at $5, finally bringing $22. Next, the Federalist in two volumes, calf, 1788, each volume having Washington's autograph and coat of arms, brought $50 a volume. Sabine, a New York dealer in old books, secured a prize. A volume of pamphlets was started at $3, and after hot competition, was knocked down for $32.50. Gen. Hawley secured a bargain in the "Life of Marshal Turenne," in two volumes, printed in London, 1735, for $17; also two volumes of rare political pamphlets of the last century for $26. Goldsmith's "History of the Earth and Animated Nature" brought less than the value of the autographs. Hamilton's "Inquiry into the Principles of Taxation," a presentation copy, with autographs of the author and Washington, started at $3 and brought only $13. Robert Fulton's "Treatise on Canal Navigation," illustrated with seventeen plates, quarto, calf, a presentation copy, with an autograph of Washington, an autograph letter of Fulton, and a supplement at the back in Fulton's handwriting, was started at $15, and, after a lively competition, went for $43. There were 138 lots, and in all about 250 volumes. The total amount realized was $1,983, with which the auctioneer expressed himself satisfied, saying that it was more than he had expected he would receive. Few of the books had any value, except that which had been conferred upon them by distinguished ownership. Many were public documents of which there are numerous copies, but some of them were rare.

Petroleum Discovered in Wyoming.

William Dix, a resident of Salt Lake, and an old prospector, has succeeded in finding petroleum, a short distance from Hilliard, Wyoming. He has sunk a shaft to the depth of fifty feet, and is able to collect about fifteen gallons per day of a very superior lubricating oil, which is selling readily at 40 cents a gallon at the well. The indications are said to be good for a large flow, and arrangements will soon be made for going down deep to thoroughly test it. On the same ground Mr. Dix has also discovered a thirty-two feet vein of coal, equal in every respect to the celebrated Rock Springs.—Cheyenne (Wy. T.) Leader.

Interesting Discoveries.

Dr. Schliemann has made some more discoveries at Mycenæ. In the tomb previously explored he has found a great quantity of woman's jewelry in gold, and handsomely worked. Immediately after commencing excavations at an adjoining tomb a large head of a cow in silver, with immense horns of pure gold, was found. A large girdle of gold, five gold vases, and immense golden buttons were also found. All these objects are said to be marvelously worked. Among other discoveries are nine silver vases and numerous swords of bronze, but no trace of ironwork.

T. C. MATE, PUBLISHER.

THE RECORD OF 1876.

Its List of Crimes, Casualties, Discoveries, and Achievements.

A Condensed History of the World for the Past Year.

THE OLD YEAR.

O good old year! This is your last.
And must you go? With you I've passed
Some days that bear revision.
For these I'd thank you, ere you make
Your journey to the Stygian Lake,
Or to the fields Elysian.

Long have you been our household guest.
To keep you we have tried our best.
You must not stay, you tell us;
Not e'en to introduce your heir,
Who comes so fresh and debonair
He needs must make you jealous.

I heard your footsteps overhead
To-night, and to myself I said:
He's packing his portmanteau,
His books and staff, like Prospero's,
He's buried in December's snows,
And finished his last canto.

Your well-known hat and cloak still look
The same upon their entry-hook,
And seem as if they grew here.
But they—ah! me—will soon be gone,
And we be sitting here alone
To welcome in the New Year.

The boots so oft put out at night
Will vanish ere to-morrow's light
Across the east is burning.
When morning comes, full well I know
They'll leave no footsteps in the snow,
Of going or returning.

At twelve o'clock to-night Queen Mab
Will take you in her spectral cab
To catch the downward fast train.
Some of us will sit up with you
And drink a parting cup or two
While I indite this last strain.

O, good, old, wise, frost-headed Year,
You've brought us health and strength and cheer,
Though sometimes care and sorrow.
Each morn you gave us newer hope,
That reached beyond the cloudy scope
Of each unseen to-morrow.

We knew you when you were, forsooth,
No better than a stranger youth—
A fast youth, some one muttered,
When thinking how the days you gave,
On ghostly horses to their grave
Have galloped, flown and fluttered.

But what is time, by moon and stars
Checked off in monthly calendars,
To fairy kings like you here?
What are the centuries that span
The inch-wide space ruled by man?
Or what are Old and New Year?

You go to join the million years;
The great veiled sky that never clears
Before our mortal seeing;
The shrouded death—the evolving life—
The growth, the mystery, the strife
Of elemental being.

We see in your abstracted eye
The clouded flame of prophecy—
Of time the immortal scorning,
And yet the sympathetic smile
That says: "I fain would stay awhile
To bid your rhymes good morning."

Ah! no more rhymes for you and me,
Old Year, shall we together see,
For we to-night must sever.
Good-by old number Seventy-six!
'Tis nearly time you took your drive
Into the dark forever!

The train that stops for you will let
A stranger out we never met,
To take your place and station.
With greetings glad and shouts of joy,
They'll welcome him, while you, old boy,
Depart with no ovation.

Five minutes yet? But talk must end,
On with your cloak and cap, old friend!
Too long I have been prating.
Your blessing now! We'll think of you—
Ah! there's the clock! Adieu, adieu—
I see your cab is waiting.

CHRONOLOGY OF 1876.

JANUARY.

1. City Treasurer Bork, of Buffalo, N. Y., discovered to be a defaulter to the amount of $400 000.

4. Lord Lytton appointed Viceroy of India.

5. Reassembling of Congress after the holiday recess.

9. Railway accident near Odessa, Russia; 70 persons killed and many maimed.

10. Exciting debate in Congress on the bill granting amnesty to Jeff Davis; the measure defeated.

14. Lower house of Congress refused to pass a universal amnesty bill.

21. First heavy snow-storm of the winter in the far West; Union Pacific railroad blockaded.

23. Thirteen persons killed by a railway collision at Huntingdon, Eng. E. D. Winslow, owner of the Boston News, and Treasurer of the Boston Post, having committed forgeries to the amount of $250,000, disappeared with his family.

26. Burglars rob the National Bank of Northampton, Mass., of $700,000 in securities. Three men hung by a mob at Charleston, W. Va.

27. The robbery of $400,000 from a Chicago eastward-bound express car was neatly prevented near Toledo, and the four robbers arrested.

31. Four outlaws hung by vigilants in Rooks county, Kan. A man named Simmons murdered, dissected, and his remains packed in a box, at Greenpoint, N. Y.; arrest of Victor Kretz, the murderer. Speaker Kerr writes a letter declaring that his name is not to be used in the Democratic National Convention.

FEBRUARY.

1. A man named Wilder, at Lyndon, Vt., murders his wife, father and mother, and then hangs himself. Fifteen of the whisky ring at Indianapolis sentenced to prison for terms of from six months to three years. William McKee, principal proprietor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, convicted of conspiracy to defraud the Government.

2. A stage line opened from Cheyenne to the Black Hills. Lower house of Congress refused to pass the one-term Presidential amendment to the constitution.

3. Colliery explosion in Belgium; over 200 miners killed. Gen. Sherman writes a letter, saying he will not be a candidate for President, and expressing a preference for Gov. Hayes, of Ohio.

6. The Sultan of Turkey accepts Count Andrassy's scheme for settling the Herzegovinian difficulty. Jeff. Davis writes a long letter, replying to Mr. Blaine, disclaiming that cruelties to prisoners were authorized by him, deprecating the obstacles opposed to the progress of reconciliation, intimating that he does not desire amnesty for himself, and charging imposture and barbarity upon the Federal authorities. A fearful panic occurred at Robinson Opera House, Cincinnati; 10 people were killed and many more injured.

8. Opening of the trial, at St. Louis, of Gen. Babcock, Military Secretary to President Grant, for conspiracy to defraud the Government in connection with the whisky ring. Great fire in Broadway, N. Y.; loss, $2,500,000.

10. National Bank of Commerce, of New London, Ct., robbed of $21,000; the teller subsequently confesses to the burglary and restores the money.

12. Explosion of fire-damp in a coal-mine at Pittston, Pa.; 4 miners killed and a number wounded. Deposition of President Grant in the Babcock case taken at Washington, Chief Justice Waite administering the oath.

14. The Sultan of Turkey signed the decree granting the Andrassy reforms in the insurgent provinces.

17. Collision between the steamers Strathclyde and Franconia in the English channel; the Strathclyde sunk, and 31 lives lost.

19. The Congregational Advisory Council, to investigate the Beecher scandal, convenes in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. The Maine Legislature abolishes hanging.

22. Indiana Republican State Convention nominates G. S. Orth for Governor and instructs for Gov. Morton for President. Wisconsin Republican Convention indorses Blaine for President.

23. The Connecticut Democrats nominate Gov. Charles R. Ingersoll and all the State officers for re-election.

24. The trial of Gen. Orville E. Babcock, Military Secretary of President Grant, on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the Government brought to a close at St. Louis, the jury rendering a verdict of "not guilty."

Destructive tornadoes at St Charles, Mo., and Princeton, Ind.; many houses blown down, and several persons killed and crippled.

MARCH.

2. Revelation of corruption in the War Department at Washington; Secretary Belknap tenders his resignation; resolutions of impeachment presented against him in the House of Representatives and unanimously adopted; intense excitement at Washington and elsewhere; Secretary Borie, of the navy, appointed temporary Secretary of War.

3. A committee of the House appears in the Senate at Washington, and formally impeaches Mr. Belknap for high crimes and misdemeanors. A life-boat crew of 15 drowned on the North Carolina coast while trying to save the crew of an Italian bark.

4. Arrival in London of Don Carlos, the Spanish pretender.

5. The Sultan of Turkey offers amnesty to the Herzegovinians. Caleb P. Marsh, the witness against the late Secretary Belknap, flees to Canada.

6. The President nominates Richard Henry Dana, Jr., of Massachusetts, Minister to England, vice Gen. Schenck, resigned. The portfolio of the War Office offered to Senator Lot M. Morrill, of Maine, who declines.

7. Burning of the Home for Aged People at Brooklyn, N. Y.; some 20 of the aged inmates perish in the flames. Eleven persons killed and seven or eight wounded by a train falling through a bridge across a branch of the Shenandoah river, on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. News of a famine in the Westmanna islands, near Iceland; 500 people said to be starving to death. Judge Alphonso Taft, of Ohio, appointed Secretary of War. The Committee of the House on Expenditures in the War Department subpœnaed by the District Court of Washington to produce the papers and evidence against Gen. Belknap, which they declined to do. Exciting partisan debate in the House, in which the Democrats and Republicans charged upon each the responsibility for the flight of the witness Marsh, whose absence blocks the impeachment trial.

8. The Judiciary Committee of the House, at Washington, report that, owing to the absence of the witness Marsh, it would be impracticable to proceed with the impeachment trial of Belknap, and ask that they be allowed to take further testimony; after an exciting and intensely partisan debate, the request was granted by a strictly party vote. Belknap arraigned in the Police Court at Washington, and held to bail in $25,000 to answer to a criminal charge of bribery. The United States Senate decide the three years' contest of P. B. S. Pinchback for a seat in that body as Senator from Louisiana, by the adoption of a resolution declaring that he has no claim to the seat.

14. New Hampshire election; Gov. Cheney and the entire Republican ticket elected, and a Republican majority secured in the Legislature.

15. Severe storm in England and on the continent; numerous shipwrecks and many lives lost.

17. Destructive fire in Springfield, Ill.; loss, $170,000. Great snow-storm in Scotland, causing an embargo on travel.

19. Heaviest snow-storm of the winter in the Western and Southern States; 14 inches deep at Cairo, and 10 inches at Memphis. Hon. R. C. Schenck, late Minister to England, having resigned, arrives at New York on his homeward journey.

Walter's Impressions of America.

Mr. Walter, of the London Times, has had the interviewer after him to get his impressions of the United States. This is what the London correspondent of the Liverpool Mercury says:

"Mr. Walter, of the Times, has returned to England with very pleasant impressions of the United States. He told one of the people who interviewed him that the Centennial was the best exhibition which had been held. He was amazed at the generosity of the railway companies in carrying him everywhere gratuitously, and at the infatuation of the country, which, after having by its exhibition called the world to compete with it, still maintained protective duties. He had admirable opportunities of witnessing the contest for the Presidency, and came to the conclusion that it cost more to make a President than to keep a prince. Some one was bold enough to ask him if he had seen any rivals of the Times, to which he replied with a smile and a shake of the head."

A comic opera company, composed of Commodore Nutt, six other dwarfs as small, and Col. Goshen, the giant, is traveling in the West. They play "Jack, the Giant Killer," Goshen, of course, personating the giant. They enter a town with Goshen riding ahead on an immense horse, and the dwarfs following in a tiny carriage.

A REPUBLICAN'S VIEWS.

Horace White, of Chicago, Condemns the Conspiracy to Make Hayes President.

[From the New York World.]

Mr. Horace White, formerly editor of the Chicago Tribune, universally recognized in the West as the leading Republican journal west of the Alleghanies, resigned that position a year or two ago because of ill-health, but is still a large stockholder in the paper. As editor and public man Mr. White's opinions have been quoted as representing the sound judgment of the best elements in his party. What he has to say in the present juncture, therefore, is not only important as the views of a prominent Republican writer and politician, but as representing the sentiments of men like him in his section. Mr. White is at the Buckingham Hotel, and yesterday freely conversed with a World reporter upon the political outlook.

"From such attention as you have given to the Louisiana case," Mr. White, "may I ask your opinion of the Returning Board's action?" was the first question.

"I have given no other attention to the Louisiana case," was the reply, "than to carefully read the reports given to the public by both parties. My opinion is that the Returning Board's action is an attempted swindle, but that it will fail of accomplishing its object. If, however, its object should be accomplished and be acquiesced in by the people, it would amount to a subversion of our system of government."

"Do you think that intimidation took place in Louisiana?"

"There has been no legal evidence of it furnished, as yet, and I presume it will turn out very much as it did after the election of 1874, when the same Returning Board threw out enough votes to reverse the result in the State, and a committee of Congress—a Republican committee of a Republican Congress—investigated the matter and reported that the charges of intimidation were false from beginning to end."

"What committee was this?"

"The committee of which Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, was Chairman. I presume that the charges of intimidation have no better foundation now than they had then, but, however that may be, there can be no law for throwing out the votes of A, B, C, and D because E has intimidated F, except at the expense of subverting our system of government and inaugurating chaos in its stead.

"When you give to a returning board the power to enter into the recesses of the human mind and inquire what motives were operating there when the votes were cast, and to substitute their own notions of how the people would have voted if the circumstances had been different, in place of the votes actually and legally cast—when you do this, I say, you have annihilated and destroyed the foundations of a democratic republic. It is immaterial what the law of Louisiana is, or whether it has been rightly administered by the Returning Board. This is the net result that the American people have to face, for it is not to be supposed that so cheap a method of carrying elections will be long confined to Louisiana. We came very near having a taste of it in Chicago three or four weeks ago, where our Returning Board threatened to throw out some 3,000 votes, and would undoubtedly have done so if they had not been restrained by a wholesome public opinion."

"You believe that both Tilden and Nicholls had fair majorities in Louisiana?"

"That is the inference I draw from the fact that the opposite result has been achieved only by throwing out six or eight thousand votes, and also from the fact that in a similar case two years ago the throwing out of votes to reverse the result was ascertained to be arbitrary, unfair, and illegal."

"It is claimed that although the throwing out of votes may be arbitrary, unfair, and illegal, yet there is no power to go behind the action of the Returning Board."

"Of course, some such claim as this is necessary to complete the overthrow of the American system of government. Its latest refinement is that the presiding officer of the Senate is a returning board of one for the whole country, and that there is no power to go behind him. If that functionary should declare himself elected, instead of either Hayes or Tilden, probably power would be found to go behind him with a boot. The theory that there is no power to eliminate a falsehood from the electoral vote of the nation is precisely the theory that the people are now called on either to acquiesce in or to repudiate and stamp under their feet. If they acquiesce in it, they will have sanctioned a radical and vital change in the character of their Government. But it is important they should know the logical effect and consequence of what they are called on to do. I think they will soon find out what it all signifies."

"You think, then, that Congress has jurisdiction of disputed votes in the Electoral College?"

"Certainly I do. It has always taken jurisdiction, and must necessarily have it. The doctrine that it has no jurisdiction was never heard of before. The constitution of the United States had its origin in the necessity of enabling the General Government to reach and deal with individuals, instead of dealing with the States as independent sovereignties. Under the old Confederation the General Government could only deal with the States, and had consequently fallen into bankruptcy, feebleness, and self-contempt. The real and vital difference between the old Confederation and the present constitution is that the latter enables the Government to deal directly with individuals in matters affecting itself, instead of operating in a roundabout and uncertain manner through the States. To say that it may not deal with individuals in ascertaining who has been chosen to its own Chief Magistracy is the most alarming assertion of State rights I ever heard of. Calhoun never went so far as this, nor anybody else till the present year."

"Have you read Senator Sherman's report to the President on the action of the Returning Board?"

"Yes, I have read with surprise and pain that one holding so important and influential a position as Senator Sherman could call the ex-parte affidavits in the hands of the Returning Board 'proofs,' when every lawyer knows they are not proofs; and that he could spend so much time telling us what took place at the election in Louisiana eight years ago, and say nothing about what happened at the election two years ago, when, according to the report of the committee of Congress, of which Mr. Hoar was Chairman, the President of the Louisiana Returning Board, ex-Gov. Wells, made an affidavit of intimidation in a certain parish where he was not personally present, and where there was, in fact, no intimidation—the result of which was the throwing out of the returns of that parish, and the reversal of the political complexion of one branch of the State Legislature. Since Senator Sherman has gone at great length into the election of 1868, and since he has given a quasi indorsement of the individual members of the Louisiana Returning Board, candor should have required him to state the facts of recent elections as well as of remote ones, if anything in the past is to be brought up as furnishing presumptive proof of facts in the present. For these reasons Mr. Sherman's report, in my judgment, is not entitled to respect among fair-minded men."

"What is your opinion of the plan to refer this matter to the Supreme Court?"

"I think it would be perfectly futile. If we have lost the power to count votes and to tell what is a majority, the Supreme Court cannot enable us to recover that power. Moreover, the court needs to have less politics infused into it rather than more. To make the Supreme Court a national Returning Board would ultimately break down the court without in the least degree purifying politics. If the court should step one inch outside of the arithmetical result of the election its decision would be scoffed at by one party or the other. If it should not step outside of the arithmetical result its decision would simply be that two and two make four, instead of five or three or some other number. But the chances are that ere long the court would gravely consider the question whether two and two really make four or not, and would listen to the arguments of counsel upon that point. For my own part, I am glad the Senate has rejected this scheme."

"What remedy would you suggest for the existing state of things?"

"If Mr. Hayes is installed in the Executive Mansion, and put in possession of the treasury and other departments by force, with no better title than he now appears to have, and if he should decide to accept the office under such a title, he would be the de facto President, and his acts would be valid as against third parties. But he ought not to be recognized as President by Congress, and no appropriation of money should be made during his usurpation, except such as may be necessary to protect the public credit, transport the mails, keep the courts open, collect the revenue, pay the pensions, and generally to hold society together. Less than this the Democrats cannot justly do. More than this they are not required to do.

"In order to preserve the continuity of the Government and to have a President de jure, it would be necessary for Mr. Tilden to take the oath of office—this being the only form of inauguration known to the law—and to reside at the seat of Government. Any attempt at violence is to be deprecated, and probably the party that first resorts to violence will be defeated, irrespective of the merits of the controversy. It is peculiarly an Anglo-Saxon trait to endure evils while they are endurable. The Democratic party has everything to gain by paying respect to this national [illegible]."

"I believe, Mr. White, that you voted for Hayes and Wheeler?"

"I voted for the Hayes electors and the Republican State ticket in Illinois without exception, but I acknowledge no allegiance or fealty to any party, and shall not vote the Republican ticket again if the action of the Louisiana Returning Board receives the sanction and support of the party."

A photographer gives the following directions to his customers: "When a lady sitting for a picture would compose her mouth to a bland and serene character, she should just before entering the room say, 'Bosom,' and keep the expression into which the mouth subsides until the desired effect in the camera is evident. If, on the other hand, she wishes to assume a distinguished and somewhat noble bearing, not suggestive of sweetness, she should say 'Brush,' the result of which is infallible. If she wishes to make her mouth look small, she must say 'Flip,' but if the mouth be already too small and needs enlarging she must say 'cabbage.' If she wishes to look mournful, she must say 'Kerchunk;' if resigned, she must ejaculate 's'cat.'"

To our citizens and the traveling public, we would say that this is the popular resort at Waterloo. First door south of the railroad.

The Springfield Republican, although it supported Hayes, does not support fraud. It says of the Florida returns: "No votes were throw out for alleged intimidation, and those arraigned and rejected for actual fraud were very few. The legal votes actually gave the state to Tilden; such rules of review and decision as prevail in contested election returns before the Massachusetts Supreme Court or in Congress would evidently give the state officially to him."

The girls who failed to propose during 1876, may console themselves with the reflection that their turn will come again about the year 1880.

Topeka, Kan.

Sunday night he said to the partner of his joys and sorrows:

"Susie, to-morrow is New Year's. Many and many a time in the past I have sworn off, have I not?"

"You're talking!" she answered with dreamily retrospective eyes.

"And many and many time I have broken my pledge," he continued softly.

"You bet," she answered with a sigh.

"But, Susie," said the great strong man, with his eyes filled with tears, "I have solemnly resolved this time to take an oath that I will keep."

"Oh, Melvin," answered the woman, "you are just chinning."

"No," he replied with a fervancy that left no doubt of his earnestness, "I have sworn it and I mean to stick to it; from this time forth so long as I live I will never swear off again."

A young man with a tallowy face and a lank form, had a tooth pulled at a Danbury dentistry, Friday afternoon. After the aching object had been drawn it was deposited on the table.

The young man eyed it and the operator alternately with manifest uneasiness for a moment, and then said:

"What are going to do with that tooth, mister?"

"Burn it up," replied the dentist.

"That's all right, then. I thought you might throw it out doors, and if you did, I though I'd take it with me, and burn it up when I got home. I shouldn't want it laying around out of doors where pigs are running loose. I don't want hog teeth."

And with his views thus comprehensively set forth, he took his departure for home.

Do you suppose the little boys who take "hog bites" out of companions apples, had theirs thrown out where hogs run loose?

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but natural that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St, Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables, routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

SUMMARY JUSTICE.

How it was Meted Out to a Robber of Adams Express Company Money.

Louisville Courier Journal.

During the prevalence of the storm which occurred Friday night, the 8th inst., a negro entered the wharf-boat at Brandenburg, Ky., on the Ohio River, and stole $900 belonging to the Falls City Tobacco Bank, of Louisville, from the custody of the Adams Express Company. The employes of the boat were at the time engaged in protecting the boat from the ice, and the negro took advantage of their momentary absence. Owing to the steamers being unable to make the trips the loss was not discovered till the following Monday. Information was at once telegraphed the Company at its head-quarters in Louisville, and the route agent was immediately dispatched to Brandenburg to investigate the affair.

The agent upon his arrival proceeded to work up the case. Sufficient evidence was obtained to indicate a negro named Lew Brown as the thief. He had left the neighborhood, but on Friday night was captured by Mr. William Sebastian, the Marshal of the town. He was handcuffed and placed in a house, where Mr. Sebastian and the rout agent sat up with him nearly all night endeavoring to elicit further evidence of his guilt, but their efforts were useless. While they were taking him across the country, about five o'clock in the morning, he succeeded in escaping from their charge. The Company at once offered a reward for Brown's recapture, which was effected by Mr. Sebastian Sunday night, the 17th inst., and he was incarcerated in jail. Last Tuesday night Brown was persuaded to make a clean breast of his guilt, and told the agent that the money was secreted in a certain spot in the woods, which he indicated, and where the money, with the exception of $30, was found the following morning. The Grand Jury happening to be in session, the case was brought before its consideration Wednesday morning. A true bill was found, and Judge Murray tried the case the same day, and before sunset Brown was sentenced to the Penitentiary for five years. The swift and successful prosecution of the affair will, of course, reflect credit upon the Company and upon the officers of the law in the country.

A Duke's Sacrifice.

The very large section of Paris society which lives chiefly upon small-talk is far less surprised and interested by the collapse of the Ministry and the crisis in the East than by the eccentric conduct of the young Duke de Galliera. The substitution of one Ministry for another is an event which has long been borne by the non-political world with the most stoic indifference; and as for the Eastern question, it is very wisely agreed that there will be plenty of time to discuss it after the Conference has been opened. But the strange proceedings of such a celebrity as the Duc de Galliera present an urgent topic upon which it is felt that every one at all comme il faut should at once state his opinions. It seems that the young nobleman in question has finally determined to reject the inheritance which legally devolves upon him from his father. He has long been devotedly attached to the noble cause of education, which he promotes in a nowise abstract or sentimental but most practical manner. He has engaged himself as a repetiteur, or what we call a "coach," and toils manfully at his duties for the modest recompense of fifteen francs a day. With this occupation, moreover, and with this income he expresses his firm intention to remain satisfied, and thus the hospitalities and splendors of the ducal house are supposed likely, at least for a time, to vanish from the gay scene in which they were lately so conspicuous. The loss is the greater inasmuch as the young heir represents, through both his parents, a name dear to Paris. The late Duke, although an Italian, had acclimatized himself to such an extent in the French Capital as to be considered practically naturalized, and it would almost seem as if fate had taken the same view of the matter, for he was cut off by death at the very moment when he was about to found a university at Rome.

The Shirt of the Father of His Country Offered, with no Takers.

Burlington Hawkeye.

A dilapidated stranger came into the office yesterday morning, and, with an air of profound mystery, confided to us the information that he was quite wealthy and a great collector of centennial relics but being temporarily embarrassed and away from home, he wished to dispose of a shirt that Washington had once worn for $4 75. He showed us the shirt, but as it appeared to be the only one that Washington ever had and that he had worn it with great assiduity for a couple of hundred years, we hesitated about investing. The man said:

"You won't give 4.75 for a shirt that was worn by the father of his country?"

We said no; at least not unless he could bring us the affidavits of John M. Palmer and Henry Watterson to show that the father of his country washed his neck at least twice during the revolutionary war, and that the tint on the neck-band of the relic was caused by its being used as a washer to the linch-pin of Continental cannon.

"You stand there" the man said, "and look at this priceless bit of linnen, venerable with the dust of ages and the darkening stains of time's inedible pencil, and feel your heart burn and throb and your eyes grow dim and misty with the memory of Valley Forge and Lundy's Lane and the battle of the Nile? Can you stand there and refuse to give $4 75 for this sacred emblem?"

We blushed, and felt very much disconcerted, but the truth was strong within us, and we managed to indicate that we would even refuse to give a much greater sum for it.

"Then," he said, "will you lend me fifty cents on it, and keep it for me until I send you a draft for $35 from New York?"

We had to say that we would not accept the trust. He tucked the sacred emblem under his arm and closed his eyes for a moment and then lifted his hands to heaven.

"My rebuke is just," he said solemnly, "and I am rightfully rebuked and insulted. I trampled my manhood and honor and convictions in the dust when I offered this talisman of liberty to alien hands for base dross. I go. I may starve; I may die in the street, but I never will part or offer to part with this again. I will die with it in my clinging arms, and when I am dead you will find the name of Washington written on my heart."

He went. We watched him disappear down the stairs, and then we went to the alley window and saw him go back into an adjacent wood-shed, where he peeled his closely buttoned coat and inserted himself into the talisman of liberty. And he was seen no more.

Mark Twain as a Reporter.

I reported on a morning newspaper three years, and it was hard work. But I enjoyed its attractions. Reporting is the best school in the world to get a knowledge of human nature and human ways. A nice, gentlemanly reporter—I make no references—is well treated by everybody. Just think of the wild range of his acquaintanceship, his experience of life and society. No other occupation brings a man into such familiar social relations with all the grades and classes of people. The last thing at night—midnight—he goes browsing around after items among the police and jail birds in the lock up, questioning the prisoners, and making pleasant and lasting friendships among the worst people in the world. And the very next evening he gets himself up regardless of expense, puts on all the good clothes his friends have got, goes and takes dinner with the governor or the commander-in-chief of the district, the United States senator, and some more of the upper crust of society. He is on terms with all of them and is present at every gathering and has easy access to every variety of people. Why, I breakfasted almost every morning with the governor, dined with the principal clergyman, and slept in the station house.

A reporter has to lie a little, of course, or they would discharge him. That is why I left it. I am different from Washington; I have a higher and grander standard of principle. Washington could not lie. I can lie, but won't. Reporting is fascinating, but it is so distressing to have to lie so. Lying is bad—lying is very bad. Every individual knows that by experience. I think that for a man to tell a lie, when he cannot make anything by it is wrong.

THE SUN.

1877. NEW YORK. 1877.

The different editions of THE SUN during the next year will be the same as during the year that has just passed. The daily edition will on week days be a sheet of four pages, and on Sundays a sheet of eight pages, or 56 broad columns; while the weekly edition will be a sheet of eight pages of the same dimensions and character that are already familiar to our friends.

THE SUN will continue to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretence, imbecility, and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It will contend for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot boxes and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It will endeavor to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete, and trustworthy accounts of current events, and will employ for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, will be full, accurate, and fearless; and it will doubtless continue to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurpin what the law does not give them, while it will endeavor to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachment of unjustified power.

The price of the daily SUN will be 55 cents a month or $6.50 a year, post paid, or with the Sunday edition $7.70 a year.

The SUNDAY edition alone, eight pages $1.20 a year, post paid.

The WEEKLY SUN, eight of 56 broad columns will be furnished during 1877 at the rate of $1.00 a year, post paid.

The benefit of this large reduction from the previous rate of the WEEKLY can be enjoyed by individual subscribers without the necessity of making up clubs. At the same time, if any of our friends choose to aid in extending our circulation, we shall be grateful to them, and every such person who sends us ten or more subscribers from one place will be entitled to one copy of the paper for himself free. At one dollar a year, postage paid; and considering the size of the sheet and the quality of its contents, we are confident the people will consider THE WEEKLY SUN the cheapest newspaper published in the world, and we trust also one of the very best.

THE INDIANAPOLIS

SENTINEL.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1877.

Every reader and thinking man in the state who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for at least one of the editions of the Sentinel. Farmers, Merchants and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL.

The Weekly Sentinel will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than compare favorably with any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be Newsy, Literary, and contain entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

ILLUSTRATED.

Notices of the Press.

The Magazine has attained in its one quarter century and more of existence to that point where it may be said of it, in the words of Dr. Johnson, "It is vain to blame and useless to praise." The lustre of its long-ago attained reputation has increased as the years have passed, and its future seems as bright if not brighter than at any time since the golden hue of prosperity settled around its later and better years.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Harper's Monthly is marked by the same characteristics which gave it circulation from the first with the better class of readers. It combines reading matter with illustrations in a way to make clear and vivid the facts presented. Pictures merely designed to catch the eye of the ignorant are never inserted.—Chicago Journal.

LE ROI EST MORT.

We knew that the Year was dying
When the midnight chimes began;
Low on his death-bed lying,
Like a worn-out, aged man.
The King, who ruled for a twelvemonth,
With a proud and royal sway,
Must give up his crown and sceptre
When the New Year cries, "Make way!"

His earthly journey was finished,
And so we watched him go;
Old Time came in with his hour-glass,
And finished him with a blow.
He was old and wretched and broken;
We hurried him off at last,
And a glad good-by was spoken;
We pushed him into the past.

So long as the Year was with us,
To use him well we tried;
We gave him a Christmas dinner
The week before he died.
But his guilty conscience was weighted
With many a dreadful crime;
We looked at his corpse, and hated
To think how he spent his time.

No chance for shrift we allowed him,
But buried him in his sin;
With the soft white snow we shroud him,
And carefully wrap him in.
We dug him a grave with laughter,
And smiled as we laid him there;
We shoveled the earth in after,
And packed it down with care.

And back to the earth he never
Can make his way again;
He has finished his work forever
Among the sons of men;
He'll never unlock that portal
So long as the ages roll;
There was nothing about him immortal;
The gray-beard had no soul.

And the sorrow that he brought with him,
The care, the shame, the sin,
We'll try to bury them with him—
His grave shall lock them in.
No mourners are bending o'er him;
No hand a watch-fire keeps;
With those who have gone before him
The uncrowned monarch sleeps.

"BELLE'S BEAU."

A wide, roomy, picturesque old house, such as one sees nowhere but in country towns, set back from the village street among spacious grounds that stretched to a river—a house that would have delighted an artist, with the broad drive before it shaded by yellowing elms, its piazzas overhung with Virginia creeper and scarlet woodbine, and with the gay glimpses of a garden on the right. The hues and color of a superb September afternoon were over everything. Two girls, evidently just from school, stood at the gate, one within, the other leaning on the fence to gossip.

"What is she going to wear?" the latter was asking, with deep interest.

"White silk and pink trimmings."

"Won't she look lovely! What shall you wear yourself?"

"I! Belle says I shan't come in the room at all. She says I'm only a child. I always have to stay off in the nursery with David evenings when there's company. I did think I might come in to her birthday party, though;" and the speaker's lip quivered, and tears stood in her eyes.

"And she won't let you! What a shame! Why, you're 16 years old, though you don't look it. If I was you, I'd—Oh! see, Christy!" she finished in a hurried whisper, as a horseman galloped out of the sunlit vistas of the road, and passed them, "there's Charlton Ross, your sister's beau!"

Christy looked up in time to catch the momentary glance of a pair of dark eyes.

"Why don't you bow?"

She did not answer for a moment. She was watching the gray horse, and noting the careless grace of the rider as he wheeled and dashed through the stone gateway of the Ross mansion.

"Don't you know him?"

"Only just by sight. When he comes to our house I never see him. But sometimes I see him in his grounds. They join ours, you know."

Her companion's eyes followed hers to where, at a little distance, a cluster of gray-stone chimneys rose high under ancient elms.

"Is your sister going to marry him?"

"I don't know. I don't suppose he's ever asked her. Why?"

"Oh! I should think she would if he did, that's all. He's ever so handsome—and rich, I heard Honoria say."

"I must go, Kate; there's Belle calling me now," and with a hurried good-by Christy ran up the walk, rushed into the hall, and tossed her books on the table. A voice from the top of the stairs, rather incisive than sweet, stayed her progress.

"Bring those books straight up to the nursery. And attend to me, Christy. You're to show the ladies their dressing-room to-night. Maria 'll be busy in the kitchen, and there'll be no one but you to do it. You can just stand here at the head of the stairs, and show them which way to go, you know. Your white muslin dress will do to wear, and mamma says it's all ready; and afterward——"

"O Belle! mayn't I come down stairs and see the dancing afterward?"

The pretty blonde at the head of the stairs tossed back her half-braided hair with a gesture of vexation.

"You are the greatest baby."

"But it's your party, Belle, right in the house, and I do so love dancing, if it's only to look on. And I'm 16 years old; and Kate Clapham——"

"Oh! don't quote Kate Clapham, and don't bother me. Wait till it's time for you to go to parties."

"Why, Belle," said a voice from one of the chambers, good-humoredly, "do let the child come down. She won't be in the way, and her dress looks very well. Maria can curl her hair."

"As if she could help being in the way," muttered Belle, turning away with a shrug of the shoulders as she noted Christy's radiant face. "School-girls are always awkward and stupid in company."

"O Belle!——"

"Come, come," said the good-natured voice again, as a portly matron appeared at one of the doors, "don't stay there talking. Come back, Belle, and let me finish your hair."

"Am I to come down?" queried Christy, breathlessly.

There was a hearty "Yes" from her mother, and a sulky one from Belle. Christy waited for no more. Dropping her books on the stair landing, she ran down and out the rear door into the sunshine, tossing up her flat hat exultingly.

"O my! I almost feel as if I was a young lady."

She did not look much like one as she went down to the river, intent on rowing off a little of her excitement. She looked very young indeed, with her slight figure, short dress, and careless curls tied down under the flat hat, as she loosed her boat and pushed out into the stream. And she felt just like a child as she rowed off in the perfect air and sunshine of the autumn day. The ripeness and mist of September were on the russet fields and painted woods. Warm scents came from hedge-blooms and gardens along the banks, and here and there the dark water caught a scarlet reflection from a vivid cardinal-flower or a reddened bough. Christy, rowing lazily down with the currents, rounded a shady bend in the stream, and came upon a little cove, where an adventurous wild grape had climbed over low trees and hung its rare, purpling clusters from pendant boughs. Now, Christy had an especial liking for wild grapes. She no sooner saw them than, with a deft movement of the oars, the boat was pushed into the cove, and the rower, standing on one of the teetering seats, was trying in vain to reach the lowest tempting cluster. It was out of reach. In vain she jumped for it, at the imminent risk of drowning herself; in vain, forgetting her aspirations after young ladyhood, she wished herself a boy, that she might climb the willow from which it hung. She did not know what a pretty picture she made as she stood there in the rich, purple shadows, the richer purple fruit above her, the gold of stray sun rays filtering down through the million leaves above. Her dark, curling hair was pushed back, her cheeks were flushed, and the sleeves had fallen away from her upraised, rounded arms as she stood on tiptoes below the provoking cluster. A voice startled her, and brought her eyes back to the shining level of the river.

"Will you allow me to get you the grapes?"

If Christy had been a young lady she would not have turned scarlet and uttered an exclamation of surprise. Being a school-girl, she did both; for there, beside the boat, was a slender scarlet wherry, the oars lying lengthwise, and the occupant standing within it, cap in hand. Christy did not need to glance twice at the close-cut jetty hair, the bearded lips, the face olive-tinted by the sun, for surely the dark eyes looking down at her could belong to no other than the hero of her girlish dreams—Belle's beau. Nor could the "fated fairy prince," who comes sooner or later into the life of most girls, have come in more attractive guise than in the person of the young aristocrat who stood awaiting Christy's reply, and regarding her with mingled amusement and admiration.

"Excuse me for startling you. I am certain you cannot get the grapes, and, being a head and shoulders taller than you, I am equally certain that I can," he said, with a smile.

"Oh! thank you! I—I do want them. I like grapes."

"Most people do," was the laughing response, as he reached high over Christy's head and plucked two or three bunches. He dropped these in her lap, and reached for more, while she sat in school-girl fashion, holding the gatherings, and stealthily watching the gatherer from under her wide hat-brim. When he at last looked down at her, having filled the bottom of the boat with grapes, to ask if those were enough, she was betrayed into a laugh.

"Oh! a great many more than enough for me. But you like grapes yourself, don't you?"

"Indeed I do. But pray don't do that!" for Christy was eagerly piling fruit-clusters into the wherry. "There isn't room for them and for me too. If you will let me," he added, with a glance at Christy's still-flushing face, "I will eat one bunch here in the shadow before rowing down the river."

There followed a time—Christy never knew how long—of positive enchantment. How it was that she forgot her awe of the elegant Mr. Ross, and began to talk to her companion of her doings and feelings, as she did, will ever remain a mystery. And how thoroughly charming he was! How he listened and laughed at her school-girl relations; and how handsome his dark Spanish face looked under the scarlet boating-cap! And how enthusiastically he talked of a hundred things seen in travel; while Christy listened as enthusiastically, with wide eyes and lips, and fingers stained with the purple juice of the grapes!

Mr. Ross must have forgotten about rowing down the river. The sun was very low and the shadows were growing chilly, when at last he said apologetically, raising himself from his lounging position in the wherry, "I beg your pardon for talking to you so long, and without an introduction, too; but I believe we know each other. You have twice called me by my name, so I know you know me; and I know you are my neighbor, the youngest Miss Evarts."

"Christabel Evarts," she said, simply.

"You must let me row, or rather tow, you home, to pay for my impoliteness. There is only room for one in the wherry, unfortunately; but if you will let me fasten this chain to the bow of your boat, it will save you rowing up stream."

The light of the sunset was on the river, and they seemed to be going straight into the crimson glory. Christy was too much astonished at her position to say much; but Mr. Ross was very merry—"just like any boy," as Christy soliloquized. The latter was still in a state of wonder as she stood again on terra-firma, and watched her cavalier fasten the boat and remove the oars.

"I always do that myself," she said, taking perforce the last clusters of wild grapes which were imperatively thrust upon her. There was a bow and smile, and the scarlet wherry shot out into the stream again. Christy turned and went slowly up to the house, a flaming bunch of cardinals in one hand and the remnants of the grapes in the other.

"Where have you been, Miss Christy?" was the cook's rather cross greeting. "Supper's over an hour since. You'll have to take pickings in the pantry."

Supper was the last thing Christy thought of. The remembrance of the party came back to her, and, after a hurried peep at the decorated parlors, she ran up stairs and began to dress. She was very happy as she industriously scrubbed the stains off her hands. Could it be possible that Mr. Ross—that Mr. Ross whom she had admired afar off as she might have done a young god—had talked to her an hour and rowed her home? And he was coming to the party to-night (Christy shrewdly guessed that the party was given for him); and perhaps he would speak to her again.

Maria curled her hair, and pulled it cruelly, but Christy was very serene. Her white muslin dress and tiny slippers were quickly donned, a few flowers pinned at throat and belt, and she was ready. The parlors were already lighted, and the full moon shone on the piazzas and dewy gardens. There was a subdued bustle in the kitchen, and Belle, a radiant vision of beauty, had already swept down stairs. It seemed as if every one had come. The first strains of music had already sounded, the dance was beginning, and no Mr. Ross yet. Christy was much in demand. So tired was she of fastening sashes, and trains, and bows, of running for pins and powder, that, when at last the dressing-room was empty, she thankfully descended the stairs, and, timidly creeping in at the rear door of the parlor, immediately shielded herself behind a lace curtain.

They were waltzing. What would poor Christy have given to have been "a grown-up young lady!" Her little slippered feet beat the carpet as she enviously watched one gay couple after another whirl past her. And Christy caught her breath suddenly when an opening in the crowd showed her Mr. Ross waltzing with Belle. There he was, transformed again to his aristocratic self, dancing with the haughty, indolent grace that Christy knew so well, as handsome and courteous as a prince. The little observer's cheeks burned while she thought of her afternoon's experience, and how she had reckoned him "just like a boy." And Belle, whirling in graceful circles, with his arm around her, how beautiful she looked!

Nobody noticed Christy. Two or three dances passed. People chattered and laughed about her, promenaded and whirled past her. Sitting still was becoming a torture, and she was casting longing glances at the stairway, when the strains of her favorite waltz floated through the rooms. In sheer despair of enduring it, Christy sprang to her feet, about to seek refuge up-stairs, when some one put the curtain aside. Turning, astonished, she beheld Mr. Ross bending before her and offering his arm.

"I have been trying to find you. Will you do me the honor of waltzing with me?"

Waltz with him! Between fright and delight, Christy stood undecided, turning red and white alternately. Then, forgetting everything but the music and the dangerously-beautiful dark eyes looking into her own, she put her hand on his arm, and in a moment they were circling down the room. Christy's cheeks burned like fire. Whenever she dared raise her eyes from her partner's broadcloth sleeve, she became aware that she was the focus of all eyes. For a while she was dreadfully conscious of this. Then she forgot everything but motion and music, and the handsome head bent so near her own. When at last they paused, and Mr. Ross led her out to the moonlit piazza, the fright came back again, and she nervously withdrew her hand from his arm, and flushed scarlet when he asked her for the next dance.

"Do you care for quadrilles?"

Poor Christy looked wistfully toward the parlor, and pulled a blossom to pieces.

"Oh! I do like to dance—before anything—I'm very much obliged to you, but I can't dance again."

The young autocrat in society, whose invitation to a dance had never before been refused by any lady, looked at Christy in surprise.

"You oughtn't to dance with me; I'm not grown up," said Christy, checking a sob. "They'll all want you to dance with them."

Mr. Ross would have laughed if his politeness would have allowed. He only said, leaning closer to Christy in the moonlight, and speaking low:

"But I want to dance with you."

And Christy, of course, yielded. What a happy evening that was that followed! If people looked amazed at Mr. Ross dancing with a school-girl, it was no matter. He wanted to dance with her, and the thought made her eyes shine and her cheeks glow, as she moved through the quadrille with the prettiest grace in the world. A waltz followed, then a polka, then another quadrille, and still she monopolized the lion of the evening, apparently to the lion's satisfaction.

"And now," he said, as they returned to the piazza, knitting his brows over his dance-card, "now I must go and dance with Miss Honoria Clapham. But I shall come back to you. You will give me the rest of the dances after supper, won't you?"

"Oh, haven't you any names on your card?"

"Not one. But perhaps you would like to dance with some one else?"

"Oh, no! nobody wants to dance with me."

"Then you will wait for me here till after this dance?" he said, hurriedly, as the music sounded.

Christy felt as if she were in a dream, as she sat alone, the moonlight falling around her, the music drifting out to her, waiting for Mr. Ross to come back. She had a rude awkening therefrom. A hand grasped her shoulder so harshly that she almost cried out, and Belle's voice said, in a fierce whisper:

"Go straight up stairs to bed, miss. Do you hear me? Go this instant!" and each pause was emphasized with a shake.

"O, Belle!—"

"Hush! not a word aloud. You've been making yourself ridiculous, and mamma and I are ashamed of you. Go straight round the piazza and up stairs."

Christy never thought of disobeying. Her rose-colored visions all floated away, and she went slowly around the house, and up the back way to her room. There she sat down in the moonlight, with wide eyes and burning cheeks. Oh! what had she done? And finally all her wondering resolved itself in a bitter burst of crying.

When Belle came up stairs, after the last guest had gone, and looked in her sister's room, Christy was lying across the foot of the bed, asleep, her pretty dress all crumpled and her cheeks stained with tears. So her indignation did not break upon Christy's head till morning at the breakfast-table, when her piqued pride sought revenge. Poor Christy! before the meal was through she saw a forward, pert, bold chit, at whom Mr. Ross had laughed in his sleeve, and of whose simplicity he had made capital.

"If you could have seen yourself whirling around with that silly smile, and he paying mock devotion!"

"Did he say anything about me, Belle?"

"Bah! why should he? We had better things to talk about," said her sister, with a little conscious toss of the head.

Why need I tell of the days that followed? Surely every girl will understand the change that came over Christy's school girl life. Why say that her cheeks grew pale, that she had frequent fits of crying, and that the very mention of Mr. Ross' name brought a guilty flush to her cheeks? She would not have met him for the world, and it would have been hard to calculate how many times she avoided him on the street; yet evening after evening she waited and hoped he would come. The evening after the party he had come. She heard him ask for her in the hall, and heard Belle say, with a laugh, that "these school-girls always were deep in study evenings." Then, crouched in the dark, after David had been put to bed, she listened to his rare tenor voice as he sang song after song, his notes blending with Belle's, his laugh mingling with hers. What a fool she had been! she thought, as she closed the French grammar, whose leaves were wet with tears, and crept to bed. He was Belle's beau, that was all.

But after that evening he did not come, which was strange for Belle's beau. Nay, more; his lady mother mentioned, in the course of a call, that they would return to New York in the middle of October.

"We have staid in the country much longer than usual this year," she continued, "and I wish I could persuade Charlton to go to the city at once."

"He wants to stay on Belle's account," mused Christy; "but I wonder he does not come and see her."

One thing was certain; Belle was unusually cross, so cross that Christy was fain to do her studies out of doors or locked in her own room. A little summer-house covered with vines was her favorite retreat, and thither she repaired every afternoon upon returning from school. She had no more river expeditions, for, poor child, she was afraid of meeting the proprietor of the scarlet wherry. But perhaps the secret of her liking the summer-house was because she could see the aforesaid wherry pass and repass, and watch the rower from behind the sheltering vines.

Two weeks passed. Then a crisis came. One Indian-summer afternoon, when Belle and her mother were out calling, Christy was having a romp with the dog on the side piazza. In the midst of this romp she was horrified to perceive Mr. Ross entering the street-gate. Her first impulse was to run away; but, knowing that he had seen her, there was nothing for it but to meet him with flaming cheeks and disordered attire. The dark eyes that had haunted her waking and sleeping dreams so long were lit by a merry smile.

"Why, Miss Christy, if I had not just shaken hands with you I should have supposed you a myth," he said, with one of his bright laughs. "What are you going to say to me in excuse for running away a fortnight ago, and keeping away ever since. Do you know you robbed me of five waltzes?"

"I—I—Belle—that is, mamma—I mean I couldn't stay. And you danced the waltz, you know."

"Indeed I didn't. I searched for you. Not finding you, I sat still the rest of the evening. Then the next night I came over to let you apologize, and you wouldn't come down to see me. I tried to see you on the street, and you always vanished. Now, what have I done?" asked the pet of society, looking sincerely puzzled.

"Oh! did you really not dance?" asked the delighted Christy.

"Really, no. Why do you ask?"

"Oh! I—I thought—they said—"

"Who said?" the young man asked, surprised at the shimmer of tears in Christy's eyes.

"Nobody."

Mr. Ross, not knowing what to say after this climax, sat silent. Christy desperately attempted to explain herself.

"Why, I thought—people thought—you were just dancing with me for fun, and laughed at me because I didn't know how to act and——" Here Christy broke down and burst into tears.

For a moment Mr. Ross looked confounded; then exclaimed:

"Thought I was laughing at you! Why?"

"I know I'm not grown-up, and oughtn't to have gone to a grown-up party. I had never been at one before," sobbed Christy, pitifully.

"Why, my poor little girl, I never thought of laughing at you. You dance like a fairy. Who could have told you such a thing?" he exclaimed, distressed.

No answer. All the sorrows of the past weeks seemed to be crowded into the moment, and Christy cried as if her heart would break.

"I'll never go to a dance again till I am a young woman."

Probably, if she had been a young lady, Mr. Ross would not have acted just as he did. In a moment he had taken her hand, drawn her down on the settee by his side, and was vainly conjuring her not to cry.

"It is too hard of you," he pleaded. I have staid two weeks for no reason in the world but to see my little river-gypsy again, and now she won't look at me."

She did look at him with wide eyes of wonder.

"Staid to see me? Oh! you don't mean so!"

"Why do you say that?"

"You're laughing at me again, as if I didn't know——"

"Well?" was the patient query.

Poor Christy was crimson to the waves of hair on her forehead, but she finished bravely from behind her screen of curls:

"As if I didn't know that you are Belle's beau."

There was a pause. If Christy had dared to look up at the young man's face, she would have seen first bewilderment, then amusement, then another expression harder to define, as he said, rather mischievously:

"Yes, Belle's beau—Christabel's beau!"

Christy uttered a little cry, and hid her face. Mr. Ross began to think he should never see the face again, it was so persistently concealed.

"Won't you look at me? Christy, won't you tell me if I offended you?"

Silence, till he was fain to ask again:

"Won't you tell me whether you care for me?"

"Oh!" was the almost inaudible answer, "you know I do."

"I don't know how I know. I can't see anything but your curls, and I want to see your eyes. Christy, your mother is coming in at the front gate."

The last sentence was effectual. Christy sprang to her feet with the idea of escaping, but found herself detained.

"She is not here yet. Stop just one moment, and tell me if I may ask your mother if she will let you marry me some day. Christy, may I?"

And Christy, blushing like a rose, answered low:

"Yes—some day—when I am a young lady!"—Harper's Bazar.

A School-boy on Corns.

Corns are of two kinds—vegetable and animal. Vegetable corn grows in rows; animal corn grows on toes. There are several kinds of corns: there is the unicorn, Capricorn, corn-dodgers, field corn and the corn, which is the corn you feel most. It is said, I believe, that gophers like corns; but persons having corns do not like to "go fur," if they can help it. Corns have kernels, and some Colonels have corns. Vegetable corn grows on ears, but animal corn grows on the feet at the other end of the body. Another kind of corn is the acorn; these kind grow on oaks, but there is no hoax about the corn. The acorn is a corn with an indefinite article indeed. Try it and see. Many a man when he has a corn wishes it was an acorn. Folks that have corns sometimes send for a doctor, and, if the doctor himself is corned, he probably won't do so well as if he isn't. The doctor says corns are produced by tight boots and shoes, which is probably the reason why, when a man is tight, they say he is corned. If a farmer manages well, he can get a good deal of corn on an acre, but I know of a farmer that has one corn that makes the biggest acher on his farm. The bigger crop of vegetable corn a man raises the better he likes it; but the bigger crop of animal corn he raises the better he does not like it. Another kind of corn is the corn dodger. The way it is made is very simple, and is as follows—that is, if you want to know: You go along the streets and meet a man you know has a corn and a rough character; then you step on the toe that has a corn on it, and see if you don't have occasion to dodge. In that way you will find out what a corn dodger is.—Hartford Post.

Concerning Diphtheria.

President Chandler, of the New York Board of Health, says: "The origin of diphtheria is still a mystery. Many attribute it to sewer gases. It is a germ disease, like small-pox, and is communicable. It often seizes robust children who, at the funerals of playmates, or in school or church, are exposed to its direct influence. Diphtheria prefers, seemingly, children between 1 and 10; the average age of its victims now is about 2 years. Neither heat nor cold, rain nor drought, affect it. Cleanliness and pure air everywhere in a dwelling tend to avert and mitigate it. Where it exists no child should be permitted to kiss strange children, particularly when they have sore throats, or even to play with their toys. When any child in a family has a sore throat, the other children should be kept rigidly apart, in dry, well ventilated rooms. Every throat affection should be promptly treated. The sick child should be watchfully nursed in a well ventilated, sunlit room." President Chandler says further that the dwellers in expensive houses are as often exposed as anybody. Half of the owners of Fifth avenue houses know nothing about their cellars and drain pipes. A few days ago he went into the cellar of a great brown stone house. The current of sewer gas, rushing directly up to the bed-rooms, put out his candle and left him to grope his way out in darkness. The sum of $5 discreetly spent would often save a life.

No More Condemned Cannon for Monumental Purposes.

The House Committee on Military Affairs have reported adversely on all the bills, some twenty in number, providing for grants of condemned cannon, etc., for monumental purposes. The applications were made in behalf of municipal authorities and soldiers' associations in various parts of the country, ranging from Massachusetts to Missouri. The report of the committee is as follows: "These bills call for 101 guns and 100 tons of bronze, which would be equivalent to about 305 guns in all, and 214 cannon balls. Only two of the bills call for iron (twelve) guns; 235 are bronze guns, and of fifty-eight the material is not named. If the latter are to be bronze, the value of the material to the Government would be about $81,000. There have heretofore been granted by previous acts of Congress about 750 guns, which were worth at least $150,000. The large number asked for in the present bills, as well as the number heretofore granted, and the great expense of such donations, have caused your committee to give the matter a careful consideration, and they are of the opinion that these general donations of Government material should be stopped."

Progress in the Far East.

The romance of travel is fading away. Asia is to have the iron horse instead of Arab steeds, and stern facts instead of poetry. Jaffa will be made a first-class harbor, and a railroad will be constructed to the land of Moab. People will soon be able to take a Pullman car instead of a camel's hump, and run through the land at the rate of forty miles an hour. First-class hotels are to be erected at Jerusalem, and summer resorts on the sea of Galilee and on the edge of Mount Lebanon.

A new porcelain manufactory was opened last month at Sevres, by Marshal MacMahon, the old buildings having been found too small for the business demanded of them. The latter have been closed to the public since May, but the new ones are already a popular resort, being only a half hour from Paris by boat.

THE HERONS OF ELMWOOD.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Warm and still is the summer night,
As here by the river's brink I wander;
White overhead are the stars, and white
The glimmering lamps on the hillside yonder.

Silent are all the sounds of day;
Nothing I hear but the chirp of crickets,
And the cry of the herons winging their way
O'er the poet's house in the Elmwood thickets.

Call to him, herons, as slowly you pass
To your roosts in the haunts of the exiled thrushes;
Sing him the song of the green morass,
And the tides that water the reeds and rushes.

Sing him the mystical song of the hern,
And the secret that baffles our utmost seeking;
For only a sound of lament we discern,
And cannot interpret the words you are speaking.

Sing of the air and the wild delight
Of wings that uplift and winds that uphold you,
The joy of freedom, the rapture of flight
Through the drift of the floating mists that enfold you;

Of the landscape lying so far below,
With its towns and rivers and desert places;
And the splendor of light above, and the glow
Of the limitless, blue, ethereal spaces.

Ask him if songs of the Troubadours,
Or of Minnesingers in old black-letter,
Sound in his ears more sweet than yours,
And if yours are not sweeter and wilder and better.

Sing to him, say to him, here at his gate,
Where the boughs of the stately elm are meeting,
Some one hath lingered to meditate,
And send him unseen this friendly greeting;

That many another hath done the same;
Though not by a sound was the silence broken;
The surest pledge of a deathless name
Is the silent homage of thoughts unspoken.

MRS. JINKS went out to a pond to skate yesterday. She put her skates on, struck out, ran over a boy, knocked down a man, pulled the coat-tail off another fellow, shouted "Here I come, head me somebody." Man tried to head her with an ice-hook, ripped her dress, threw up her hands, shut her eyes, screamed and disappeared through a hole made by ice-cutters. She was fished out alive and brought home on a dray, looking like a clothes-pin dressed in a postage-stamp. As a straight-forward "skeeter" she's unchained lightning, but she carries too much tilter and bustle aboard to handle herself on ice, and she doesn't "steer" well. Jinks gave her skates away to a boy.

The Benefit of a Wooden Leg.

French juries often astonish the world by the curious way in which they discover "extenuating circumstances" in favor of the culprits brought before them, but it has been reserved for an enlightened Belgian jury to surpass anything ever heard of in this line. A man named Brin was found guilty of murdering both his first and second wife, but, according to the report in the papers, he was recommended to mercy on account of his wooden leg, and got off with hard labor for life instead of death.

WORN-OUT MONEY.

What is Done with the Redeemed Currency.

[From the Washington Chronicle.]

The national bank notes and fractional currency, when first turned out of the treasury, are very pretty to look at. Their crispness is a particularly attractive feature, and the bright green and moderate quantity of rose color are very pleasing to the eye. The engraving, too, is really artistic, and, taken in its entirety, Uncle Sam's money, when new, may be pronounced very pretty money indeed. But, unfortunately, the national bank note and the 10, 25 or 50-cent fractional currency pieces are subjected to very hard usage. First, they may be handled by the dapper bank clerk, who understands their manipulation perfectly, and from whose hands they pass none the worse for the contact. But the man who receives them next may be a grocer's clerk, who, disregarding their beauties, uses his unwashed digits that may a few moments previously have been engaged in handling a nice flitch of bacon, to count the bills. The pork butcher may be the next one to have temporary possession of the representatives of value, and while in his custody they are sure to take on more or less of the badge of his calling. Probably they repose next in the wallet of a fashionable lady, and the odors of the grease are neutralized by musk, ylang-ylang, or some one of the many popular perfumes. Next they may fall into the hands of a careless young man who uses no pocket-book, but makes his vest pocket the neutral ground where greenbacks, cigarettes and odds and ends of all kinds meet on friendly terms. The vicissitudes of currency are many and varied, and there is little room for wonder that the presses in the Treasury Department find constant occupation, as they do, in turning out fresh supplies of paper that only too soon becomes really "filthy lucre." The destruction is very rapid, and one of the chief occupations of a large force in the treasury is that of subjecting the condemned cash to the processes by which it is finally wiped out of existence. About two years since it was the custom to burn the redeemed bank notes, bonds and fractional currency, but a more economical and in every way more acceptable plan is now pursued. On the White lot, immediately in front of the treasury, may be noticed two brick buildings. The largest of these is the machine-shop, carpenter-shop, and general repairing establishment of the treasury. The other is also an adjunct, and is known as the macerating establishment. Here it is that the frolicsome currency, after it has been made worthless by reason of too much abuse, is converted into pulp that finds its way to the paper manufactories, where it is reconverted into paper. Here also the bond rendered useless by redemption at expiration or some other cause is made indistinguishable from, let us say mortar, by an extremely simple process. In the first place, the fractional currency is subjected to a most rigid scrutiny and count for the purpose of detecting counterfeits, and then it is turned over to men who with a machine cancel each note so effectually that by no possibility could it ever be used again; another count is then gone through with for the purpose of checking the operators of the machine, and preventing them from appropriating any of the redeemed money. After the canceling the money is next cut in half, and once more the separate halves are counted, and when ascertained to be all right are placed in boxes for the purpose of removing them to the macerating building before alluded to. These are securely locked while in transit from the treasury to the macerating establishment, where they are opened in the presence of three representatives of the treasury, one, acting in behalf of the Secretary, another for the Treasurer, and the last for the Register, for each batch is usually accompanied by a quantity of bonds. From the boxes the bonds, which are cut and canceled thoroughly, and the fractional currency are emptied into the macerating cylinder, which is also locked with three separate locks, the keys of which are held respectively by the officers named above. The process of macerating is very simple. The macerating cylinder is revolved by a sixty-horse power engine, and at the same time jets of steam are injected into it, which speedily soften the mass of paper. The moistened paper by its own gravity keeps dropping, and is reduced to a pulp by the sharp ridges which form the inside of the cylinder. After being subjected to this treatment for about thirty-six hours the cylinder is unlocked by the three officials and the pulp is then allowed to fall on an elevator, which conveys it to a large tub, where it is thoroughly cleansed, and all fatty matter removed by the agency of quicklime and soda.

The washing of the pulp completes the process, and it is finally dumped in a heap to lie until purchased. Yesterday about $4,500,000 worth of fractional currency was placed in the macerator. This was an unusually large batch, the average "burnings," as the macerations are known, being much less. There is now an immense quantity of the pulp on hand, probably several hundred tons. This will be sold to paper manufacturers. The rate usually paid for the pulp is in the vicinity of $5 per ton, and the principal purchaser is Mr. George F. Hill, of this city, who manufactures from it a very nice article of paper at his mills in Georgetown. An approximate estimate of the quantity of pulp annually made out of fractional currency or bonds at this establishment is 650 tons. The proceeds resulting from the sale of this may be accounted as a net gain over the old method, as the burning of the money or bonds required the expenditure of as much labor as does the present macerating system, and consumed a great deal more coal. The whole work of converting the played-out money at this place is under charge of Capt. ——, and under the immediate supervision of —— Barnett. The national bank notes are converted into pulp by the centrifugal process inside of the treasury building, the method adopted being almost in every respect similar to that pursued with the fractional currency and bonds, as described above. The improvement on the burning plan is too obvious to need extended mention. Extraordinary precautions were required to keep the destroyed money from flying out of the furnace chimney, and the odor of the burned money was an intolerable nuisance, and was very injurious to the health of those residing in the neighborhood of the place where it was carried on. The last reason would have been a sufficient one for changing the method, if the additional one of making absolute saving to the Government did not suggest itself.

WEBSTER.

Reminiscences of the Godlike Daniel—The Magical Effect of His Eye—The Old Black Mare.

Capt. John Codman, who was brought up at Dorchester, Mass., where Daniel Webster once lived, sends the following to the New York Evening Post: "In his home Mr. Webster was sometimes, but not often, morose. He generally delighted in the pleasures of the young, and was often a participant in our sports. Fletcher, his eldest son, who gave his life to his country at the battle of Bull Run, was a year older than myself, and we were schoolmates.

"Master Pierce, the father of Mr. Henry L. Pierce, of Boston, kept the school on Milton hill. To this it was a walk of a mile for me, and of a mile and a half for Fletcher. One day, thinking to pleasantly vary the mode of locomotion, Fletcher, during the absence of his father, took his favorite black mare from the stable, and, calling for me on the way, we two rode bareback to the school, taking the precaution to tie the mare in the lane a little short of the school-house, intending to ride home at noon, as it was Saturday. But Mr. Webster unexpectedly returned to his house, and, missing the mare, suspected the escapade. The first notice we had of our detection was the appearance of his stately form at the door fronting our seat. He fixed his eyes upon us, and they spoke even louder than the deep voice that followed. 'Where is the mare?' Master Pierce dropped his ferule, the class reciting became breathlessly silent, and the culprits shrank into absolute nothingness. I could never liken my sensation on that occasion to anything else than the fear of Cain when the missing Abel was required at his hands.

"Fletcher at last managed to gather himself together, and walked with his father down to the place where the beast was tied. Mr. Webster fastened her by the bridle to the back of his chaise, and not a word did he say about the misdemeanor to his son or to me, either then or afterward; but it was the last time we went to school on that black mare, and nothing would have induced us to repeat the experiment. There are old men of middle age who can remember the magical influence of Mr. Webster's eye, and they can readily imagine the scene I have described. His voice was majestic, but his eye was almost superhuman.

"An anecdote with which I shall close these reminiscences, and for the truth of which I can vouch, for I was present on the occasion, will forcibly illustrate this:

"One Sunday a student from Andover occupied the pulpit, my father not intending to take any part in the exercises. The young minister got along very well with the opening prayer and the scripture lesson, but when he had read only a verse or two he became confused, stammered, and at last his voice failed him entirely. As he seemed to be taken suddenly ill, my father finished the services, preaching an extemporaneous discourse. On the way home in the carriage, the young man, who by that time had quite revived, being pressed for an explanation of his conduct, confessed: 'Well, sir, it was merely an unaccountable nervousness. Just as I was reading the second stanza of the hymn, a gentleman came into church and sat down in a broad-aisle pew directly before me, fixing such great, staring black eyes upon me that I was frightened out of my wits.'

"Until he was then told, he did not know that Daniel Webster was a member of the congregation or an inhabitant of the town."

The Deserted Farms of New England

I often hear people deplore the depopulation of the hilly portions of New England, and the emigration of our hardy and industrious farmers to the more fertile and more easily cultivated Western prairies. That the emigrants are themselves generally benefited by the change is sufficiently evident; then why deplore their departure? It is like lamenting the prosperity of our friends. Does the sight of the abandoned farms, the yawning cellar-holes, surrounded by a few decaying apple trees, now so common on our hillsides, produce sadness? The saddest sight to me is a strong, active man toiling year after year on one of our rocky, hilly, almost uncultivatable and soilless New England farms, remote from neighbors, from schools, and almost all the social advantages which help to make life enjoyable, and achieving (all that it is possible for him to achieve) only a scanty subsistence for himself and family. Children reared on such a farm may be robust and strong, but if they possess enterprise, ambition, I had almost said intelligence, they will flee to the West, to the city, to the manufactory or behind the merchant's counter at the first opportunity.—Cor. Boston Cultivator.

Chinese in California.

According to the testimony of a missionary among the Chinese in California, there are in the State about 60,000 natives of China. Those in San Francisco pay about $1,000,000 in rents. Seven hundred and fifty in that city attend the evening mission school. About 2,500 are on the rolls of the evening schools throughout the State. About 1,000 go every Sunday to the Sunday-schools. Of the inmates of the prison at San Quentin, numbering 1,158 in all, 199 are from China, 160 from Ireland, 611 are native Americans, and 184 from other foreign countries. The official report of the almshouse of San Francisco, for the year ending July 1, 1875, shows no Chinese inmates. Three hundred Chinese have been received as members of the Protestant churches of the State. According to the same witness, whose testimony was given to the committee of Congress, there are in addition to these church members 700 Chinamen in Christian associations or societies for learning Christian doctrine.

THE annual death rate in London now averages 18 per 1,000, in Edinburgh 12, in Glasgow, 21, in Dublin 19.

A CORRESPONDENT in Oregon, Mo., communicates some observations on weather phenomena, especially upon the influence of forests on rainfall: "When the earth has become dry, parched, and very warm, on occasions of thunderstorms, I have often," he writes, "noticed for hours, while it was thundering overhead, the mist, falling from the storm clouds, to roll back after nearly reaching the earth, in the form of lighter vapor. I think this rain, or mist, in falling passed down to the stratum of very hot air on the earth's surface, and became a steam, large volumes of white vapor forming suddenly and rolling back and up. Now I am confident that, if the earth had been shaded by trees this rain would have fallen on the ground."

A Magazine for Farmers.

Col. George E. Waring, of Ogden Farm, near Newport, R. I., will soon begin the publication in SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY of a series of papers of special interest to those living in the country, in which will be considered the advantages afforded to farmers from a concentration of their houses and farm-buildings into villages, especially as a relief from the dullness and isolation of remote farm-houses, as affording better education for children, and as making the farmer's life more attractive to the young. Another paper will treat of the work to be done by "Village Improvement Associations." Still another paper will give explicit instruction as to the means for giving a good sanitary condition to the village and to the country house. In the for 1877, other papers are announced that will be of especial interest to farmers. Among these, Mr. Charles Barnard's articles on various industries of Great Britain, including the History of some Experiments in Co-operation, a description of the British Workman's Home, and Clarence Cook's articles on Household and Home Decoration—all profusely and elegantly illustrated; a department called the World's Work; another entitled Home and Society, which will treat of domestic life, the care of children, etc.

PROSPECTUS OF SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY

GEN. M'CLELLAN'S TRAVELS, begun in the January SCRIBNER, with "A Winter on the Nile," will run on through the year. There will be three serial stories:

"NICHOLAS MINTURN,"

by that popular author, DR. HOLLAND (the Editor), author of "Bitter-Sweet," "Kathrina," "Timothy Titcomb's Letters," "Arthur Bonnicastle," and the story of "Sevenoaks."

The scene of this latest novel is laid on the banks of the Hudson. The hero is a young man who has been always "tied to a woman's apron-strings," but who, by the death of his mother, is left alone in the world—to drift on the current of life—with a fortune, but without a purpose. Another serial, "His Inheritance," by Miss Trafton, will begin on the completion of "That Lass o' Lowrie's," by Mrs. Hodgson Burnett.

Saxe Holm, Tourguenoff, Boyesen, and McKay will contribute short stories. Saxe Holm's new story, will be printed in two or three monthly parts. Tourguenoff's new story will appear simultaneously with its publication in Russia and France, and the magazine will also publish a critical paper on Tourguenoff, by Prof. Boyesen, accompanied by a portrait of the famous Russian patriot.

FARMER BASSETT'S ROMANCE,

The Editorial Department will continue to employ the ablest pens both at home and abroad. There will be letters on literary matters from London, by Mr. Welford.

The Department of Bric-a-Brac will be filled with the choicest bits of American humor.

Scribner's Monthly is the only American magazine (besides St. Nicholas for the Boys and Girls, by the same publishers) that has found any considerable number of readers abroad. Scribner is issued simultaneously in London and in New York.

The Weekly Times (English) says:

"It puts to shame all our monthlies."

15 MONTHS FOR $4.

To new subscribers who wish to get the opening chapters of "That Lass o' Lowrie's," we will send 15 numbers for $4.00, beginning with the magnificent Midsummer Holiday number (August, 1876), and ending with October, 1877. $4.00 a year; 35 cents a number. Postage prepaid. ☞ Send 25 cents for a specimen number. SCRIBNER AND CO., 743 Broadway, N. Y.

"Down in the Mouth."

When there is a continual dropping down into the back of the mouth, with irritation and inflammation of the nasal cavities and throat, with hawking, spitting, and a sense of fullness about the head, be not deceived or fancy it a simple cold. You are afflicted with that scourge of this climate, Catarrh, the forerunner of Consumption. In its early stages a few bottles of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will effect an entire cure. When confirmed, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be used in connection with the Remedy. These standard medicines have been before the public many years, and their use has been attended with the most gratifying success. A full discussion of Catarrh and its rational treatment is contained in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," a book of over nine hundred pages, illustrated with two hundred and eighty-two engravings, bound in cloth and gilt, price, post-paid, $1.50. Address, Publishing Department, World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y.

THERE can be no mistake about it, "Matchless" plug tobacco takes the lead. Old fine-cut chewers say it gives better satisfaction and is cheaper than fine cut. You cannot be imposed upon, as each plug has the words, "Matchless P. T. Co." on a wooden tag. Try it once and you will always chew it. Manufactured by the Pioneer Tobacco Company, New York.

DURANG'S Rheumatic Remedy will most positively cure any case of rheumatism, gout, neuralgia or lumbago on the face of the earth, no matter of how long standing. It is taken internally, the only way the disease can be reached, and cures quickly and permanently. Price, one dollar a bottle. For sale by wholesale and retail druggists everywhere.

THERE is, probably, no way in which we can benefit our readers more than by recommending to them for general use Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. It is adapted to almost all the purposes of a family medicine, and as a specific for coughs, colds, whooping cough, soreness of the chest, lame stomach, rheumatism, spitting of blood, and all lung difficulties, it has no equal that ever we saw or heard of.

THE propriety of giving condition medicine to horses, cattle and sheep, was discussed, and admitted by many of the Agricultural Societies throughout the State last fall, and we believe that in every case but one they decided in favor of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders. Good judgment.

WE WOULD CALL the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Clark's food for animals, in another column. It is a matter of much interest to feeders and dairymen, and is highly recommended.

VEGETABLE Pulmonary Balsam, the great New England cure for coughs, colds and consumption. Cutler Bros. & Co.'s, Boston, only genuine.

A Valuable Gift.—By an arrangement with the Publisher, we will send every reader of this paper a sample package of Transfer Pictures free. Send 3-cent stamp for postage. They are highly colored, beautiful, and easily transferred to any object, so as to imitate the most beautiful painting. Agents wanted. J. L. PATTEN & CO., 162 William Street, New York.

HOG CHOLERA

CLARK'S I X L FOOD FOR HOGS is a sure preventive of Cholera, besides fattening the animal in fully one-fourth less time than it takes to fatten without it. This food is exceedingly nutritious, contains neither mineral nor poison—is purely vegetable and entirely harmless. Humans can eat of it with no unpleasant effects. It is its health-giving properties alone which produce the above results. The outlay, trifling as it is, is not an expense, but an actual profit to the feeder, besides securing him against loss from disease. Quantity to be fed, one-half pint daily with regular feed.

CLARK'S I X L FOOD FOR COWS keeps the animal in a perfectly healthy condition, increases the flow of milk and improves the quality and flavor of the butter—making it as rich as equal to May butter. The same is true of this as of the Hog Food. It contains neither mineral nor poison—is purely vegetable. Quantity to be fed, one pint daily with regular feed.

PENSIONS

Burnett's Cocoaine, Burnett's Cocoaine, Burnett's Cocoaine,

For promoting the growth of, and Beautifying the Hair, and rendering it Dark and Glossy.

The COCOAINE holds, in a liquid form, a large proportion of deodorized COCOA-NUT OIL, prepared expressly for this purpose. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of the human hair.

LOSS OF HAIR.

BOSTON, July 19.

MESSRS. JOSEPH BURNETT & CO.:

For many months my hair had been falling off, until I was fearful of losing it entirely. The skin upon my head became gradually more and more inflamed, so that I could not touch it without pain.

By the advice of my physician, to whom you had shown your process of purifying the Oil, I commenced its use the last week in June. The first application allayed the itching and irritation. In three or four days the redness and tenderness disappeared, the hair ceased to fall, and I have now a thick growth of new hair.

Yours, very truly, SUSAN R. EDDY.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

EAST MIDDLEBORO', MASS., June 9, 1864.

MESSRS. BURNETT & CO.:

When my daughter's hair came off she had been afflicted with neuralgia in her head for three years. She had used, during that time, many powerful applications. These, with the intense heat caused by the pains, burned her hair so badly that in October, 1861, it all came off, and for two years after her head was as smooth as her face.

Through the recommendation of a friend, she was induced to try your COCOAINE, and the result was astonishing. She had not used half the contents of a bottle before her head was covered with a fine young hair. In four months the hair has grown several inches in length, very thick, soft and fine, and of a darker color than formerly.

With respect, WM. S. EDDY.

PENSIONS!

ARE PAID TO EVERY SOLDIER who was disabled while in the service of the United States, by reason of wounds, accidental injuries, hernia, or rupture (no matter how slight), loss of eye-sight, diseased eyes, disease of the lungs or heart, rheumatism, loss of hearing, varicose veins of the legs, piles, falling back of measles, or chronic diarrhœa. Even the loss of a finger or toe, in any way, by accident or otherwise, or any other injury or disease, entitles a soldier to a pension. Pensions and bounties procured where discharge papers are lost. New discharges obtained when lost. FULL BOUNTIES PAID TO ALL SOLDIERS who were discharged by reason of wounds, rupture, or accidental injuries, under new laws. PENSIONS INCREASED. It is from 10 to 15 years since many received their wounds, or the disease for which they were pensioned; in some manner the disability has increased from what it was at first. Previous to March 3, 1873, invalid pensioners could not draw more than $8 per month, no matter how badly disabled. Now $18 may be divided between $8 and $18; for invalid pensioners after the $8, the pension is raised at $10, $12, $14, $16 and $18. When the pensioner can't labor, $24. Under the old law $1 was given for finger or thumb, now it is $4 to $5 per month. So apply at once and get an increase. No charge for advice, and no fees until claims are paid. Thousands are yet entitled to pensions and bounty, and don't know it. CIRCULARS FREE. "SOLDIERS' REVIEW," an eight page paper on pensions and bounties for 75 cents per year. Specimen copy FREE; send address on "postal." Send 25 cents and get a book with all pension, bounty and land laws. It shows what every soldier and his heirs are entitled to; it contains all acts of Congress for 15 years past, including last Congress. Address (with stamp), P. H. CLARK, 818 LOCUST ST., ST. LOUIS, MO.

CATARRH

SORELY AFFLICTED.

J. O. Bosworth & Co., Denver, Col.: Gentlemen,—Prompted by a fellow-feeling for those afflicted with Catarrh, I wish to add my testimony in behalf of SANFORD'S RADICAL CURE FOR CATARRH. I have been sorely afflicted with this fearful disease for four years, and have tried every known remedy without avail, until I bought a bottle of the above CURE from you, which gave me almost instant relief. It being a constitutional as well as a local remedy, I believe it to be all that is claimed for it, a Radical Cure for Catarrh.

Very truly yours, WM. AMETIVE,
DENVER, Sept. 28, 1875. With Jenson, Bliss & Co.

GREATLY AFFLICTED.

Messrs. J. O. Bosworth & Co., Denver: Gentlemen,—I take pleasure in recommending SANFORD'S RADICAL CURE FOR CATARRH to all who are afflicted with this disease. I was greatly afflicted with it for a long time, and cured it with two bottles of the above CURE. About a year afterwards I was again taken with Catarrh quite severely, and immediately sent for another bottle, which fixed me all right, giving me relief from the first dose. I am confident that this remedy will do all that is claimed for it, and more too. Wishing you success in its introduction, I am, very truly yours,

DENVER, Oct. 4, 1875. A. W. SMITH, of Smith & Doll.

TRIED EVERYTHING.

Messrs. J. O. Bosworth & Co., Denver, Col.: Gentlemen,—I have used SANFORD'S RADICAL CURE FOR CATARRH, and it has given perfect satisfaction. I have tried almost everything, and it is the only thing that has given me relief. I therefore take pleasure in recommending its use to all afflicted with Catarrh of any kind, and offer this as my testimony to its benefits.

Very truly, W. S. DECKER.

COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTERS

Afford the most grateful relief in all Affections of the Chest and Lungs.

CHRONIC PLEURISY CURED.

MESSRS. WEEKS & POTTER:

Gentlemen,—Having for many months past suffered with a very lame side, called by my physician Chronic Pleurisy, caused by a former injury and strain, and for which I used many prescriptions and liniments, as well as the so-called rheumatic cures, without the least benefit, my physician recommended one of your COLLINS' VOLTAIC PLASTERS, which, to my great surprise, relieved the pain and soreness almost immediately, and I have been able to attend to my household affairs ever since with perfect ease and comfort, whereas before the application of your invaluable plaster I was scarcely able to do anything. I consider them inestimable, and shall with pleasure recommend them to the afflicted. Yours respectfully,

Mrs. FRANCES HARRIMAN.

ORLAND, Me., April 21, 1875.

Auburn Courier.

W. G. THOMAN, Editor.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 11, 1877.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

MONDAY, January 8th, 1877.

DEAR COURIER—Not for twenty years has Washington been favored with so heavy a fall of snow as now lies over her streets and parks. Great banks of the fleecy substance lines each side of every street. The street car folks pile it away from their lines in the center of the street, while the citizens heave it from their sidewalks, and thus it is forced into narrow quarters, and in some places it is banked up as high as your head. It is a troublesome element to contend with, in large quantities, and is more of a plague than a blessing, in large cities, with the exception that it requires the employment of hundreds of laborers, who are anxious for a job. The street railroads have a terrible time and four horses can scarcely pull a car through. The avenue being much wider than ordinary streets, it is reduced to practical use, by innumerable sleighs passing to and fro. Saturday I looked over the morning papers and noticed the following: "Arrangements have been made by some of the merchants on the Avenue to have a grand sleighing carnival on the Avenue this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The District Commissioners have given their consent to the enterprise, and a force of police have been detailed to preserve order. All those who enter into the procession are expected to be in masquerade costume. The procession will start from the foot of the Capitol promptly at 3 o'clock p. m."

Long before the appointed hour sleighs of all descriptions were out, some racking, though I did not see any that could strike as good a gait as W. S., of Auburn.

At about 3 o'clock the masqueraders began to make their appearance, and, as sleigh after sleigh dashed past bearing their burdens of grotesque and many-hued humanity, the Avenue presented an appearance of great brilliancy and real fun and merriment prevailed everywhere. The sides of the street were crowded with pedestrians, who seemed to derive almost as much enjoyment from their positions as spectators as did the merry-makers themselves. The line of the Avenue. from the Treasury to the Capitol, was crowded with sleighs of every description from the swan-like cutter to the drygoods box on runners. King Fun reigned supreme, care and trouble seemed for the moment forgotten, and as the gay parties of "fair women and brave men" glided past the laugh and merry joke mingled—

Keeping time, time, time,
In a sort of Runic rhyme
To the tintinnabulation that so musically wells
From the bells, bells, bells.

Noticable among the numerous grotesque and amusing devices resorted to by the masqueraders to create laughter was the Louisiana returning board. This consisted of a primitive sled, on which was seated several men with complexions darkened by intimidation and cork, plug hats encircled with white bands, busily engaged in the absorbing an arduous task of "stuffing" a ballot-box. This exhibition afforded much merriment to the spectators along the Avenue, and peals of laughter and shouts of "Hurrah for the Pelican State, "Hip, hip for the bull-dozers," "Go it Kellogg, Old Zach's behind," and the like, resounded on all sides as the sled and its occupants dashed past.

But of all the laughable, side-spliting "rigs" that ever presented itself on the Avenue, was a tandem team, consisting of an aged mule and broken down, spavined horse, pulling a big log of wood, about six feet long, mounted on four slanting hickory sticks, which were fixed into a pair of wooden runners. Seated upon the mule was a fellow that wore a dilapidated high hat and a suit resembling Billy Emerson's make-up in the "Old Clothes Dealer." Under the sad-eyed mule was fixed a big dinner bell. The jaded beast trudged along "with no pride of ancestry, or hope of posterity," followed by the bad specimen of that noble animal, the horse, upon whose back was seated another curious looking nondescript.

Two funny specimens of humanity straddled the log of wood with their legs dangling toward the snow—the chap in the rear dressed as a fat woman and hugging his companion in front in order to keep an equilibrium. Roars of laughter greeted this funniest of teams Among the cutters in the fast flying procession was a perfect imitation of a skiff, painted blue and bearing the name of "Rover." The occupants were unknown, as they wore false faces.

The many handsome equipages were objects of surprise to all, no one imagining that Washington could afford such a display of this style of vehicle. One or two gorgeous four-horse sleighs were noticeable, though the smaller ones, more beautiful in design, and more graceful in build and appearance, attracted fully as much attention and comment. Through the day the street was thronged with pedestrians, but when the hour arrived at which the offices were closed the sidewalks of the Avenue from the street presented an appearance the like of which has not been seen since the last presidential inauguration. With gusto the liberated clerks joined in the prevailing merriment, and

With no thought of sorrow,
No care for the morrow,
They joined in the frolic and fun.

Sitting in the House restaurant the other day, I saw two men enter who seemed to enjoy great complacency and comfort. They had not fed upon disappointment—their clothes were warm and elegant—each of them would weigh two hundred, and the flush of abundant wine spread rosily over their broad faces. I had seen one so often, that I ask an acquaintance near by who he was. "That is old——, one of the most famous lobbyists ever known. I am told that often in a single session he would make two hundred thousand dollars, but lobbying does not pay as it did the people look after their own bills now-a-days." My friend Jim continued, "Old —— has a claim for a large amount which he hopes to get through some day, and he has been boarding in one house for three years without paying a cent on the strength of that claim! Bah," and Jim gave a sniff, calling forth a "Why, Jim," from his pretty wife whose Boston sensibilities were shocked at such a statement. "Bless your dear little heart, that is nothing in Washington. There are as many unclaimed trunks in Washington boarding houses as there were watches pawned by impecunious individuals at the Centennial." "Isn't in awful," said the little wife, but it did not astonish me in the least. I had seen a wrathful letter sent by a much enduring landlady to a very elegant gentleman in New York, who had sweetly promised a draft from Gotham, and "meanwhile, my dear lady I will leave my trunk for security." Six months he had eaten, drank and slept in that house, had sauntered from the door every morning fitting on his dainty gloves, smoking his Havana with airy grace, and looking so irreproachably respectable, that woman-like she trusted him. After waiting two months she opened the trunk and found a full set of patent office reports, a pair of old boots, and some terribly demoralized old shirts. I think this has something to do with the high prices now charged by professional boarding houses.

Well I suppose you want to hear something about the Presidential question "as viewed from a Washington' standpoint. The late interviews Grant has had with reporters are suggestive. In one of these he favored a new election, and that has been somewhat talked about for a few days past. But it finds no official favor with the larger element of the people. They know that Tilden and Hendricks have been elected and they want them peaceably inaugurated. I can say this much truthfully, that public opinion is rapidly shaping in favor of the Democrats. I met Col. H. on the streets to-day, and in a short conversation he emphatically declared that, though he was a Republican, he honestly believed that Tilden and Hendricks should be inaugurated. There are many others on his side of the same impression. The recount in Florida has convinced many of the most intelligent Republicans, that great frauds have been used there to count that State for Hayes. Many of the prominent papers, which worked for Hayes in the campaign are taking strong grounds against these frauds.

The Hartford, (Conn.) Courant, Gen. Hawley's paper says: "The political situation in the three Republican southern States [as he calls Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina] is gloomy * * * and there is among the Republicans of the North general dissatisfation with the corruption and bad management which have prevailed in those States. A feeling has been gaining ground that the reconstruction measures have been a failure, and have resulted in placing the States too often at the mercy of mere adventurers, who not only made use of the ignorant voters to keep themselves in power, but who prevented the Republican party from receiving the support which it had hoped to receive from the old Whig element and Union element in the South." Zach Chandler will try to count in Hayes, but the great masses of the people will protest, and stand by those who have been their choice. The conspirators should look at one fact, that is more potent than returning boards. Take the states of Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, stretching from the Eastern sea to the Father of Waters, and casting nearly one-half the votes given at the late election, and look at their admonition to the speculative Yankee at the East, to the wayward dreamer of the Empire on the Pacific, and the blotted and broken South. Here is their vote, the great heart-throb of the nation.

Those were the States that were the bulwark of safety for free government in the tempest of battle, and they speak million-tongued in the present peril, and gave Tilden 8,665 votes more than they gave Hayes in a poll of 3,762,418, and they cast a majority of 57,904 against the Republican candidate. And who of all these millions of voters would follow the plumes of the Chandlers and Camerons and the Mortons to deadly conflict, that they might rule in revolutionary defiance of the plainly and legally expressed will of the American people? There would not be a corporals guard to follow them outside the office holders. The conspirators are simply trying to commit suicide in their attempts to precipitate this people into a revolution.

The next house will be Democratic by from 13 to 20 majority, and the people may expect a continued economy for two years longer. The present House will still cut down the appropriation bill, because the fact has been developed that the government can be run much cheaper, notwithstanding the hue and cry raised by the radicals last July that the efficiency of the public service would be crippled by the economy practiced by the House. During the political campaign the public debt statement showed a monthly decrease, and our Republican papers there took it up and joyfully said, "Now look what we are doing for you, fellow countrymen, reducing the public debt." As soon as the campaign was over, there was a marked increase shown by these statements, and the last one published last week, shows an increase of $3,585,142.20 during December. The investigating committee of the House will all be here this week, and will make their report in a few days. In South Carolina the State is conceded to Hayes and Hampton, but the other two States it will be shown, elected the Tilden electors, backed by evidence of the strongest character.

TOM.

THE WHISKY RING PLAN.

From the first the Rings have been anxious to get Hayes in. Their first attempt was to vote him in; the last to count him in. They failed at the first and now they begin to see that they are likely to fail in the second. The third plan is to filibuster him in. That is to say, the Senate is to talk against time, from the second Wednesday in February until the fourth of March when the new House comes into being. This new House is to be called together by the President, and the Republicans claiming to control a majority of the States will elect Gov. Hayes, President. This is the plan now avowed with some thin veil of words, by W. M. Grosvenor, editor of the New York Public. Of Mr. Grosvenor himself, it is scarcely necessary to say more than that the evidence adduced in the whisky trials at St. Louis, showed him to have recieved money from members of the Ring, while an editor there, and the only answer he could make was, that he had given his note for the money and expected to pay it! The Nation made the caustic remark about this, that it showed how unfortunate it was "for Reformers to have relations with Rings!"

It is difficult to conceive of a more dangerous or dishonest scheme. It simply means that the Republicans failing in every other mode of getting the Presidency, shall steal it by parliamentary filibustering. If Gov. Hayes should gain the Presidency in this way, would there ever afterward be any security or certainty about an election. Five times during the last nine Presidential election, the Houses which were to count the electoral vote have been of opposite politics. Has it ever been proposed before that either of them should, by filibustering, reverse the verdict of the people when it did not suit them? If this should be done once, have we any guarantee that it will not be done again? Our Government will then be at the mercy of either House of Congress which choose to cheat the people out of their rights. This idea is about as valuable to society as the invention of a new burglar's jimmy, or of a new style of brass knuckles would be. It simply adds one to the many known methods of political rascality. We wish Mr. Grosvenor and his Ring joy of his scheme.

Bayonet Rule.

Governor Hendricks, in his Message to the Indiana Legislature, gave utterences to the following forcible and Statesmanlike remarks on the use of the military in the South:

In my message two years ago it was my duty to refer the invasion by military force of free representative government in the State of Louisiana. I asked your predecessors "to protest against and denounce the usurpation as a crime to be detested, not a precedent to be respected." An outraged public opinion compelled a partial correction of that wrong. It is my duty now to refer to a similar outrage in the State of South Carolina. Although it was the constitutional right each branch of the Legislature of that State, without hinderance, to meet and to judge of the qualifications and election of its own members, yet, in the recent attempted organization of the Legislature, members were required to enter the State-house between armed men, and were admitted or refused at the pleasure of those who had no legal right or authority to interfere, but who were supported by the troops of the United States. Members duly chosen were refused admission, while others not members were admitted. Not even the pretext of domestic violence can be urged as an apology for the outrage. It was the attempted overthrow of civil authority by military power and an unmitigated wrong against the people of that State and of the whole country. Accompanying that transaction and forming a part of it was the interposition by a Federal Judge, supported by the military, to overawe the State Judiciary and defeat its judgment upon questions resting wholly upon local and State law. The constitutional and independent authority of State Court and Legislatures is endangered, if not now supported by a patriotic and liberty-loving sentiment so stong among the people that party and partisans dare not defy it.

Bank Election

At the annual meeting the stockholders of the First National Bank, the following gentlemen were unanimously elected as directors for the ensuing year. Dr. J. H. Ford, Wm. McIntyre, Jas. McClellan, J. R. Lanning, and Geo. Hazzard. Dr. Ford was elected president of the board, ——— Hazzard cashier. A dividend of 5 per cent was declared on the stock for the last six months, and one per cent was carried to the surplus fund. The Bank is in a prosperous condition, and we congratulate the stockholders on their investment. We hear it stated that Geo. Hazzard, Esq., of New Castle, Indiana, the principal owner of the Bank, is about to move to Auburn. We trust it is so and we will extend him a hearty welcome.

A Friendly Visit.

Last Friday evening the following parties went on a visit to our neighboring town of Waterloo:

D. D. Snyder and Miss Orpha Bodine, Geo. Bosley and Miss Van Fleet, Jas. V. Hazzard and wife and Miss Fanny Miller, E. E. Hare and Miss Frankie Stahl, Frank Zimmerman and Miss Murphy, Isaac Hague and wife, I. N. Cool and Miss Alice Fair, Miss Clara Walter and Miss Lora Walter, Geo. Lanning and Miss Laura Fair, Ed. Bodine and wife, Frank Ford, Henry Brandon and Miss Kittie Elwell. They were met at the Bigler House by quite a number of citizens of Waterloo and their wives, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. C. K Baxter, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. O McClellan, Mr. and Mrs. R. Wes. McBride, Mr. Mrs B. F. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. John Bigler and others. Before the departure a sumptuous supper was served by Mr. Butt, the courteous proprietor of the hotel, whose good cheer and kind reception, together with the many courtesies extended by the residents of Waterloo, served to make the party a very pleasant one indeed.

Serious Accident at Mt. Pleasant.

A severe and rather peculiar accident occurred on last Saturd y night as a party of church going people were enroute for the United Brethern Church, at Mt. Pleasant southwest of Butler. A revival is in progress there, and two sled loads were going to attend the services. The horses attacued to the rear sled, belonging to Wm. Zebrook became detached while going at a rapid pace and precipitated themselves over the sled in front of them. The sled in front to which J. C Shutts team was attached, contained Newton Moughler, Peter Kensinger, Mr. Jeffers and four others. When Zebrooks horses broke loose, they took the doubletrees and neck yoke with them. The maddened horses divided on coming to Shutts sled, one going on each side of it, and raking those in the box in a frightful manner, Moughler was tramped on by the horses and was considerable injured by being struck in the back by the neck yoke. His forehead and side of his head were much cut up. Peter Kensinger, living southeast of Butler, had his collar-bone and several of the bones of his shoulder were broken, besides being bodily cut and bruised. Mr. Jeffers, son-in-law of Eli Welch, had his ear torn off, it is supposed by being caught by one of the singletrees, it being torn out bodily. The son of Mr. Shutt was also badly jammed up and bruised around the head, while all the others in the sled were more or less injured. It was a great wonder that under the circumstances some were not killed outright. The accident took place some eighty rods east of the church, and the four horses that made up the two teams, kept on in their rapid career until they struck the corner of the church building; when they fell down in a heap, and were secured. One of the horses belonging to Mr. Zebrook, was nearly killed. The injured men were attended by Dr. Fanning.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

—Dressed hogs and clover seed are coming in in considerable quantities.

—The arrival of the auctioneers with their bankrupt stock of goods from Auburn causes no little stir among business men. A special meeting of the town council was called on Monday evening to consider the matter.

—Isaac and Simon Ochs, left for Jackson Michigan last week being called to the bedside of their sister there who is very ill.

—There is a project on foot for starting a bank at Butler. Such an institution would certainly be a great convenience to citizens and merchants.

Court Matters.

The case of Grant Bowers against Wesley Jackman, known by the bar as the celebrated cow case, was decided in favor of Bowers, who got eighty cents damages and possession of the cow. The case was once tried in a Justice court, again at the September term of the Circuit Court, and for the third time at the last session. Blair, Penfield & Moody, appeared for the plaintiff, and McBride & Morlan for the defendant. It is safe to say that the costs and expenses involved in the several suits would, if expended in cows, have purchased a small heard of them.

The case of Joseph Rechtenwald and others, against Elizabeth Bricker and others, was placed on trial on Friday morning and consumed the remainder of the term of the Circuit Court. The suit hinges on the will of John Noel, of Butler township, deceased. In his will many years ago he made provision that his widow was to have the use of all his estate during life, conditional upon her remaining a widow, otherwise she was to have $150, in case of remarrying. Mrs. Noel afterward married Henry Bricker. Under the will she would therefore have $150, while under the law she would be entitled to one-third of the entire estate. There were a large number of heirs, and some years ago a contract was made, the widow agreeing to share as an heir, and give up possession of the estate. This contract was repudiated the following day, hence the suit which was to quiet title, and to partition the premises. There was considerable feeling manifested by the litigants. The jury remained out until midnight on Saturday, and reported that they were unable to agree. There were 9 for the widow and 3 for the heirs. Penfield & Moody appeared for the heirs and Best & McClellan and Rose & Hartman for the defendents.

The following prisoners were taken to Michigan City on Monday, by Sheriff St. Clair: David Sharley, sentenced to to four years imprisonment, for forgery, Charles Heitman, five years, for horse stealing, and Charles Rice, one year for stealing a two dollar watch. In Sharley's case an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court.

The court adjourned on Saturday noon to convene again on the 24th inst.

The People ant Proof.

There is no medicine prescribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP for severe Coughs, Colds settled on the Breast, Consumption, or any disease of the Throat and Lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case, Try it. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

THE COURIER this week contains the speech in full as made by Judge Stallo, at the monster Democratic meeting, held in Cincinnati. It is a logical appeal to the intelligence and patriotism of the American voter. The Judge lays bare the villainous schemes by which the partisan tricksters hope to count in Hayes against the will of the people. The speech will repay careful perusal.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE WHOLE WORLD.

Holloway's Pills.

"I had no appetite; Holloway's Pill gave me a hearty one."

"Your pills are marvelous."

"I send for another box, and keep them in the House."

"Dr. Holloway has cured my headache that was chronic."

"I gave one of your pills to my babe for cholera morbus. The dear little being got well in a day."

"My nausea of a morning is now cured."

"Your box of Holloway's Ointment cured me of noises in the head. I rubbed some of your Ointment behind the ear, and the noise has left."

"Send me two boxes; I want one for a poor family."

"I enclose a dollar, your price is 25 cents, but the medicine to me is worth a dollar."

"Send me five boxes of your pills."

"Let me have three boxes of your pills by return mail, for chills and fever."

I have over 200 such testimonials as these, but want of space compels me to conclude.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDER,

And all eruptions of the skin, this ointment is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching affects to the very root of the evil.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Invariably cures the following diseases:

DISORDER OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel or with aches and pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

For Stomachs out of Order, no medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these pills; they remove all acidity occasioned by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasm—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and stomach.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the best known in the world for the following diseases: Ague, Asthma, Billious Complaints, Blotches on the skin, Bowels, Consumption, Debility, Dropsy, Dysentery, Erysipelas, Female Irregularities, Fevers of all kinds, Fits, Gout, Headache, Indigestion, Inflammation, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Lumbago, Piles, Rheumatism, Retention, Stone and Gravel, Tic-Douloureaux, Tumors, Ulcers, Worms of all kinds, Weakness from any cause, &c.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

None are genuine unless the signature of J. Haydock, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills, and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be suspicious.

Sold at the manufacture of Prof. Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable druggists and dealers in medicines throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

Two prominent citizens of New York—Otis D. Swan, a broker, and Coles Morris, a lawyer—have run away with large amounts of other people's money. Both were connected with wealthy and long-established families, and their defalcations have caused something of a sensation in the metropolis.

Close on the heels of the Ashtabula railroad [illegible] comes the intelligence of a shipwreck on the Long Island shore, in which twenty-nine men of a wrecking party lost their lives. The ship had grounded and been abandoned by the crew, and a wrecking company had taken possession. No boats or other means of escape had been provided, it seems, and when the ship went to pieces the men were at the mercy of the furious sea that was raging. Four men of the thirty-three on board were washed ashore on pieces of the wreck.

Some excitement has been caused in New York by a high-toned cowhiding affair, of which James Gordon Bennett, of the New York Herald, was the victim. It appears that Bennett was engaged to be married the day after Christmas to Miss May, but failed to put in an appearance. A new arrangement was made, and the 3d of January fixed upon for the ceremony. Again the groom played truant. The family and friends of Miss May were, of course, highly indignant, and a big brother of the bride—Fred May—started forth to avenge the insult. He found Bennett at the Union Club House, on Fifth avenue. Without a word May drew a good-sized cowhide and struck Bennett three sharp blows in the face, drawing blood at each stroke. The two then clenched, but were separated by members of the club. The affair created an immense sensation in social circles.

Commodore Vanderbilt, the railway king, has at last succumbed to the king of terrors. He breathed his last at his residence in Washington place, New York, at 11 o'clock a. m., on Thursday, Jan. 4. The aged millionaire remained perfectly conscious to the last moment of his life, and died almost without a struggle. For two days it had been apparent to his doctors that his hours were numbered, and that at most he could only live a few days or a week. At 4 o'clock on the morning of his death his condition became rapidly worse, and he expressed a desire to see Rev. Dr. Deems, his spiritual adviser. The latter arrived in a few minutes, and Commodore Vanderbilt said: "I think I am nearly gone, Doctor." Dr. Deems prayed by the bedside of the dying man, and then some members of the family sang a few hymns in low tones. The music seemed to soothe the sufferer. All his family were sent for during the night, and when he died they were beside his bed. The news of the Commodore's death had little effect on the market, his death having been so long expected. It is understood the bulk of this vast property is to be kept together, and that provision has been made for reinvesting the accruing interest on it in his favorite securities. The Commodore was nearly 83 years old.

THE WEST.

Large numbers of what are called Gulf cattle are dying in the counties of Central Illinois, caused by the intense cold of the present winter....John L. Bittinger, one of the Missouri "crooked" whisky convicts, has been pardoned and released from prison.... The Minnesota State Board of Health has issued a circular for distribution throughout the State, recommending vaccination and revaccination to guard against the probable introduction of small-pox from Wisconsin and Manitoba....The fire fiend appeared in Chicago 474 times during the year just closed, and devoured $389,820 worth of property....Eight thousand five hundred and thirty-six Chicagoans died during the year 1876.

The most appalling railroad catastrophe that has happened for many months occurred at Ashtabula, Ohio, on the evening of Friday, Dec. 29. The Pacific express train from the East on the Michigan Southern and Lake Shore road, due at Ashtabula at 5:15 p. m., arrived about two hours late, being delayed by the fearful storm and great drifts of snow, though drawn by two engines. As it was about to cross the bridge over Ashtabula river, near the station, the train ran off the track, probably on account of the drifts of snow, and went off the rails upon the bridge. The bridge, an iron truss of perhaps 100 feet span, gave way with an awful crash. The forward engine had passed safely over, but the coupling connecting it with the next engine broke and all the rest of the train, consisting of two first-class coaches, one smoking car, one drawing-room car, three sleeping cars, and four express and baggage cars, with one of the engines was precipitated into the abyss, a distance of sixty-five feet. There were upward of 200 passengers on the train, more than 100 of whom perished in the flames, which broke out soon after the fall of the train, and which consumed every car. The alarm was sounded immediately, and all possible help sent at the very soonest minute, and all that could be was done to save those who were still alive. The shrieks of the wounded and dying were awful, and the scene of the burning cars in the deep and narrow valley was heartrending beyond description. In the midst of the deep snow and the furious storm the citizens of Ashtabula did all that human beings could do. The passengers saved were conveyed to the hotels and private houses, and everything done for them that possibly could be.

During the year 1876 Chicago has received 3,044,379 barrels of flour and 82,791,628 bushels of grain. During the same time she has distributed 2,700,636 barrels of flour and 76,863,080 bushels of grain. Of hogs she has received 4,300,000 and shipped 1,191,000.

Intelligence of a most shocking case of murder and suicide reaches us from La Crosse, Wis. Dr. E. Chamberlain, an old, wealthy and respected citizen, while sitting in his cutter in front of a store in a busy street, was approached by a man named Oscar Wiesinger, who presented a shot-gun, heavily loaded, and, without a word, discharged the load of shot in the body of Dr. Chamberlain, inflicting almost instant death. The murderer then placed a pistol to his own head and blew his brains out. No motive is assigned for the deed....Three white men were recently killed and another badly wounded, by agency Indians, while en route from Sage Creek, Wyoming, to Red Cloud Agency. ....Among the victims of the Lake Shore railroad disaster, few will be mourned by a wider circle of friends throughout the Northwest than Mr. P. P. Bliss, of Chicago, so well, and widely known through his gospel-song services, which have been scarce less effective in the work of religious revival, in which he had long been engaged with Maj. Whittle, than were those of Mr. Sankey in his work with Mr. Moody. Mr. Bliss was en route to Chicago to take part in the revival services at the Tabernacle. He and his wife perished in the disaster at Ashtabula....A statement of the produce trade of Milwaukee for the year 1876 gives the following figures: Receipts of wheat, including flour reduced to bushels, 28,247,481 bushels; shipments, 30,005,797 bushels. Total receipts of grain, 32,864,255 bushels; shipments, 30,[illegible] bushels.

The stockholders of the Northern Ohio Fair Association, of Cleveland, have decided to hold no fair this year. Hard times....The Illinois State Farmers' Association will meet at Springfield on the 23d of January....Gen. Crook's command has returned to Laramie from its expedition against the Indians. The campaign is ended for the winter.

In the United States Court, at Yankton, Dakota, last week, John McCall, previously convicted of the murder of Wild Bill in the Black Hills last August, was sentenced by Chief Justice Shannon to be hanged on Thursday, March 1. In the statement made to the court he claimed he was so badly intoxicated on the day of the murder as to be entirely unconscious of shooting anybody.

The Independent in the Indiana State Senate affiliated with the Democrats in the organization of that body, and divided the offices with them. The House elected all Republican officers by a vote of 54 to 44.

THE SOUTH.

Louisiana's cotton product, this season, is estimated at 300,000 bales....A Columbia, (S. C.) telegram says "the sub-committee of the committee delegated by the House of Representatives to inquire into the election of Presidential electors in South Carolina, after a careful examination of the returns from all the precincts in the State, find, that all the Hayes and Wheeler electors have a fair majority on the face of the returns, and that Wade Hampton has a majority of the votes cast for Governor."

The city of New Orleans was, on the 1st inst., the scene of the usual biennial excitement incident to the assembling and organizing of the Legislature of Louisiana. At noon of that day, the dispatches inform us, the Democratic members, accompanied by about 500 persons, called at the State House and demanded admission. The officer on duty replied that the members could enter, but the crowd could not. Col. Bush, the spokesman, then called upon Clerk Trezevant to clear the obstructions, barricades, police, etc., which prevented the ingress of members. A formal demand was then made by Trezevant upon Gen. Badger and other officials for their removal, which, being declined, Col. Bush read a paper protesting against the armed occupation of the State House, a copy of which was presented to Gov. Kellogg. The latter replied that, as Governor and conservator of the peace, he considered that it was his duty to keep the police there, as he was of the belief that there was danger of the organization of the General Assembly being interfered with by violent and illegal means. The Clerk of the House, Trezevant, refused to call the roll of the House under the circumstances, and one of the members, at the request of the Secretary of State, called the roll. The Democratic Legislature met at St. Patrick's Hall. Louis Bush was elected Speaker of the House. Both Legislatures claimed to have a legal quorum. The Republican body passed a resolution setting forth that armed resistance to the State authorities exists in the State, and calling upon the President to afford the protection guaranteed by the constitution. ....At Augusta, Ky., the other day, seven young men, all unknown, while on the ice in the Ohio at that point, were suddenly drowned by the breaking of a gorge. All belonged to Utopia, O.

Governor-Elect Drew, of Florida, has been inducted into the gubernatorial chair, at Tallahassee, Gov. Stearns surrendering the office without any contest. Gov. Drew delivered a message conciliatory in tone, guaranteeing to the freedmen the enjoyment of all their rights and privileges.

A fire, at Benham, Fannin county, Tex., a few days ago, destroyed twelve business houses, valued, with their contents, at $100,000....Congressman Schleicher, of Texas, has received a dispatch from Brownsville, signed by a number of merchants of that place, informing him that Revueltas, the Mexican officer in command at Matamoras, was breaking open the stores of American citizens there, and confiscating their property, for the alleged reason that the tax which he had imposed of 3½ per cent. had not been paid.

POLITICAL.

The re-election of Mr. Blaine to the Senate from Maine is said to be assured beyond a doubt. Secretary Morrill denies the statement that he is a candidate for the position.

Wade Hampton has addressed a letter to both Gov. Hayes and Gov. Tilden, in which he says: "I deem it proper to declare that profound peace prevails throughout this State; that the course of judicial proceedings is obstructed by no combination of citizens thereof, and that the laws for the protection of its inhabitants in all the rights of person, property, and citizenship are being enforced in our courts. While the people of this State are not wanting either in the spirit or means to maintain their rights of citizenship against the usurped power which now defies the supreme judicial authority of the State, they have that faith in the justice of their cause that they propose to leave its vindication to the proper legal tribunals, appealing at the same time to the patriotism and public sentiment of the whole country. The inflammatory utterances of a portion of the public press render it perhaps not inopportune for me to state that, although the people of South Carolina view with grave concern the prospect of a critical conjuncture in the affairs of our country which threatens to subject to an extreme test the republican system of Government itself, it is their firm and deliberate purpose to condemn any solution of existing political problems that involves the exhibition of armed force, or that moves through any other channel than the prescribed form of the constitution, or the peaceful agency of the law."

The following are the figures for Presidential electors in South Carolina, as determined by the House Congressional Committee: Hayes electors—Bowen, 92,327; Winsmith, 92,363; Johnson, 92,494; Hurley, 93,266; Nash, 92,331; Cook, 92,340; Myers, 92,358. Tilden electors—Barker, 91,446; McGowan, 91,462; Ingram, 91,446; Wallace, 91,416; Erwin, 91,444; Aldrich, 91,440; Humphries, 91,106....Judge Stanley Matthews, of Cincinnati, will contest the seat of Hon. Henry B. Banning in the next Congress.

Hon. William A. Wheeler has been interviewed by a New York Herald-correspondent, by whom he is made to speak thus: "It is my firm conviction that Congress can never be constituted a National Canvassing or Returning Board. Congress cannot go behind the returns, beyond the mere question of the regularity of the certificates. Understand me clearly, for it is a point on which I would not like to be misunderstood. The Congress cannot investigate whether Louisiana has gone for Tilden or Hayes. The action of the Returning Board on this point has been final and conclusive in Louisiana. I do not believe that this dispute will be wholly an unmixed evil. I believe it is going to teach the people the machinery of the Presidential election, which they have never understood before, and that it will be the means of averting such troublesome strife in the future." The Republican members of the General Assembly of Illinois met in caucus last week, and adopted a series of resolutions declaring that Hayes and Wheeler, having been elected President and Vice President, must be inaugurated....At a caucus of the Republican members of the Michigan Legislature, held on the evening of the 3d inst., Senator Ferry was renominated for the United States Senate by acclamation by a unanimous rising vote.

Mr. Blaine has been re-elected to the United States Senate from Maine, having received the unanimous vote of the Republican Legislative caucus. In Minnesota, Senator Windom has been chosen to be his own successor.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections commenced the investigation of the Oregon electoral case on the 29th ult....Commissioner of Patents Duell has resigned.

In the investigation of the Oregon electoral case by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, Secretary of State Chadwick, of Oregon, testified that he canvassed the vote on the 4th of December, the day prescribed by the statutes of Oregon, at which time nothing was said by any one present about the ineligibility of Watts, but such ineligibility was subsequently discovered, and, on account of protests in the matter, he did not make out the lists of electors under the seal of the State. These lists were prepared by Gov. Grover, who had investigated legal precedents and was satisfied of the correctness of his view. The point as to whether the Governor had a right to appoint Cronin was raised the day after the canvass, and one day before the meeting of the Electoral College. Upon a hearing of the case by the Governor, Mr. Odell filed a protest against Cronin's appointment. On the day the college met he (witness) handed certified lists from the Governor to Cronin in the presence of all the Republican and Democratic electors. Mr. Odell's evidence was to this effect: On the day the college met he, in company with Cartwright and Watts, they being the three Republicans claiming election, went to Secretary Chadwick and demanded certificates, which were refused. They were referred to Gov. Grover, who informed them that he would deliver the certificates to the parties entitled to them at the Capitol at 12 o'clock the same day. Secretary Chadwick at the hour mentioned handed Cronin an envelope containing a certificate of the Governor, which was read by Cronin. He (Odell) asked Cronin to produce the certificates of each member for the guidance of the college, which was declined. Watts then resigned. After some conversation Cronin said to witness: "Do I understand you to refuse to recognize me?" To which the witness replied that he wanted the certificates produced, and would act with any one legally elected. Cronin then left in anger, and the two Republicans appointed Watts to fill his own vacancy.

A Washington dispatch of the 30th ult. says: "The Senate branch of the joint committee on counting the electoral votes had two long sessions yesterday. All the sessions, thus far, have been devoted to the preliminary work of examining and discussing the historical records bearing on the general subject, and no proposition has yet been formally presented to the committee by any of its members. One of them said that the indications are that no conclusion on any point can possibly be reached by the Senate branch of the committee for several days at least, and that the matters now before them are in such an uncertain condition as to preclude any reasonable conjecture as to the result of their deliberations."....The work of printing all the debates on counting the electoral vote, from the formation of the Government up to the present time, has been completed by the Government Printing Office. The volume makes a book of 800 pages.

There is a rumor that Justice Clifford, of the United States Supreme Court, is to be replaced by Judge Shipley, of the Upper New England District. Clifford is entitled, on account of age, to retire at his own option on full pay for life. Clifford is a Democrat, Shipley a Republican.

President Grant has again been interviewed by the irrepressible newspaper correspondent, to whom, if the report of the conversation is to be believed, he freely and unreservedly unfolded his views upon the political situation. The President expressed the belief that South Carolina and Florida had fairly chosen the Republican electors, and that Chamberlain was the legal Governor of the first-named State. In regard to Louisiana he said that "men from that State had told him that the action of the Returning Board was final and without appeal. There had always been trouble in that State from fraud, and it was a fact that its electoral vote had not been counted since 1860." Speaking of the general situation, he did not think there had been a fair election, such as they have in New England, in any Southern State except, perhaps, Delaware. Upon the subject of the Presidential question in Congress, Grant said that the existing difference between the two houses, it appeared to him, would not be disposed of by the expiration of his term, at which time all power vested in him would cease. To his mind law and precedents gave the President of the Senate the power to open and count the vote; but precedents also established the right of either house to object to the counting of the electoral vote of the States, the first of which occurred in 1817, in the case of Indiana. It was declared not legally admitted into the Union. The vote, however, was counted. He anticipated objection to the count of several States in February, and observed that when this thing was begun it was hard to say where it would end. It was possible that the time up to the 4th of March would be occupied with the settlement of this question. If not settled, he is of the opinion that, under the act of 1872, the President pro tem. of the Senate would become acting President, and would be sworn in as such. He thought no embarrassment would follow the swearing in of an acting President. The latter could promptly convene the Forty-fifth Congress for such business as he might see fit to bring to its attention. In the new Congress the question of the Presidential election might become a subject of consideration, and it might be determined to hold an election earlier than the time regularly provided in the act of 1872, which would now be on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Congress, he thought, might see fit to fix upon a date for holding an election in June, which could readily be done, and hold the inauguration on the Fourth of July, which would more promptly dispose of the exceptional state of affairs incident to the interregnum.

E. A. Cronin, the Oregon Democratic elector, testified before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections that he "had not made any arrangements with any person or persons whereby the electoral certificates were to be handed to him by the Secretary of State. He was convinced he was lawfully appointed to replace Dr. Watts, and he put the certificates in his pocket because he was afraid they would be taken from him by Odell and others. He had refused to come to Washington as messenger of the Electoral College unless he should receive $3,000 for expenses, and the money was furnished him, it was raised, he supposed, by subscription among Oregon Democrats."....Charles G. Fisher, convicted of abstracting papers, has been tried in the Washington Criminal Court, and sentenced to eleven months' imprisonment at labor in the common jail. His father was at one time a Representative from Delaware in Congress, and subsequently Judge, and then District Attorney. It was while the son was Assistant District Attorney that he stole the papers from the Clerk's office, for which he has been tried and convicted.

To devise a letter-stamp that cannot be safely washed is a problem that Third Asst. Postmaster Gen. Barber has been studying some time. He has finally decided to change the color of the ordinary three-cent stamp from green to red, as the latter color is more easily blurred and rendered impossible of restoration. The medallion head of Washington will be retained, standing in white relief upon the red background of the stamp....The grand total of internal revenue receipts for six months ending Dec. 30, was $57,935,605....The President has addressed a letter to the Washington Board of Police Commissioners requesting the immediate resignation of its members.

GENERAL.

Hon. James W. Nye, formerly United States Senator from Nevada, died last week at White Plains, Westchester county, New York....A cargo of war munitions, valued at $1,200,000, was shipped from New Haven, Ct., to Constantinople last week. They are intended for the Turkish Government....A formidable revolution, headed by Gen. Serna, has broken out in the Mexican State of Sonora. Serna seeks to organize an independent Government, with the ultimate design of annexing the State to the American Union. Success to Serna.

According to the latest statistical publication the population of the globe is 1,423,917,000. Europe has 309,178,300 inhabitants; Asia, 824,548,500; Africa, 199,921,600; Australia and Polynesia, 4,748,600; America, 85,519,800. The increase in America for the year is given at 1,200,000....It is stated from Washington that the Postmaster General is considering the propriety of requiring Postmasters to report monthly instead of quarterly.

At a meeting of the railroad passenger agents, held in New York, a few days ago, the following advance in passenger rates was determined on by the trunk lines: New York to Cleveland, $8 to $11; Toledo, $10 to $13.50; Detroit, $10 to $12; Chicago, $13 to $18; St. Louis, $17 to $23; Indianapolis, $13 to $17; Louisville, $15 to $20; Cincinnati, $11 to $16.

As far as can be ascertained to a certainty, at least seventy-five persons were killed by the Ashtabula railway disaster. The general impression of those competent to judge places the figure higher than this. Appended is the list, as furnished by the railroad authorities: Number of passengers on the train, 128; number of employes on the train, 19; total, 147. Rescued passengers, 63; rescued employes, 9; total, 72. Died since, passengers, 3; died since, employes, 1; total, 4. Names of known rescued, 72; lost, 70; unaccounted for, 5; total, 147.

The horrors of Ashtabula do not appear to be fully revealed. The investigation shows a startling discrepancy between the estimates of passengers and of railroad officials as to the number of people on the train. Some passengers place it as between 200 and 300, while the railroad men, who ought to be the better judges, fix the number at less than 150. Another revelation is that passengers were robbed. It is stated that $7,000 was taken from one corpse, and that living men struggling away from the wreck were met by thieves and forced to give up their valuables.

FOREIGN.

The London (Eng.) School Board has proposed a radical change in the present system of spelling, and there is a warm discussion going on as to whether the adoption of the phonetic system would be a reform....A dispatch from Pera dated the 29th ult. says that the Sultan, in answer to Lord Salisbury's friendly representation, declared that his personal safety would be compromised if he conceded all that the powers demanded. No threats passed at the interview between the Sultan and Lord Salisbury. The London Times, in a leader discussing the proposals of the powers, says: "The agreement between Russia and England implies that even should there be change of detail, the main lines will remain fixed."....The plague has again made its appearance at Bagdad. All the accounts from the Old World agree that England has definitely resolved to take no part in the defense of Turkey, but to preserve an attitude of neutrality at least until it may become necessary to act for the preservation of her road to India. The intentions of Austria, however, are not quite so clear. She has very quietly gathered a powerful army on the frontiers of the disturbed provinces, and is evidently fully aware of the truth of Bismarck's assertion that her interests are more directly and immediately threatened than those of England by Russia's policy.

The 300-mile walking match between Daniel O'Leary, of Chicago, Ill., champion of America, and William Howes, of London, was finished on Dec. 30, and resulted in the defeat of O'Leary. He left the track utterly fagged out after he had walked 209 miles. Howes continued to 241 miles, when he too stopped walking because O'Leary gave up the match. Betting was 5 to 4 on O'Leary....It is announced from Constantinople that the conference of the powers has prolonged the armistice to the 1st of March, 1877.

Late Panama advices, received by steamer at New York, furnish an interesting batch of intelligence from Central and South America: Ex-President Guardia, of Costa Rica, is about to visit Guatemala and Salvador for the purpose of inducing those states to unite with Costa Rica in the war against Nicaragua. President Herrera, of Costa Rica, by decree, has abolished the liberty of the press, and placed every printing office in the country under the direct control of the authorities. Another battle has occurred between the state of Cauca and the republic of Colombia. The Liberals claim a victory, but lost some prominent officers. The loss of each side in the previously reported battle of Garrapot was: Liberals, 600 killed and 1,300 wounded; Conservatives, 300 killed and 780 wounded. Of the wounded at least 500 will die. Mr. Moreno, the Dutch Consul, Senor Augustin Velez and two other persons have been assassinated at Carthagena. The assassins were arrested.

The first railway accident in Denmark, involving loss of life, has just occurred between Horsens and Aarhuus. The train, conveying a hundred laborers to clear the snow blockade, ran off the track. Nine persons were killed and thirty-seven hurt. The injured suffered greatly from cold and the delay in receiving assistance.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Lively Discussion in the House on the Louisiana Case.

The Speaker laid before the House a petition from certain citizens of Cincinnati in regard to the count of the electoral votes.

A discussion arose as to whether the petition should be read and therefore printed.

Mr. Garfield held that the reading of the petition was out of order, even though presented to the Speaker.

Mr. Banning called Mr. Garfield's attention to the fact that a number of citizens went to New Orleans and made a report of a partisan nature to the President, who has sent it to the House, and it had been printed, and on the discussion of the printing of that report, that gentleman (Garfield) had taken the position that it must be printed, and now when a petition comes signed by citizens of both parties the gentleman objected to the printing of it. The other side of the House had also objected to the appointment of committees to investigate the frauds of the Southern States, and, with three exceptions, voted against it. They had also voted against the resolution calling for information in regard to the ejection of Gov. Wells from the Governorship of Louisiana. The Republican party was attempting to defeat the will of the people by fraud, but if there was one thing the people love more than another, more than life, it was the liberty that was vouchsafed to them in an honest ballot-box. [Applause on the Democratic side and in the galleries.] He wished to tell the gentleman from Ohio (Garfield) that the people would have an honest ballot-box, and, though the army might come with eighty rounds of ammunition, though the navy might be called upon, though the 80,000 officeholders might be called to the rescue, an honest people would put them all down. [Applause.] He hoped, however, that the members on the other side of the House would throw aside their partisanship and stand by the right.

Mr. Garfield said he was glad at last a gentleman had been found who could speak for the American people, who could tell exactly what the people were going to do. He sincerely regretted that his colleague (Banning) should speak in a time of real danger like the present, when the country needed all its wisdom, and all its fairness, and all its calmness, and that he should have found it necessary at such a time to hint at what the people would do; that they would defy the authority of the United States, that the navy might come, that its trappings of war might rattle, but the people would come down and overrule everything. It was the very essence of violence for a gentleman to appeal to the people to resist the plain process of law, and in an hour like this the men who attempted to shake a brand of fire over the country were the men who ought to be most severely judged by the people.

Mr. Banning said he also thought that the condition of the country was dangerous and the House ought to proceed with cautiousness, and certainly his side of the House was doing so, and it would continue to do so, but it would not be deterred from its duty by anything or anybody. Referring to the high terms in which the Republicans spoke in their report to the President of Gov. Wells, he sent up and had read at the Clerk's desk the correspondence which led to his ejection from the Governorship of Louisiana. Was this the man whom his colleague (Garfield) would have run his dishonest hands into an honest ballot-box and purge it of the votes which it contained? This man who was denounced by Gen. Sheridan as a dishonest man?

Mr. Frye said the fact that men were talking about war and yet gold stood at 107¼ and not at 150 showed clearly that the people did not take any stock in the Democratic cry of war. They were not easily frightened by the gentleman who talked about the people coming and stripping men of power. Some time ago Sheridan sent a dispatch from Louisiana, indicating that in his judgment a large portion of the people of that State was banditti, and the gentleman from Ohio (Banning) and his friends went crazy over the testimony of Gen. Sheridan, and held public meetings denouncing him for sending such dispatches.

Mr. Frye continued to speak for some time in defense of Gov. Wells and in denunciation of what he termed the political outrages in the South, particularly in Louisiana.

The discussion, which was now devoted to the outrage question, was somewhat prolonged, and was participated in by Messrs. Atkins, Frye, Willis, and Spencer.

Regular Proceedings.

Thursday, Dec. 28.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The following bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Hooker, for the improvement of the Pearl and Pascagoula rivers, in Mississippi; by Mr. Douglass, authorizing the Commissioners of the Freedman's Saving and Trust Company to buy certain real estate; by Mr. Finn, authorizing the purchase of gold-dust and bullion at the assay office at Boise City.

Friday, Dec. 29.—Senate.—The Senate met and remained in session but a few minutes. Senator Logan was excused from service on the committee to consider the question of counting the electoral vote, by his telegraphic request, and Mr. Conkling was appointed to fill the vacancy....Mr. Gordon presented the memorial of Wade Hampton, Wm. D. Simpson, Wm. H. Wallace, and sixty-eight Senators and Representatives in the General Assembly of South Carolina, addressed to Congress, reciting at length the events which have recently transpired in that State, the interference of the military, etc., and asking Congress to take such action as will cause a cessation of the military interference in the affairs of the State and enable the Governor and Legislature to exercise the duties of the offices to which they were elected. The memorial having been read, Mr. Gordon moved that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Frelinghuysen moved to amend so as to refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections instead of the Judiciary Committee. Pending the discussion, Mr. Gordon, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution recognizing the Hampton Government as the legal Government of South Carolina, but objection was made to it by Mr. Morton and others, and it was laid over. Owing to the absence of a quorum, no action was taken upon the matter, and the Senate adjourned to Tuesday, Jan. 2.

House.—The House met and immediately adjourned, no quorum being present.

Tuesday, Jan. 2.—Senate.—A number of bills and petitions were presented and referred to appropriate committees, and after a very brief session the Senate adjourned for want of a quorum.

House.—Not in session.

Wednesday, Jan. 3.—Senate.—The bill of Mr. Wright declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific railroad acts was taken up and debated at length....Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report that William M. Turner, manager of the Western Union Telegraph office at Jacksonville, Ore., had refused to answer certain questions put to him, on the ground that he could not divulge the business of the company; also, a resolution declaring that Turner is in duty bound to answer questions, and cannot refuse to do so by virtue of his official connection with the company. Ordered printed.

House.—Mr. Barnes, the manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company, at New Orleans, was brought before the bar by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and was given until Friday night to make answer to the charge of contempt. Mr. Phillips (Kan.) introduced a bill extending the time to pre-emptors on public lands, and for the appraisement of certain lands. Referred. ....Mr. Wilson offered a resolution requesting the Committee on Railroads to report whether it is expedient to provide for the appointment of a National Board of Engineers to supervise the condition of inter-State railroads, so far as safety to travelers is concerned. Referred.... Mr. Knott, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, presented the report of the committee on the admission of James B. Belford as Representative from Colorado, with a resolution declaring Colorado to be a State in the Union and that Belford should be admitted. Mr. Hurd presented a minority report, which recommends the passage of an act by Congress admitting Colorado. The reports were recommitted....Mr. Hunter introduced a bill for the election of Federal officers and to prevent fraud in elections. Referred.... The Speaker appointed Mr. McDill on the committee on rights, duties, and privileges of the House in counting the electoral vote, in place of Monroe, excused. Adjourned.

Thursday, Jan. 4.—Senate.—Mr. Wright called up the bill recently introduced by him to establish a court for the trial of contested elections in the office of President and Vice President of the United States, for the purpose of having it referred, and spoke in favor of his proposition. Mr. Kernan also spoke upon the question, combatting the views of Mr. Wright.... Mr. Conkling presented a petition of bankers, merchants, and other business men of New York city in favor of an amicable settlement of the Presidential contest. In presenting the petition, Mr. Conkling made an appeal to the same effect. He said: "In laying this petition before the Senate it may not be amiss to add an avowal of my sympathy with its appeal for orderly, lawful, and patriotic action. In executing the constitution in any instance, and especially in an instance so grave as the one referred to, partisan feeling as a guide and rule of action can rightfully have no place. Obedience to law, observance of the constitution and maintenance of truth is not a party question or proceeding. It is beyond party and above party. Parties may contend, and I believe it is wholesome in a free Government that parties should contend over measures and candidates, but when the contest has been submitted to the ballot-box, the final arbitrament of popular contests known in our system, the only duty, the only lawful proceeding connected with it, which remains is to find the honest and true result, to declare it, bow to it, and stand by it. That is the duty of the hour. It rests on the two houses of Congress; it rests on the nation; it rests on every citizen of the republic."

House.—Mr. Willis introduced a bill providing for the repeal of all taxes on the capital and deposits of State and national banks and banking institutions....Several bills were taken up and referred. Mr. Clymer, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Military Academy Appropriation bill. It appropriates $265,161. Mr. Dunham, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported a bill fixing the compensation of United States attorneys. ....Mr. Goodin from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the bill relative to the proof required in homestead entries, with the Senate's amendments. Concurred in....Mr. Kidder, of Dakota, from the same committee reported back the bill giving parties contestant time to enter lands under the Pre-emption Homestead, or Timber-culture acts, after contest shall have been finally decided. Passed....The bill granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Blackhawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same, was passed. It allows a pension of $8 a month to all who served sixty days in the Mexican war, or thirty days in the Florida or Blackhawk wars, and to their surviving widows unmarried....The House then went into committee of the whole, Mr. Willis, of New York, in the chair, on the Consular and Diplomatic appropriation bill, appropriating $1,[illegible].... Mr. Throckmorton asked leave to offer a resolution instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the present strength, location, and occupation of the army, the force on the frontier, in the Southern States, and in Washington; why troops were ordered to Washington, the nature of the orders, by whom made, the purpose, etc., with leave to send for persons and papers. Several objections were made on the Republican side, and the House adjourned.

THE COMPROMISE COMMITTEES.

A Brief Analysis of Their Membership—The Conservative and Radical Elements Said to be Evenly Balanced.

(Washington Cor. Chicago Tribune.)

Neither party has acknowledged that it desires a compromise of the issues growing out of the Presidential complications. Yet both houses of Congress have, without any considerable opposition, appointed committees which, by general consent, are called the compromise committees. The committees are independent committees of the House and Senate; but, in their moral and practical effect, will be a joint committee. Each committee is directed to co-operate with the corresponding committee of the other house. It is possible from the composition of the committees to determine something of the spirit of the two houses upon this grave question, and to measurably foreshadow the action which such committee is likely to take. The committee on the part of the Senate is: Edmunds, of Vermont; Morton, of Indiana; Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; Logan, of Illinois; Thurman, of Ohio; Bayard, of Delaware, and Ransom, of North Carolina. On the part of the House it is: Payne, of Ohio; Hunton, of Virginia; Hewitt, of New York; Springer, of Illinois; McCrary, of Iowa; Hoar, of Massachusetts, and Willard, of Michigan.

The Republican and Democratic members of both committees are presumed to represent the different elements within the ranks of both parties. It is much easier to make a classification of the Senate than of the House committee. The Senate committee, by the public and private utterances of its members, can be classified, as to the Presidential question, in something of the following manner:

Conservative Republicans—Edmunds and Frelinghuysen.

Radical Republicans—Morton and Logan.

Conservative Democrats—Bayard and Ransom.

Radical Democrat—Thurman.

The House committee, tried by the same test, would stand:

Conservative Democrats—Payne, and possibly Hunton.

Conservative Republican—Willard.

Radical Democrats—Hewitt and Springer.

Radical Republicans—Hoar and McCrary.

Taking both committees together, the two elements are very nearly balanced, with a possibility that the supporters of the more radical view may have a majority of one on joint ballot. These gentlemen now consider themselves as judges of a momentous question, and will not be disposed to make public their opinions until they give them deliberate expression in their reports.

The Metric System.

Congressman Kasson, of Iowa, has taken a step which looks to the recognition of the metric system in the regulation of the weight of matter passing through the mails. He has introduced a bill which proposes that the Postmaster General shall furnish to the post-offices exchanging mails with foreign countries, and to all other post-offices as early as practicable, postal balances denominating in weights of the metric system, fifteen grammes of which shall be the substitute for all postal purposes of the half ounce avoirdupois, and so on in progression. Fifteen grammes was the minimum weight fixed by the International Postal convention held at Berne some two or three years since, and has been generally adopted by European authorities. The bill will doubtless receive the sanction of the Post-office Committee, and be reported to the House at an early day.

THE NATION AROUSED.

Eloquent Speech by Judge Stallo, of Ohio.

"Let Us Have Peace," if Peace and Justice are Sisters.

The Hon. J. B. Stallo, at the recent monster meeting in Cincinnati, called to appeal to the conscience and judgment of the American people, and arouse them to the danger that threatens them, made a powerful speech upon the Presidential question. He said:

MR. CHAIRMAN: The difficulty and peril of the situation, in my judgment, result from the fact that there is a large mass of voters who are wholly ignorant of the real question now at issue between the contending parties. The only contribution which I expect to make to the discussions and deliberations of this evening is an attempt to state, as briefly and plainly as I can, this question.

AN APPEAL TO INTELLIGENCE.

As to the facts to which that question relates there is but little dispute. It is admitted on all hands that of the votes actually cast for President and Vice President of the United States, the Democratic candidates have not only received a large majority—a majority of a quarter of a million or more—in the aggregate, but that the votes cast in the several States upon their face evidenced the election of a decisive majority of Democratic electors. The only theory upon which the election of the Republican candidates can be claimed is that part of the vote in some of the States was so tainted with violence or fraud that it ought to be rejected; that it has been so rejected by competent tribunals organized for the purpose of canvassing and compiling the votes under the laws of these States, and that the votes remaining after this rejection exhibit majorities in favor of a sufficient number of Republican electors to secure the election of the Republican candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency. This claim is, or at least can be, seriously preferred as to three States only—the States of Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina. It is not asserted that the face of the vote in any other State has been wholly or in part changed by any tribunal, competent or incompetent, so as to affect the result of the election.

Now, if the claim thus made by the Republicans is not valid as to any one of the three States just named, the Democratic candidates are unquestionably elected. If, for instance, the actual majorities of the votes of the State of Louisiana have not been legally destroyed by the action of the Returning Board of that State, Tilden and Hendricks are elected, even although the electoral votes of South Carolina are given to Hayes and Wheeler. It is sufficient, therefore, and tends to shorten and simplify the argument, to limit the discussion to the single case of the Louisiana vote. In regard to this vote, the claim of the Republicans, as I understand it, is this: The votes cast for the Louisiana electors have been canvassed and compiled by a board expressly organized under the laws of that State, which has rejected so large a number of these votes that a Democratic majority of seven or eight thousand is converted into a Republican majority of two or three thousand. The action of the board is claimed to be final and not subject to revision on any ground by any body or tribunal whatever. It is said to be in the nature of a judgment by a court of competent and ultimate jurisdiction—a court of final and last resort—which cannot be questioned or impeached, collaterally or directly. That judgment, it is alleged, may be wrong, but it must be acquiesced in, for it has all the force of law. According to this claim, then, neither the question of the jurisdiction of the board, nor that of the fairness, justice, or legality of its action in any respect can now be reviewed or examined by any person, body, or tribunal whatever.

REPUBLICAN PARTISAN MACHINERY.

In order that the nature and scope of this claim of the Republicans may be realized, it is necessary to recall a few facts. The whole Government of the State of Louisiana is in the hands of the Republicans. The Government is upheld by the strong arm of the Republican National Executive—by the army and navy of the United States, under the command of President Grant. The whole machinery of the Louisiana elections is controlled by William Pitt Kellogg, who calls himself the Republican Governor of Louisiana. This man, who, according to the report of a Republican Congressional Committee, owes his position, not to an election by the people, but to the manipulation of the popular vote by the Republican Returning Board, of which I shall have occasion to speak again hereafter, appoints all the Supervisors of Registration, whose decision is final and conclusive as to the right of any person to vote. These Supervisors designate the Commissioners of Election—judges of election we could call them here—who summarily reject or receive any vote that is offered. The vote is then passed upon by the Returning Board, consisting now (although in flagrant violation of law) exclusively of Republicans, whose power to reject any part or the whole of the vote actually cast is claimed to be absolute. And now it is proposed to send the result of the manipulation of this vote to the Republican President of the Senate of the United States, who is to receive it without permitting any one to question or impugn its validity.

OBEY THE LAW—NOT THE MERE ASSERTION OF LAW.

Now, Mr. Chairman and fellow-citizens, you will agree with me that the claim thus preferred by the Republicans is, to say the least of it, extraordinary. That the voters of one party are completely at the mercy of the opposite party, the party in power, in respect of the vote which is to determine whether or not that power is to continue without any opportunity of examination or scrutiny as to the regularity and fairness of the election and the truth of the declaration of the result without any right of appeal to an impartial tribunal, without any means of redress in case of fraud, corruption and an absolute falsification of the return, appears to be a proposition so utterly abhorrent to all sense of fairness and right, and so entirely at war with all presumptions arising from the nature and form of our Government and the spirit of American legislation that no intelligent man will assent to it except upon the clearest proof by an exhibition of the letter of the law. And yet, Mr. Chairman, if such is the law, I admit without hesitation that it is our duty to bow to it in submission. I know full well that civil liberty and civil order are possible only on condition that the citizen obeys, not only reasonable laws, but also unreasonable laws, if these laws have been enacted by properly constituted legislative authority; that he submits, not only to just judgments and decrees, but also to unjust judgments and decrees, if they are rendered by a competent tribunal. But before his obedience and submission can thus be demanded he certainly has the right first to ascertain whether the authority to which it is to be yielded is lawful or not. The citizen's duty is to obey the law—not the mere assertion of law.

POINTS WELL TAKEN.

Now, Mr. Chairman and fellow-citizens, the authority to deal with the electoral vote of Louisiana, which is claimed by the Republicans, is questioned at two points. It is denied, and, in my judgment, justly, that the Returning Board of Louisiana had any legal power to reject or in any way to interfere with the vote actually cast, and to substitute a fictitious Republican majority for a real Democratic majority on any ground or pretext whatever; and it is denied, furthermore, that it is within the constitutional province of the President of the Senate of the United States to determine and declare the result of the election. I propose to deal briefly with the first of these points, the legal power of the Returning Board, leaving the subject of the constitutional functions of the President of the National Senate to the other gentlemen who have addressed you and are to address you this evening.

Without touching upon the question whether or not it was competent, under the constitution of the United States, for the Legislature of Louisiana to confer upon any tribunal or body of men the power to change, in any way, the actual result of the vote for electors—a question which has been answered in the negative in a remarkable letter recently addressed by George Ticknor Curtis to the United States Senator from New York—and, without examining the other question, whether or not the constitution of the State of Louisiana, in express and unmistakable terms, prohibits the exercise of the judicial functions assumed by the Returning Board, I desire simply to reproduce the argument contained in the address recently issued by Gov. Palmer, Judge Trumbull, Mr. Julian, Mr. Smith, Gov. Bigler and Mr. Watson after the result produced by the operations of the Returning Board had been published. In that argument all the laws of Louisiana bearing upon this subject are cited; and it appears to me that no one who is willing to give it his careful attention can fail to see that the gentlemen just alluded to are unquestionably and undeniably right in the conclusions at which they arrive, namely, that the law of Louisiana never has conferred or attempted to confer upon the Returning Board any right or power to canvass or count the vote cast for Presidential electors, to pass upon its validity, to reject it or any portion of it, to compile it, to manipulate it in any way, even to touch it; and that the action of that board was a sheer, impertinent and audacious assumption of authority without any warrant of law. Here is the argument; it is so simple that no one who can read can fail to understand it.

"The constitution of the United States declares:

AS TO ELECTORS.

"'Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress, but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector.'

"The Legislature of Louisiana has either directed the manner in which the electors shall be appointed or it has not. The Election law of 1872 and amendments under which the Returning Board is created and acts makes no provision as to the manner of appointing electors of President and Vice President, whether by the Legislature or by a vote of the people, nor whether by the State at large or by Congressional Districts, nor does it contain any provisions as to the qualification of electors, the place where they are to meet, nor for filling vacancies. Section 71 of that act declares as follows: 'That this act shall take effect from and after its passage, and that all others on the subject of election laws be and the same are hereby repealed.' This is not an implied but a direct repeal of all prior election laws to which it refers, and it repeals the previous act of 1868, revised in 1870, providing for the appointment of Presidential electors, it repeals the whole of it, and all its provisions, and there is no law of the State on that subject, and of course the Board would have no jurisdiction to canvass votes for such officers. If, on the other hand, the act of 1872 does not repeal the law of 1870, then Presidential electors must be appointed, and the canvass of the votes therefor must be made in accordance with the law of 1870, and the Returning Board has no jurisdiction over the subject, as will be seen by reference to some of the provisions of the Act of 1870, which are as follows:

"'SEC. 2,824. Every qualified voter in the State shall vote for the electors as follows: Two persons shall be selected from the State at large, and one person shall be chosen from each Congressional district in this State; and in case any ticket shall contain two or more names of persons residing in the same district (except the two chosen from the State at large), the first of such names shall be considered as duly voted for.'

"'SEC. 2,825. No person shall be considered a qualified elector who is not a qualified voter in the district for which he is chosen, or, in case of being selected for the State at large, then of some parish of the State.'

"'SEC. 2,826. Immediately after the receipt of a return from each parish, or on the fourth Monday of November, if the returns should not sooner arrive, the Governor, in presence of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, a District Judge of the district in which the seat of Government may be established, or any two of them, shall examine the returns and ascertain therefrom the persons who have been duly elected electors.'

"'SEC. 2,829. The electors shall meet at the seat of Government on the day appointed for their meeting, by the act of Congress, the first Wednesday in December, and shall then and there proceed to execute the duties and services enjoined upon them by the constitution of the United States, in the manner therein prescribed.'

"'SEC. 2,830. If any one or more of the electors chosen by the people shall fail from any cause whatever to attend at the appointed place at the hour of 4 p. m. of the day prescribed for their meeting, it shall be the duty of the electors immediately to proceed by ballot to fill such vacancy or vacancies.'

SUMMING-UP AS TO LOUISIANA.

"It is immaterial, so far as affects the jurisdiction of the Returning Board, whether the act of 1870, relating to the appointment of Presidential Electors, is repealed or not. If repealed, there is no law in Louisiana for the appointment of Presidential electors; if not repealed, then the canvass of the returns cast for such electors must be made by the Governor, in the presence of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, a Judge of the district in which the seat of Government may be established, or any two of them, as required by the act of 1870, and in making such canvass they would be confined to the ascertainment of the persons elected, according to the returns, without authority to reject votes. In no event can the Returning Board have jurisdiction of the returns of electors of President and Vice President, and their canvass of the same is, therefore, a nullity, and entitled to no respect from any one. In another respect it may be important to determine whether the act of 1870 is repealed, for, if it is, the statutes of the State provide no mode of filling vacancies in the Electoral College, and it is understood that two of the electoral candidates on the Republican ticket held offices of trust or profit under the United States at the time of the election, and could not, therefore, be appointed electors."

Now this reasoning appears to me to be so clear, conclusive and irrefutable that no intelligent and fair-minded man can withhold his assent. What then, in view of this state of the law, is the real position taken by the Republicans? Simply this: Because four men, who hold no authority or jurisdiction over the subject matter whatever have possessed themselves of the returns of the votes actually cast for electors in Louisiana, have doctored and falsified them, forging a result which is the reverse of the true result, and have undertaken to send a certificate of this result to Washington, no one can now question or impugn it—although this outrage has the effect of annulling the will of the whole American people, lawfully expressed in their choice of a President and Vice President of the United States! Can anything be more monstrous than the statement of such a claim! What would you say if four Democrats, in this State—the most respectable men, if you please, men holding high office, but not clothed by law with any authority to meddle with the votes for electors—had in some way possessed themselves of the election returns in Ohio, had arbitrarily thrown out the vote of a half dozen counties or townships on the ground that that vote was the result of violence or fraud; had thus counted the Hayes electors out and the Tilden electors in. If thereupon this fraudulent and fictitious result had been certified up to the President of the Senate, and the Democrats now claimed that there was no legal power anywhere to defeat this outrage and to reach the truth behind the mere semblance of authority and counterfeit of law, would you hesitate a moment to denounce such a proposition as unfit to be broached in the presence of sane and rational men? And yet that is the proposition now flaunted in the face of the American people.

REPUBLICAN MONSTROSITIES.

Observe, the monstrosity of the Republican proposition is none the less glaring, if you do not agree with me that the power assumed by the Louisiana Returning Board was a mere usurpation. The Republicans assert that you can not inquire whether it was or was not the exercise of rightful authority; that you must take it for granted that the authority was rightful simply because it was assumed; that there is no tribunal in the world where the question can be raised and decided; that even the Vice President must take the return of the board as he finds it, and proclaim the result of the Presidential election accordingly. What they say is in effect this: You Democrats must submit to whatever we choose to assert; if you do not submit, you are guilty of treason or sedition; we are in the possession of the Government; our President has command of the army and navy; right or wrong, we mean to inaugurate Hayes and Wheeler, and resistance is revolution.

Has it, indeed, come to this? Do we hold our right to choose our law givers and rulers by such a tenure?

But this is not all. The Republicans, or, rather, the present managers of the Republican party, not only deny our right to inquire into the authority of the Returning Board, but they also insist that the validity and binding force of their action is not in the least affected, if they acted corruptly and in open fraud and violation of the law from which they claimed to derive their authority. I have before me a copy of the Election law of Louisiana, which was given me by William Pitt Kellogg himself—the law which provides for the organization of a Returning Board, and the second section of that law provides not only that the board shall consist of members of all political parties, but that "in case of any vacancy, by death, resignation or otherwise, by either of the board, then the vacancy shall be filled by the residue of the Board of Returning Officers." Now, the Returning Board which counted Hayes in and Tilden out consisted of four Republicans (two of them Republican office-holders, and one of them a Republican candidate voted for at the election, the result of which they were to declare), the only Democratic member having resigned some years ago. Before this board began to "canvass and compile" the vote, as well as after they had begun their labors, these Republican members were requested again and again to fill the vacancy, so that the Democratic or conservative party should be represented in the board by at least one member. What did the four Republicans say or do when this request was made? Did they comply with it? Did they obey the plain mandate of the law? Not at all. On the contrary when the request was preferred by Col. Zacharie, on behalf of the Democratic committee, for the fifth or sixth time, J. Madison Wells, the president of the board, had the audacity to make this answer: "In my judgment the Democratic party has forfeited all right to be represented in this board by the resignation of Mr. Arrayo." Mr. Arrayo being the Democrat who resigned his place in the board two years ago. This utterance shocked even the compositors of the Cincinnati Commercial to such a degree that they refused to print it as sent over the wires by the Associated Press, and inserted the word "not" before the word "forfeited;" so that the declaration imputed to Mr. Wells became the reverse of that which he actually made. But all the other papers printed it as I have quoted it, and J. Madison Wells has recently, in reply to a question put to him by the Congressional Committee, admitted that he made it in open session of the board. And that man is now pronounced by a Senator of the United States, from his seat in the Senate, the peer in intelligence and integrity of any member of that august body! And one of the friends of the Senator has, according to the report of an interview published in the Cincinnati Gazette, declared but two days ago that, according to the judgment pronounced in the highest circles in Washington, Hayes is fairly elected! We hear much of Mexican notions and practices nowadays, but I doubt whether under the raggedest poncho you could find a Mexican so base that he would not shade his eyes with the broad brim of his sombrero when he gave utterance to such an opinion.

A WORD IN VINDICATION OF A SLANDERED PEOPLE.

It is alleged by the organs of the Republican party that the condition of society in Louisiana is such, and the elective franchise is habitually exercised there amid such violence and disorder, that extraordinary measures must of necessity be resorted to for the purpose of purifying the results of the elections. In reply to this it would be sufficient to say that, if this were true, Louisiana ought to be excluded from all participation in the national elections at least. But the charge is denied as emphatically as it is made, and before we can be called to discuss the question on which side the truth lies we must first be provided with an impartial and legally-constituted tribunal. I have neither the time nor inclination to go into a discussion of this subject this evening; the matter is now under investigation before a Congressional committee. But in order to show that affidavits manufactured in the New Orleans Custom House do not constitute all the evidence upon the subject, I beg leave to adduce a witness whose intelligence and fairness will hardly be questioned in Republican quarters. Early this year Mr. Charles Nordhoff, a gentleman who was born, or at least educated, in this city, an old pupil of the Woodward High School, for many years one of the editors of the New York Evening Post, a Republican, and a friend of Gov. Hayes, for whom he has voted at the last election, Mr. Nordhoff, last year, spent four months at the South, and sent a series of letters to the New York Herald, which he has just collected in a pamphlet, published by D. Appleton & Co., under the title, "The Cotton States." In this pamphlet he discusses at length the character of the parties in Louisiana, their relative numerical strengths, the question of violence and intimidation at the polls, the character and operations of the Returning Board, and so on. I am told that your anonymous writer has denounced me recently in the Cincinnati Commercial because I stated that the number of white voters was nearly equal to that of the colored voters; that there were very few white Republicans in Louisiana, except officeholders, and that the intimidation of voters was by no means chargeable to the Democrats alone. Now hear what Mr. Nordhoff says on page 41 of his pamphlet:

LOUISIANA'S VOTING POPULATION.

"The State of Louisiana had, according to the census of 1870, 87,076 white and 86,913 black males over 21 years of age. It has since been proved by undeniable evidence that the census understated considerably the number of whites. It was taken in the summer, when many white people always leave the State, and the census-takers did not, it is asserted, thoroughly record that part of the white population which is scattered over the pine hills back of the bottom-lands, on which a large number of white farmers are settled. I suppose the truth to be that Louisiana has to-day at least 10,000 more white than black voters. The Conservatives claim at least 15,000 more.

"Now, in the election of 1874 parties were divided, unhappily, almost entirely on the color-line. Mr. Packard, who unites in his person the two important, and I should think incongruous, offices of United States Marshal and Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, told me, in New Orleans, that only 5,000 whites voted the Republican ticket in 1874, and that the same number of blacks voted with the Conservatives. It is, I think, a fair statement that, with the exception of the office-holders, State and Federal, and their relations, there were no white Republicans in the State in 1874, or, at furthest, but an inappreciable number. The reason for this condition of things I shall try to explain. It must suffice now to say generally that the inefficiency and corruption of the State Government in all its parts—leaving lawlessness unpunished, countenancing the most monstrous and shameless frauds, and continued thus for six disgraceful years, at last united all the whites in one party, whose aim was simply and only to oust the thieves. Opposed to them in 1874 stood the rulers with almost, but not quite, the whole negro population at their backs."

AS TO INTIMIDATION.

And, again, on page 11:

"6. As to 'intimidation,' it is a serious mistake to imagine this exclusively a Democratic proceeding in the South. It has been practiced in the last three years quite as much, and even more rigorously, by the Republicans. The Federal United States Marshal has used cavalry to intimidate Democrats. Similarly, Federal officers confess they did in Alabama and elsewhere. The negroes are the most savage intimidators of all. In many localities which I visited, it was as much as a negro's life was worth to vote the Democratic ticket; and to refuse to obey the caucus of his party caused him to be denounced as a 'Bolter,' and to be forsaken by his friends, and even by his wife or sweetheart. That there has also been Democratic intimidation is undeniable; but it does not belong to the Southern Republicans to complain of it. In North Carolina a leading and intelligent negro told me that he and others of his race were opposed to the Civil Rights bill, but they did not dare to let their opposition be known, because, as he said, they would at once have been denounced among their people, and would have lost all influence with them. In Wilmington a young negro lawyer was mobbed by his people, because he ventured to oppose corrupt candidates for office. This was told me by a colored man."

And again, on page 53:

"Several of the most prominent Republican politicians of New Orleans have told me positively that the State was peaceable and quiet from 1869 to 1872, and since then the whites had been dissatisfied mainly because they believed sincerely that Kellogg was not fairly elected Governor, and that his rule was that of a usurper. If Gen. Sheridan ever turns in his famous list of 2,500 murders, and if he puts dates to them, it will be found that the political murders happened before 1868, with the exception of the Coushatta and Colfax affairs. The corrupt judge who claims to have been driven out of Natchitoches parish assures me that that parish was one of the most quiet in the State until 1874, when he and a swindling tax-collector were driven out.

SOME FIGURES.

"That parish has become so notorious as the most unruly in the State that I have taken some pains to ascertain the facts, because there, if anywhere, persecution of Northern men and negroes would be found. Now, then, first, an official report, properly authenticated, of the murders committed in this parish from 1869 to 1875 lies before me. They number 41, and of these were whites murdered by whites, 13; colored murdered by colored, 13; whites by colored, 4; colored by whites, 3; whites by an unknown person, 5; colored by unknown, 1; colored by officers of justice in serving process, 3; Indian by a white man, 1. Somebody may object that this record is not correct, but to that the reply is that the parish has been almost continually since 1868 under Republican officers, and that the coroner is reputed here, as elsewhere, to be an officer very zealous in the collection of fees. It is not creditable to the Republican rulers that for these forty-one homicides not one man has been hanged, and only one has been punished in any way. I should add that there is no evidence that any of these murders arose out of political causes."

In another place, page 35, referring to the same subject, Mr. Nordhoff says:

"The State has fifty-seven parishes. Most of the thirteen of which I have given returns have a population nearly equally divided between white and black, and I suspect the figures give more than an average number of murders of whites by whites, and less than the average number of blacks by blacks. Plaquemine, for instance, not counted in the above, registered, in 1874, 510 white and 2,160 black voters, and there I found that there had been, since 1868, thirty-three murders, of which thirty-one were of blacks by blacks. There is good evidence for the statement that the large majority of murders in the State in the last six years were of blacks by blacks, instigated by whisky and jealousy. The negroes drink less whisky this year than two or three years ago, when they were getting much higher wages; but their demand for it is so strong that I find the planters generally sell it to them in the little plantation-stores, having discovered that if they did not, their hands would be running off elsewhere to get it, or some negro would peddle it in the cabins. The plantation negroes commonly carry a razor as a concealed weapon, and, absurd as this seems as a weapon of attack, they inflict serious and often fatal wounds with it. The razor seems to be their favorite weapon elsewhere also, for I found it so in Delaware. They take to it probably because it is the cheapest tool with a keen edge.

FAILURE OF REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT.

"It is not only a fact that crime has no been punished in the State under the Republican rule—neither crime against the person nor against property; but there is a great complaint that the pardoning power has been abused. I have found but one return on the subject, which shows certainly a liberal use of this prerogative. From Jan. 1, 1873, to March 5, 1874, Gov. Kellogg pardoned thirteen murderers (almost one a month), besides six men convicted of manslaughter. The whole number of pardons during this period was eighty-four, and among the offenses thus condoned are poisoning, rape, shooting into a dwelling, burglary, assault with intent to kill, perjury, and bribing witnesses. Now, when society is said by Gov. Kellogg to be in a disordered state, and when he himself acknowledges, as he did to me, that crime is not generally punished, surely it is a serious error to pardon with so free a hand persons convicted of such grave and dangerous crimes as I have mentioned. It can not fail to increase disorder. Unhappily, it cannot bring the courts into greater contempt than their general corruption and inefficiency all over the State, and from the lowest to the highest, have already brought upon them.'

And now hear what Mr. Nordhoff has to say about the character of the constitution of the Republican party and of the Returning Board. I read from page 43:

"You can not travel far in Louisiana without discovering that the politicians who, in the name of the Republican party, rule it, and have done so for the last seven years, in all departments of its Government, State and local, are vehemently and unanimously detested by the white people. I have been amazed to see how all white men, and many blacks to my own knowledge—whether rich or poor; whether merchants, mechanics or professional men; whether Americans, French, Germans, Irish or Italians by birth; absolutely all, except the office-holders and their relatives—unite in this feeling of detestation of their rulers. It expresses itself so vividly at the polls that, as I noticed before, only 5,000 whites out of over 90,000 supported the Republican ticket at the last election, and it is a fact that most of these 50,000 are office-holders, the greater part are strangers in the State, and very many of them may justly be called adventurers. It is so universal a sentiment that I have found scarcely a colored man out of office who did not complain to me that the Republican whites are as faithless to their duty as they believe the other side would be.

REPUBLICAN CORRUPTION.

"Now, this small band of white men have for more than six years monopolized all political power and preferment in the State. They have levied, collected, and spent (and largely misspent) all the taxes—local taxes as well as State; they have not only made all the laws, but they have arbitrarily changed them, and have miserably failed to enforce any which were for the people's good; they have openly and scandalously corrupted the colored men whom they have brought into political life; they have used unjust laws to perpetuate and extend their own power; and they have practiced all the basest arts of ballot-stuffing, false registration, and repeating at election after election.

"In the last election it was proved before a committee of Congress that the Republican leaders had, in the city of New Orleans alone, made no less than 5,200 false registrations. A few days ago I went down the river to attend court, in order to see the working of a negro jury. The court had to adjourn for lack of a jury, and no panel had been drawn because, the names being taken from the registration lists of the parish, thirty-six out of forty-eight were found to be fictitious—and this in a country parish. The Republican Returning Board was condemned as a transparent fraud by two Congressional Committees, and has, so far as I know, no defender in Louisiana or in the country."

And in another place, page 53:

"The Republican party in Louisiana contains a great many men who were bitter secessionists, not only during, but after the war. One of the most conspicuous Republicans who came before the Congressional committee with complaints, and who was proved there and then by documentary evidence to be a rogue, was a Breckinridge Democrat before the war. Another, Green, who admitted that he and his sons held pretty much all the offices in Lincoln parish, made a speech in the Legislature after the war advocating payment for slaves. I could mention dozens of such cases."

You will observe, sir, Chairman and fellow-citizens, that if there is truth in the story told by Mr. John Sherman and others in their communication to the President, it is not all the truth. As I have said, investigations are now in progress which will enable the public to form a reasonably trustworthy judgment as to the facts bearing upon the charges which have been so recklessly made against the people of the South. And right here I deem it my duty to say that as a Northern citizen—as one whose sympathies during the war were with the Union, and with the efforts to establish freedom throughout the land—I feel humiliated and mortified by the spirit in which, at this time, eleven years after the close of the war, Republican speakers and journals deal with the men of our blood and kin in the Southern States. Undoubtedly they were wrong in entering upon a rebellion for the sake of slavery, but they have been defeated and accepted in good faith all the consequences of their defeat. They would be more than human if they had been able to divest themselves completely of the feelings engendered by the war. But on the whole they have renewed their loyalty and attachment to the Union and their relations of fraternity with the people of the North with a degree of [illegible] affection whose very ardor is touching in the extreme; and I pity the man who, at this moment, when men claiming to be the representatives of the Republican party of the North are plundering them of the poor remnant of the possessions which they were able to save amid the ravages of the late sectional war, refuses to give them a fair hearing, and eagerly grasps at every foul slander with which men like Kellogg and his abettors seek to destroy almost the only thing which is left to them—their character as honest citizens and brave men. There are innumerable ex-rebels, so-called, who are better and more loyal Union men to-day than the prominent managers of the Republican party; and there is not a man in the land whose hand I would grasp with more pride than that of the present Governor of South Carolina, Wade Hampton.

WHAT IS AT STAKE.

Mr. Chairman, there are many other topics, perhaps, more germane to the subject of our deliberations this evening, upon which I would like to talk; but I have already occupied more than my due share of the time at our command. I content myself, therefore, in conclusion, with the simple expression of the hope and trust that the present unfortunate controversy between the contending parties will be peaceably settled. There is nothing either in the dignity or in the power of the Presidency which is worth the shedding of one drop of human blood in anger; but there is one thing at stake in this crisis with which no sacrifice is commensurate—and that is the preservation of the fundamental conditions of our liberty. The people of the United States are a law-abiding people; they know the value of peace and the cost of war from sad and recent experience. But they will not, and, in my judgment, ought not, to consent to any compromise or settlement of the present issue upon any basis other than that of an honest and fair application of the terms of the constitution and laws, as interpreted in the light of those rules of right of which they were intended to be the concrete specification.

THE ASHTABULA HORROR.

Details of One of the Most Frightful Railway Disasters on Record—The Awful Plunge into the Abyss of Death.

The proportions of the Lake Shore railway horror, writes a correspondent from Ashtabula, are now approximately known. Of the 159 passengers whom the maimed conductor reports as having been on board, but fifty-nine can be found or accounted for. The remaining 100, burned to ashes or shapeless lumps of charred flesh, lie under the ruins of the bridge and train.

The disaster was dramatically complete. No element of horror was wanting. First, the crash of the bridge, the agonizing moments of suspense as the seven laden cars plunged down their fearful leap to the icy river-bed; then the fire which came to devour all that had been left alive by the crash; then the water, which gurgled up from under the broken ice, and offered another form of death; and, finally, the biting blast filled with snow, which froze and benumbed those who had escaped water and fire. It was an ideal tragedy.

The scene of the accident was the valley of the creek which, flowing down past the eastern margin of Ashtabula village, passes under the railway three or four hundred yards east of the station. Here for many years after the Lake Shore road was built there was a long wooden trestle-work, but as the road was improved this was superseded about ten years ago with an iron Howe truss built at the Cleveland shops, and resting at either end upon high stone piers, flanked by heavy earthen embankments. The iron structure was a single span of 159 feet, crossed by a double track seventy feet above the water, which at that point is now from three to six feet deep, and covered with eight inches of ice. The descent into the valley on either side is precipitous, and, as the hills and slopes are piled with heavy drifts of snow, there was no little difficulty in reaching the wreck after the disaster became known.

The disaster occurred shortly before 8 o'clock. It was the wildest winter night of the year. Three hours behind its time, the Pacific express, which had left New York the night before, struggled along through the drifts and the blinding storm. The eleven cars were a heavy burden to the two engines, and when the leading locomotive broke through the drifts beyond the ravine, and rolled on across the bridge, the train was moving at less than ten miles an hour. The head lamp threw but a short and dim flash of light in the front, so thick was the air with the driving snow. The train crept across the bridge, the leading engine had reached solid ground beyond, and its driver had just given it steam, when something in the undergearing of the bridge snapped. For an instant there was a confused crackling of beams and girders, ending with a tremendous crash, as the whole train but the leading engine broke through the framework and fell in a heap of crushed and splintered ruins at the bottom. Notwithstanding the wind and storm the crash was heard by people within-doors half a mile away. For a moment there was silence, a stunned sensation among the survivors, who, in all stages of mutilation, lay piled among the dying and dead. Then arose the cry of the maimed and suffering; the few who remained unhurt hastened to escape from the shattered cars. They crawled out of windows into freezing water waist-deep. Men, women and children, with limbs bruised and broken, pinched between timbers and transfixed by jagged splinters, begged with their last breath for aid that no human power could give.

Five minutes after the train fell the fire broke out in the cars piled against the abutments at either end. A moment later flames broke from the smoking-car and first coach piled across each other near the middle of the stream. In less than ten minutes after the catastrophe every car in the wreck was on fire, and the flames, fed by the dry varnished work and fanned by the icy gale, licked up the ruins as though they had been tinder. Destruction was so swift that mercy was baffled.

Men who, in the bewilderment of the shock, sprang out and reached the solid ice, went back after wives and children, and found them suffocating and roasting in the flames. The neighboring residents, startled by the crash, were lighted to the scene by the conflagration, which made even their prompt assistance too late. By midnight the cremation was complete. The storm had subsided, but the wind still blew fiercely, and the cold was more intense. When morning came, all that remained of the Pacific express was a winrow of car-wheels, axles, brake-irons, truck-frames, and twisted rails lying in a black pool at the bottom of the gorge. The wood had burned completely away, and the ruins were covered with white ashes. Here and there a mass of charred, smoldering substance sent up a little cloud of sickening vapor, which told that it was human flesh slowly yielding to the corrosion of the fire. On the crest of the western abutment, half buried in the snow, stood the rescued locomotive, all that remained of the fated train. As the bridge fell, its driver had given it a quick head of steam, which tore the drawhead from its tender, and the liberated engine shot forward and buried itself in the snow. The other locomotive, drawn backward by the falling train, tumbled over the pier and fell bottom upward on the express car next behind. The engineer, Folsom, escaped with a broken leg—how, he cannot tell, nor can anyone else imagine. There are no remains that can ever be identified. The three charred, shapeless lumps recovered up to noon to-day are beyond all hope of recognition. Old or young, male or female, black or white, no man can tell. They are alike in the crucible of death. For the rest, there are piles of white ashes in which glisten the crumbling particles of calcined bones; in other places masses of black, charred debris, half under water, which may contain fragments of bodies, but nothing of human semblance.

The survivors relate many interesting details of the catastrophe. Charles S. Carter, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was in the rear drawing-room car playing cards with two others, one a Mr. Shepherd, of New York, the other a stranger. Suddenly he heard the glass of the car-windows begin to crackle, and the car plunged to the bottom of the ravine. The stranger was killed instantly. Mr. Shepherd had a broken leg which was amputated this morning, and Carter, though somewhat bruised, was comparatively unhurt. Carter says that the front of the car was much lower than the rear, and that the flames in the front began to eat upward and spread with great rapidity. He turned to the assistance of Mr. Shepherd and with great difficulty succeeded in getting him out, the broken leg impeding their advance. When Shepherd was fairly out, Carter returned to the assistance of a woman who was calling for help at the front of the car. He got her out, and, as she was thinly clad, gave her his overcoat.

Educating an Army.

Gen. McClellan says, in Scribner, that when one of the Khedive's American officers had been some months in Egypt, the Khedive sent for him one day, and asked him what was the worst thing he had observed in regard to the army. He replied that it was that the regiments were commanded by civilians. The Khedive said: "No, there is a Colonel for every regiment." "Yes," said the American, "but each Colonel, Chief of Battalion, and Captain has a civilian clerk who controls everything relating to the pay, rations and clothing of the men, and whoever does that really commands." "You are right," said the Khedive, "but how would you correct this?" "By requiring that the Colonels should have sergeants as their clerks; the Chiefs of Battalions, corporals; the Captains, private soldiers; and also requiring that the officers should supervise and do much of the real work themselves." "That means that the army should learn reading, writing and arithmetic!" "That is exactly what I was coming at, Your Highness." The Khedive reflected for a moment, and then at once wrote an order to the Minister of War, requiring; that from that moment no person in the army (either officer or soldier) should be promoted until he was master of reading, writing and arithmetic. The consequence was that the whole army immediately became a school.

Stephens.

Alexander Stephens is much feebler than when he was here in the last Congress. He has chosen his seat near the rear tier of seats on the Democratic side. He is brought into the chamber every morning in a chair, to the end of the aisle on which his seat is located, is then lifted from his chair by a strong Doorkeeper, and carried to his seat. He never attempts now to rise from his seat when addressing the Speaker.—Washington Letter.

THE velocity with which a body falling from an infinite distance would reach the sun would be equal to that which would be generated by a constant force equal to the weight of the body at the sun's surface operating through a space equal to the sun's radius. One pound would at the sun's surface weigh about twenty-eight pounds. Taking the sun's radius at 441,000 miles, the energy of a pound of matter falling into the sun from infinite space would equal that of a 28-pound weight descending upon the earth from an elevation of 441,000 miles, supposing the force of gravity to be as great at that elevation as it is at the earth's surface. It would amount to upward of 65,000,000,000 foot pounds.

WITH reference to color blindness, or the lack of power to distinguish colors, it is stated that very few of the persons so affected are conscious of the defect in their vision. Many railway accidents are caused by the color blindness of their employes, and the Swedish Railway Direction has recently ordered an examination to be made by oculists of all the men in their employ, so as to guard against the danger. Prof. Holmgren, who has just examined the employes of the Upsala Gefle railway, found that, out of 266 persons examined, eighteen were color blind, and so utterly unfitted for railway service.

A Politician's Lucky Number.

Sacramento Bee.

One is Pacheco's lucky number. He has just been elected to Congress by a majority of one vote. In 1869 he secured a seat in the Senate from San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbar counties by a majority of one on the popular vote, and, his seat being contested, by a majority of one in the Senate. And he became governor by the election of Gov. Booth to the United States Senate by a majority of one. If the Pacheco family had a coat of arms, it should have conspicuously engraved the figure "1."

The Iron Rail.

A spicy sketch descriptive of a trip over the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe Railroad and of the beauties, scenery and pleasure resorts of the Rocky Mountains, by "Nym Crinkle," the musical and dramatic critic of the New York World, sent free on application, together with the San Juan guide, maps and time table of this new and popular route from Kansas City and Atchison to Pueblo, Denver and all points in Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and the San Juan Mines. The finest line of Pullman Sleepers on the continent between the Missouri River and the Rocky Mountains without change.

Address, T. J. ANDERSON,
Gen. Pass. Ag't.
Topeka, Kan

Yesterday morning a laboring man who wanted to go to Windsor, but who didn't want to expend a dime for ferriage, started to cross on the ice. He had not progressed but fifty feet from the foot of First street when he got into an air-hole and was pulled out by men who had been watching him. One of these men was relating the incident in a street car, when a solemn looking passenger bent forward and inquired:

"And did you succeed in resuscitating him?"

"No sir, we didn't," was the blunt answer. "We pulled him ashore, gave him some whisky, and he went off as lively as a cricket. You don't think I'd be mean enough to resuscitate a poor laboring man, do you?"

The other didn't say.—Detroit Free Press.

The N. Y. Herald is responsible for the following story:

"Scene—Senator Bank's room in Washington. "Personae"—A number of republicans, among them ex-Attorney-General Williams, enter Smith who remarked, "Well, so Secretary Fish has resigned. That's the news just now."

Mr. Williams, after a pause:—"That reminds me of the remark of a young fellow I knew in Oregon, Bill Wintersmith. Bill was raised in Salem, but moved off a hundred miles or so down the road, married and settled down. After a year or two he thought he'd ride up to Salem to see how things looked, as he got near town an old man met him on horseback, and says he, 'Ain't you Bill Wintersmith?' "That's my name," said Bill. "Well," says the old man, Bill, your father's dead." Bill looked at him with contempt, and says, "I don't care a d—n—I don't live at home.'

Something to Rally On.

Just before dinner yesterday a woman living on Larned street entered a Jefferson avenue grocery with snapping eyes, and as she slamed a tin pail down on the counter hissed out;

"Mince-meat, is it? Why don't you call it slop, or stuff or hen-feed?"

"Yes, that is some of our mince-meat," replied the butcher, as he uncovered the pail. "I remember of your buying this yesterday."

"I bought this hash for mince-meat!" she exclaimed.

"It is called mince-meat, madam."

"But it tastes like saw-dust and pork scraps chopped together!"

"I shouldn't wonder if it did, but you see most everybody understands that ready-made mince meat is simply a neucleus to rally on. It is the foundation, as it were, of a good thing. You want to add more meat, more apples, more rasins, some brandy, some cider, a little cinnamon, a few cloves, a sprinkle of sugar, a trifle of spice and you cant fail to have good pies."

"Then why not make my own mince-meat?" she shrieked.

"Why not? We keep it on sale simply as an objective point to rally on."

"Well, you and your whole caboodle of clerks can rally on this half gallon," she firmly said, turning the pail upside down on the counter.

Just as you desire, madam," was the affable reply; when she reached the door and looked back, the merchant still wore the same kind and patient smile.—Detroit Free Press.

Hoisted by His Own Petard.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

Peter Walbuch is his name. American is his nation, 27 York street is his dwelling place, and peddling super-carbureted non-explosive oil, or spirit gas, is his avocation. Peter works for a man named Evans, who manufactures the above named compound from refuse petroleum at No. 463 West Sixth street. Yesterday Peter sold quite a large amount of his goods to various parties, to whom he represented that it was more brilliant than gas, while, at the same time, as safe in its use as water and almost as cheap. He told his little yarn so often that after awhile he got to believe it himself. In this frame of mind he wandered into the saloon of John Lawrence, No. 81 Harrison avenue A redhot coal stove was making things hotter than a lime-kiln in the place where Peter entered, but as he was a little chilled by a long walk he stepped close up to it and sat down his three-gallon sample can of "non explosive" almost on the hearth of the radiator. "Here, you! don't set that coal-oil by that hot stove," thundered the owner of the place; "do you want to burn me out of house and home!" "That ain't coal-oil," was the response, "and it can't be made to burn." "What's it for, then?" was the query. "For illuminating purposes," replied Peter, who smelled trade in the air. "This is the celebrated, famed and world-renowed super-carbureted, non-explosive, patent, back-action, low-pressure, spirit gas oil. One gallon of this oil will give more light than seven thousand feet of twelve-candle gas, and at the same time it is so safe that you couldn't set fire to it with a red-hot poker." "Mein Gott im Himmel, is dot so?" said a burley representative of Faderland. "Indeed it is," replied Peter, "when I pick up the papers every morning and read of accident after accident caused by the use of cursed inflammable coal-oils I feel that I have a high and noble duty to perform, and I seize my can of super-carbureted and rally forth determined to sell a barrel of it a day and so do all in my power to lessen the death-rate by diminishing the consumption of that terrible scourge of domestics, who rise late and make fires in a hurry, by that quantity. I should like to take your order for a couple of gallons immediately." "Wont it burn?" said Mr. Lawrence "Nary burn," responded Peter. "See here, I'll give you a practical test of its non-combustibility." With that he opened the stove door and poured about a quart of his super-carbureted on the live coals and the next instant there was a terific explosion, and Peter, the stove and the can parted company. Peter went through the side of the house as if shot out of a Krupp gun. The stove was last seen going over Fairmount Hill like a meteor, and the blazing contents of the can followed close after like the fierey tail of a comet. A policeman came along, and after extricating Peter from a snow-drift took him to the Oliver-street Station-house on the charge of peddling without a license.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but natural that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables, routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

The Black Hills in Winter.

From a Correspondent of the N. Y. Sun.

CUSTER CITY (Black Hills, D. T.), Dec. 17.—All roads lead to Custer, as I discovered on my trip to this city, the destined metropolis of the Hills; for trying no less than three well recommended short cuts to Deadwood, I invariably brought up at Buffalo Gap, the grand gateway to Custer and the gold country beyond. Custer is to-day exactly what it was ten months ago, as regards formation. One thousand hastily constructed shanties, and some two hundred half finished huts, string along the avenues and streets. Paint and ornamental work are as conspicuously absent now as then. French creek is as destitute of water, and this scarcity is as painfully manifest in the grizzly faces of the few inhabitants. The city is here just the same, but the deserted huts—a ratio of three to one with those occupied—show that most of the citizens have left. The old settlers say they have gone east for the winter, or else are off in the stampede to Battle Creek, but that they will all be back in the spring.

I have been shown to specimens of quartz taken from the Webfoot lode, a lead commencing two miles from the city and running due north, as far as prospected, eight miles. The first specimen was taken from the claim next to the discovery, eight feet from the surface, and the quartz assays $36,000 to the ton. The other specimen was taken from the eighth claim, and was said to be almost solid gold, and to assay about $50,000. I was taken over to the De Smitt lode, to the east to Lawn, where the quartz assays $1,777 and some cents (to be precise) and thence to the Centennial lode, to the south of the city, and shown big lumps of ore. I inquired about the placer diggings, and was told that "we don't care to bother ourselves with such small, fickel, and transient enterprises. We have our lodes; there's millions in 'em, and with them we are more than content."

But Battle Creek is now the rallying cry, if the region from Deadwood to this city is not soon depopulated. It will be because Battle Creek is not long enough nor broad nor deep enough to hold the people rushing thither. There is much reason in their madness, too, for Capt. Timblin showed me a nugget to-day that he picked from the ground, "just as you would gather hickory nuts, you know." It weighed fifteen dollars and (again to be minute) four cents, while a pan of earth from the same claim washed out ten dollars. The discovery is said to be equally rich if not more valuable than the famous Deadwood gulch, from which the wheeler Brothers took so much dust. A sprightly little town has already budded into existence, and will soon blossom into a city.

The first quartz mill to enter the Hills passed through here to-day bound for Deadwood. It cost $15,000, $500 for transportation, and tumbled from the wagon into the Cheyenne river while being taken across, entailing great labor to recover it. Its owners are the Pinny Brothers, of Nebraska City. There is a fortune in that mill if there is money in anything, for the great need of the several mining districts is machinery to reduce the ore.

Deadwood begins to look "down in the mouth." Her placer claims are nearly all worked out, and she has not sufficient quartz mining to enable her to hold her own. The luckiest fellows in that district, next to the Wheelers, have been three colored men, who had no more knowledge of prospecting and mining than they had of astronomy. But they trailed in a little spur, thrust their shovels into the bank, and drew out several "colors" at the first fill. Their "pay" increased as they proceeded, until they demonstrated their possession of the richest claim in Deadwood. Crowds flocked to Nigger Gulch as it was called, to see the shiny" washed out, and when the trio shut down for the season, a few weeks ago, two went home each with $75,000 in their pockets The third remans to watch their still valuable claim.

Prices are remarkably low now in Custer, considering that freight from the Union Pacific at Sidney to this point is seven or eight cents per pound. For instance, beer is only $1.60 per gallon at the Custer brewery, and board $7.00 per week. Flour sells at $10.00 to $12 per cwt., and corn meal the same. Poor whiskey, "two bits" a drink; good not in demand—it isn't raspy enough. The moral atmosphere of "the metropolis" should be commended. Gambiers, and others that prey upon their fellow beings, have qietly departed. A good school has been established, and there is talk of forming a church society.

There is no Post Office north of the Indian agencies. Letters from the Hills are turned over to the stage Company at Sidney, and a charge of ten cents each is made for bringing them up. Stages arrive once a week, but more lines and daily trips are promised for the spring travel, which is epected to be immense.

The Herald, a new weekly paper published by A. R. Kennedy and J. S. Bartholomew, late of Omaha, made its first appearance last week. It has a fine dress, much vim, and telegrahic news.

Indians are dodging around on the sly, but beyond cutting the wire last night, have committed no hostile act of late; still everybody is on guard and expecting depredations at any time, looking for a high old war whoop when spring enables the reds and their ponies to subsist away from the agencies.

On my way through Red Cloud Agency I learned that those noble patriots, Messrs. Dear and Yates, Indian traders, had again come to the relief of the nation, by filling a "special contract" for hay at $60 per ton. Their patriotism is shown by the fact that the hay costs them, delivered, $7.50 per ton

We are reminded of winter only by an occasional piercing wind. As a general thing the days are bright and warm, and the total absence of snow enables the miners to continue operations.

In the northern districts there is a little snow, but not enough to impede mining or at all to interfere with prospecting.

THE SUN.

1877. NEW YORK. 1877.

The different editions of THE SUN during the next year will be the same as during the year that has just passed. The daily editions will on week days be a sheet of four pages, and on Sundays a sheet of eight pages, or 56 broad columns; while the weekly editions will be a sheet of eight pages of the same dimensions and character that are already familiar to our friends.

THE SUN will continue to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretence, imbecility, and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It will contend for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot boxes and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It will endeavor to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete, and trustworthy accounts of current events, and will employ for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, will be full, accurate, and fearless; and it will doubtless continue to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it will endeavor to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachment of unjustified power.

The price of the daily SUN will be 55 cents a month or $6.50 a year, post paid, or with the Sunday edition $7.70 a year.

The SUNDAY edition alone, eight pages $1.20 a year, post paid.

The WEEKLY SUN, eight of 56 broad columns will be furnished during 1877 at the rate of $1.00 a year, post paid

The benefit of this large reduction from the previous rates of the WEEKLY can be enjoyed by individual subscribers without the necessity of making up clubs. At the same time, if any of our friends chose to aid in extending our circulation, we shall be grateful to them, and every such person who sends us ten or more subscribers from one place will be entitled to one copy of the paper for himself free. At one dollar a year, postage paid; and considering the size of the sheet and the quality of its contents, we are confident the people will consider THE WEEKLY SUN the cheapest newspaper published in the world, and we trust also one of the very best.

SENTINEL.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1877.

Every reader and thinking man in the state who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for at least one of the editions of the Sentinel. Farmers, Merchants and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL.

The Weekly Sentinel will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than Compare Favorably with any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be Newsy, Literary, and full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

ILLUSTRATED.

Notices of the Press.

The Magazine has attained in its one quarter century and more of existence to that point where it may be said of it, in the words of Dr. Johnson, "It is vain to blame and useless to praise." The lustre of its long-ago attained reputation has increased as the years have passed, and its future seems as bright if not brighter than at any time since the golden hue of prosperity settled around its later and better years.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Harper's Monthly is marked by the same characteristics which gave it circulation from the first with the better class of readers. It combines reading matter with illustrations in a way to make clear and vivid the facts presented. Pictures merely designed to catch the eye of the ignorant are never inserted.—Chicago Journal.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1877.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE late Commodore Vanderbilt was buried on Sunday, Jan. 7. Rev. Dr. Deems, his spiritual adviser, conducted the burial services at the Church of the Strangers, after which the remains were interred in the family vault at New Dorp, Staten Island....E. W. Major was hanged at Concord, N. H., last Friday for murdering his wife. The culprit died protesting his innocence.

NEW YORK papers chronicle the death of Mrs. Charlotte Egbert, a sister of Commodore Vanderbilt, aged 86 years.

THE provisions of the will of the late Commodore Vanderbilt have been published. With the exception of numerous bequests varying from small sums to $500,000—the latter figure is his wife's allowance—the great bulk of the vast estate is transmitted to the eldest son, William H. Vanderbilt, who thus becomes the undisputed possessor of an amount of property estimated to be something over $50,000,000 in value....The Rev. Drs. William M. Taylor, R. S. Storrs, W. I. Budington, H. M. Scudder, Ray Palmer, George H. Hepworth, David B. Coe, A. H. Clapp, Benjamin N. Martin, William H. Ward, and several other clergymen of New York and Brooklyn, have united to form a new local Congregational association, most of them having withdrawn from the old association in consequence of the indorsement of Mr. Beecher.

LUCILLE WESTERN, the well-known actress, died in Brooklyn, a few days ago, of congestion of the lungs.

THE WEST.

A DISPATCH of the 6th, from Ashtabula, Ohio, says: "There are nineteen bodies more or less completely preserved yet remaining unidentified in the morgue at Ashtabula. Forty persons, variously supposed to have been on the train, have been ascertained by the railway authorities to be at home safe. The dispute as to the number of persons on the train is as far from settlement as ever. The railroad officers are convinced that the number could not have been more than 140, while the passengers are sure there could not have been less than 200."

A DIABOLICAL attempt to wreck a passenger train on the Chicago and Northwestern railroad was recently discovered and frustrated by detectives. A point near Ames, Iowa, where there is a long, steep grade, was selected for the perpetration of the deed. A detective from Chicago wormed himself into the confidence of the scoundrels, and pretended to be eager for a hand in the job. They were to throw the train from the track, saturate the cars with kerosene and set them on fire, and use chloroform upon the passengers where they could do so to advantage. They also intended to murder the express messenger and rob the express car. They were on the ground prepared to carry out their plans when a body of men, who had been instructed by the detective, surprised and captured the whole outfit, and the passenger train passed on without the passengers being aware of the danger that had threatened them....Chicago papers record the demise of Mark Sheridan, a well-known and prominent resident of that city. He had held various local offices, and was the recognized leader of the Celtic element in politics....Miles Ogle, with several aliases, one of the most skillful counterfeiters in the West, was arrested in Cincinnati a few days ago. Many well-executed plates were found in his possession.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., is said to be infested with the worst gang of thieves and thugs who have visited that city for several years, the recent assembling of the Legislature and the large number of visitors which has been drawn there being the immediate attraction.

THE new bridge across the creek at Ashtabula, Ohio, the scene of the recent railroad disaster, has been completed, and trains are again running over the chasm....The annual statistics of Minneapolis, Minn., show $1,000,000 worth of buildings put up during 1876, and 5,400,000 bushels of wheat ground into flour.

THE libel suit of the Rev. Stuart Robinson, of Louisville, Ky., against McKee, Fishback & Houser, proprietors of the old St. Louis Democrat, was brought to a close last week, at St. Louis, by defendants confessing judgment in the sum of $50,000, and agreeing to pay all costs of suit, including attorneys' fees of plaintiff. The original damage asked was $50,000. The libel consisted of a charge that Robinson was engaged in a plot during the rebellion to introduce yellow fever infected clothing into the North....Farmers of the great State of Minnesota have taken hold of the tree-planting business in earnest. Over ten millions of cuttings were set out during the past year, most of which are doing well. The young trees consist largely of cottonwoods and white willows, but there is also a liberal sprinkling of maple, larch, white oak, etc.

THE SOUTH.

THE Democratic Legislature of Louisiana, sitting in St. Patrick's Hall, New Orleans, has passed resolution declaring the canvass of the late election by the Wells Returning Board null and void, and instructing the Judiciary Committee to "prepare an act providing for a proper and legal canvass of the returns of said election."....The Republican Legislature has passed an act prohibiting the formation of military companies, other than State militia, in the State....Gov. Kellogg has reappointed John T. Ludeling Chief Justice of the Supreme Court for eight years.

LIKE South Carolina, Louisiana is now blessed with a duality of Governors. On the 8th inst. S. B. Packard was inducted into the gubernatorial chair, at the State House, in New Orleans, by the Republicans. About the same hour the Democrats inaugurated Gen. Nicholls at St. Patrick's Hall. The ceremonies at the State House were interrupted by a mob while Antoine, the colored Lieutenant Governor-elect, was delivering his address. The crowd hooted and yelled and pelted the police with oyster shells. With this exception, the day passed off quietly. Nicholls has appointed Col. Thomas B. Boylan, Chief of Police, who is organizing a formidable police force. It is feared trouble and bloodshed may grow out of the clash of authority between the opposing police forces.

TUESDAY, Jan. 9, was one of the most exciting days witnessed in New Orleans for some years. Early on the morning of that day the partisans of Gen. Nicholls, the Democratic claimant to the Governorship of Louisiana, assembled in large numbers in Lafayette square, armed and equipped. From thence they made raids upon and captured the courts and police stations. In fact, they were in possession of the whole city before evening, the Packard Government and Legislature meantime taking refuge in the State House. Gen. Nicholls issued a proclamation, as Governor of Louisiana, urging the people to retire peacefully to their homes, and abstain from all excesses whatever. At Washington the matter was made the subject of a special Cabinet session, which resulted in a determination to take no action which could be construed as an attempt to settle the political status of either side to the contest further than to direct Gen. Augur, the commander at New Orleans, to prevent bloodshed. Instructions to this effect were accordingly telegraphed to Gen. Augur by the Secretary of War.

IN the Packard Legislature, at New Orleans, on the 10th inst., a resolution was introduced by ex-Gov. Warmoth, a member of the lower house, looking to a compromise between the contending forces of the rival Governors. It proposed the appointment of a committee of eight, to confer with a similar committee of the Nicholls Government, to devise measures for a peaceful and lawful settlement of the contest for the possession of the State Government. The resolution went over under the rules....Still another revision of the South Carolina election returns has been had. This third count, which, it seems, was made by gentlemen representing both political parties, results in finding that a majority of votes were cast for the Democratic candidates for Governor, State Treasurer and Attorney General, all the other Republican candidates for State officers receiving a majority of the votes cast.

THE situation in New Orleans on the 12th inst. remained unchanged. Gov. Packard stated to a press correspondent that it was difficult for his Government, which depended in a large degree upon the colored people, to make a successful fight against the whites without the aid of Federal troops. All eyes, it is stated, were turned to Washington, watching events there. Packard had assigned Gen. A. S. Badger to the command of the State militia, vice Longstreet, and he was busily organizing his forces. The Nicholls militia had taken possession of the Recorder of Mortgages and Register of Conveyances. It was asserted that Pinchback had spirited away the four absent Republican Senators, and thus broken a quorum. They were on Lake Pontchartrain fishing, and would not return except to secure Pinchback's election to the United States Senate. Both Governors were besieged by applicants for office. Gen. Augur told a newspaper reporter that he thought the muddle would be peaceably settled, and reiterated his determination not to interfere, except in case of riot and bloodshed, or in the event of any attempt being made to interfere with either of the two Legislatures. Pinchback's friends claimed that he was master of the Senatorial situation, and were jubilant. Packard said he intended to retake the Supreme Court building, but would proceed under the forms of law, and avoid a conflict.

POLITICAL.

THE Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times telegraphs that journal: "It is now regarded as certain that the reports of the Senate and House committees sent to investigate the counting of the electoral votes in the States of Louisiana and Florida will conflict, and that they will form no satisfactory basis upon which to adjust the pending difficulties, and not a few Democratic Senators have lost all hope of any acceptable plan of counting the electoral vote being evolved by the conference committee appointed for this purpose. The expectation of many now is that the reports of the investigating committees will involve a protracted debate upon the subject of counting the Presidential vote, and that the time for the performance of that act will arrive before any plan is perfected or at least agreed upon."

THE Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune telegraphs the latest utterances of President Grant touching the Presidential complication. He defined his position in these words: "When all the political power and responsibility vested in me by the suffrages of the people shall have expired by constitutional limitation, which will be on the 4th day of March, I shall be ready to willingly surrender this responsibility; but until then I shall execute the office of President, and protect and defend the constitution. It is not my province to determine the question of an election, but to execute the laws. Whoever is declared to be my constitutional successor, to him will I surrender the reins of Government." He took issue with those who have suggested that Gov. Tilden might be inaugurated whether he was declared elected or not, and strongly intimated that that could not be done in Washington, where alone he thought an inauguration legal. He said there could not be two legal Presidents; that he should consider an inauguration at any other place than Washington void; that any attempt to exercise authority elsewhere, under such circumstances, could not be recognized, and any recognition of such assumed authority by any officer of the Government would be treason. The President ended in substance as follows: "The President's authority, exercised in accordance with law, is as supreme in the District of Columbia as if it were a garrisoned fortress, and any demonstrations or warlike concentration of men threatening the peace of the city or endangering the security of the public property or treasure of the Government could be summarily dealt with, should the public safety demand, by a declaration of martial law."

THE Tennessee Legislature has chosen ex-Gov. Isham G. Harris United States Senator from that State for six years, from the 4th of March. He succeeds Mr. Cooper....J. B. Eustis has been elected to the short Senatorial term from Louisiana by the Nicholls Legislature.

THE Republican Legislature of Louisiana has chosen ex-Gov. Kellogg United States Senator from Louisiana for six years from the 4th of March....The Republicans of New Hampshire met in State Convention last week, and nominated Benjamin F. Prescott for Governor. Resolutions were adopted declaring that Hayes is the legally-elected President, and that he ought to be inaugurated.

THE dead-lock in the New Jersey Legislature has been broken. After several days' balloting a compromise was effected, resulting in an equal division of the offices, the Democrats securing the Speakership.

WASHINGTON.

GOV. GROVER, of Oregon, in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, stated that, in giving a certificate to Cronin as an elector, he acted in conformity with the constitution and the best legal authority he could procure. He received a letter from Judge Hoadley, of Cincinnati, in which four authorities relating to cases of ineligibility of persons to office were cited. It was a three-page letter, and was received at the Executive office about a week before the witness rendered his decision in the case of Watts. He received a telegram from ex-Senator Gwin, stating that certain prominent legal gentlemen thought Watts ineligible, and he wanted to know by what time the question had to be settled. Abram S. Hewitt, of New York, sent witness a communication in which two decisions in Indiana, one in Maryland, and one in Pennsylvania were cited as being applicable in Watts' case. Manton Marble, of New York, telegraphed witness calling attention to Watts' case, and witness answered that he then had the case under consideration.

THE House Committee on Naval Affairs has prepared a bill authorizing the formation of a commission to inquire and report as to the future naval policy of the United States, investigate the whole status of the navy, and devise such legislation as may be necessary to bring it up to the highest efficiency consistent with a wise economy....The sum of $12,000, belonging to the Illinois National Bank of Chicago, recently stolen from the Treasury Department, has been restored, the person who committed the larceny having returned it to the Treasurer through a third party. It is further stated that the guilty person, fearful of detection, resorted to this means of restoring the stolen funds, in the hope of being saved from public exposure, and that no person connected with the detective service had anything to do with its recovery....The President, in his last regular Sunday talk with the Associated Press agent, is reported as expressing himself, anent Louisiana affairs, substantially as follows: "I do not," he said, "propose to interfere with the Packard-Nicholls imbroglio. I have nothing before me to justify action in the way of the recognition of either Governor, and, therefore, cannot do so, particularly as a committee of each House of Congress is now engaged in investigating all the facts of the late election, including the contests of the two Governors and two Legislatures, both claiming to be legally elected. Under these circumstances, to recognize one or the other would be hardly justifiable, and I have so informed Gov. Kellogg." The President further said that the Democratic State organization has the sympathy of such portion of the people of that State as have the requisite means to give sustenance to it, and their Governor and Legislature would be recognized by them even if there were not half so many as there are now in the Democratic party in Louisiana. The President repeated that he would not interfere by recognizing either Government until the contest should be settled through the Congressional investigation now in progress, but he should consider it to be his duty to keep the peace if occasion required, and prevent bloodshed pending the political complications.

THE theft from the Treasury Department of the $12,000 package of bank bills which was mysteriously restored, a few days ago, by some unknown hand, has been traced to Ferd S. Winslow, a clerk in the department. Winslow was formerly President of the Scandinavian National Bank of Chicago, an institution that was brought to ruin by his questionable practices. After the collapse of this bank Winslow fled to Europe to escape prosecution, subsequently returned, and, by some unaccountable means, secured a responsible desk in the treasury at Washington....A Washington dispatch says "the House Committee on Appropriations will report all the appropriation bills now unfinished within the next ten days. There are seven bills in this condition, namely, the Legislative, Sundry Civil, Army, Navy, Deficiency, Indian, and River and Harbor. The aggregate amount of all the appropriation bills will not fall short of $140,000,000, which is intended to cover the entire expense of administering the Government during the coming year. Judge Holman thinks the reduction of appropriations this year under those of last year will be from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000....The President has appointed W. J. Murtagh, proprietor of the Republican, President of the Washington Police Board, with four new members—ex-Mayor Emery, formerly of New Hampshire; John T. Mitchell, of Georgia; J. C. Harkness, in place of Col. Berrett; and Fred Douglass, in place of W. H. Smith the colored Librarian of the House of Representatives.

THE Secretary of the Treasury has issued a call for the redemption of $10,000,000 five-twenty bonds of 1865, May and November. Principal and accrued interest will be paid at the treasury on and after the 10th of April next, and the interest on bonds will cease that day. Following are the descriptions of the bonds: Coupon bonds, $100, Nos. 17,001 to 21,850, inclusive; $500, Nos. 22,101 to 26,700, inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 53,301 to 62,400, inclusive. Total, $7,000,000. Registered bonds—$50, Nos. 201 to 300, inclusive; $100, Nos. 3,451 to 4,500, inclusive; $500, Nos. 2,751 to 3,250, inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 10,001 to 12,000, inclusive; $5,000, Nos. 4,151 to 4,750, inclusive; $10,000, Nos. 5,151 to 8,200, inclusive. Total, $3,000,000....The Secretary of War, on the 10th inst., telegraphed the following order to Gen. Augur, at New Orleans: "It is reported that the State House in New Orleans is surrounded by a mob. If this is so, notify all persons to disperse, and compel a compliance with your order. It is the determination of the President to see that the Legislature is not molested. When he has full knowledge of all the facts in the premises, he will decide which should be recognized."

ENOS RUNYON, the New York banker, appeared before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, the other day, and purged himself of contempt by giving the name of Conrad N. Jordan, the cashier of the Third National Bank, of New York, as the customer who obtained a draft for $8,000 on Oregon....The House Committee on Pacific Railroads have unanimously agreed upon a report recommending the passage of the so-called "Compromise" Texas Pacific Railroad bill....The House committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the electoral vote have finished their report on that subject. Their conclusions are:

First—That the power to count electoral votes is not conferred by the constitution upon the President of the Senate.

Second—That this power is conferred by the constitution upon the Senate and House of Representatives.

Third—That in the execution of the power to count the electoral vote, the House of Representatives is at least co-ordinate and equal with the Senate, and Fourth—That in counting the electoral votes no vote can be counted against the judgment and without the assent of the House.

These propositions were agreed to by a strict party vote—Representatives Knott, Tucker, Marsh and Sparks, Democrats, in the affirmative, and Representatives Seelye, Burchard of Illinois, and McDill, Republicans, in the negative.

GENERAL.

THE inquest in the Ashtabula horror demonstrates the fact that stubbornness or criminal neglect on the part of persons high in authority at the railroad station prevented the saving of the bodies in a recognizable condition, if not possible saving of life. The town fire department, with a serviceable steam engine, were on the spot and anxious to throw water upon the burning train, but were prevented from so doing by orders from persons whom they supposed had the right to give them.

THE steamship L'Amerique, from Havre to New York, went ashore at Seabright, N. J., on the morning of the 7th inst. Three seamen lost their lives while going ashore for help. The remainder of the crew and all the passengers, numbering some 200 people, were rescued by the life-saving station men.

A RUSSIAN fleet of five war vessels put into Charleston, S. C., last week, for coal and provisions. One of the vessels is commanded by the Grand Duke Alexis. The fleet will shortly anchor in New York harbor, when the Grand Duke will visit Washington and other cities....The steamers Seminole, from New York to Boston, and Montgomery, plying between Havana and New York, collided about thirty miles off Cape May, N. J., last week. The Montgomery was cut down by the collision and sunk in six minutes, carrying down with her the four passengers and nine of her crew, who were drowned. The balance of the crew, numbering 19, were saved.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Times, who was an eye-witness of the hostile meeting between Frederick May and James Gordon Bennett, at Marydell, Md., gives the following particulars of the affair: "A mistake in the bearings caused the contest to take place in Maryland, though the intention was to have it in Delaware. Bennett left New York Sunday evening, accompanied by S. H. Robbins, Dr. Charles Phelps, Louis Lorillard, Carroll Livingstone, and a servant. Lorillard and Livingstone stopped at the Continental at Philadelphia. The others went on to Wilmington. Here tickets were bought for Easton, Pa., but the party left the train at Marydell and started across the country on foot in the direction of the Delaware State line, as they supposed. They were joined at Marydell by May and his second, Dr. Frederick May, of Baltimore, who drove up in a sleigh from the direction of Wilmington. They walked south on the railroad track about a mile, and then turned to the left and crossed over a small hill into a glade which separates the Chaptank river from the road. Here a spot was selected, the ground measured, and the combatants placed in position face to face at twenty paces. The seconds loaded the pistols, gave them to the principals, and, after the usual preliminaries, ordered 'fire.' There was a single report, and, when the smoke cleared away, both men were standing unhurt. Two more shots were exchanged with like result. Then the seconds interfered, an amicable settlement was effected, and the parties left immediately for the North."

HON. WILLIAM A. WHEELER paid a visit to Columbus, Ohio, last week, and was in consultation with Gov. Hayes. The two visited the General Assembly, and Gov. Hayes personally introduced Mr. Wheeler to the members....The Comptroller of the Currency has called upon the National Banks for a statement of their condition on the 22d of December last.

FOREIGN.

A LONDON dispatch says there is a strong feeling of sympathy among the English people, and particularly among the aristocracy, for the Turks. At a meeting held at the Duke of Sutherland's town house $25,000 were raised for the relief of the Turkish soldiers in the Balkans. The Duke of Portland gave $5,000....Efforts are being made in Ireland to revive the ancient pastime of falconry. Subscriptions are solicited to establish a club. This is not intended to interfere in any way with the ancient Fish Hawker's Club, of Fills lane, Dublin.

LATE advices from the City of Mexico state that whole brigades and regiments of Iglesias' army have pronounced for Diaz, but the latter has not yet dared to attack Iglesias, he being strongly posted with 15,000 men at Silao. The States of Jalisco, Zacatecas, Durango, San Luis Potosi, and Nuevoleon have pronounced for Diaz. Gen. Mendez, who was appointed Regent for Diaz, to act during his absence, has issued a convocatoria for the election of President, Chief Justice, and members of Congress on Jan. 28. Gens. Mejia and Iglesias are both excluded as candidates or electors; also all members of the Lerdo and Juarez Governments.

A MADRID dispatch says that in Guipuzcoa and neighboring provinces of Spain a fearful hurricane had raged with terrific violence. Miles of woods on the mountains were burning, and whole herds of cattle and hamlets had been destroyed. The military of the province had been actively engaged in arresting the conflagration.

A DISPATCH from Constantinople says it is rumored there that a Russian army in Turkistan, 40,000 strong, has been destroyed by an uprising of the inhabitants.

A CONSTANTINOPLE telegram of the 12th says: "Explanations were exchanged in the conference which further demonstrated the existence of differences between the European powers and the Porte. The Turks persisted in rejecting the proposals of the powers, especially those for subjecting the appointment of Governors of the provinces to the approval of the powers, and for an international commission. The Europeans remained united throughout the discussion."....Samoa wants a commercial treaty with the United States.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, Jan. 5.—Senate.—The resolution submitted by the Committee on Privileges and Elections declaring that Turner, the telegraph operator at Jacksonville, Or., is in duty bound to answer certain questions, was called up, and, after a lengthy discussion, a vote was taken, which resulted yeas, 33; nays, 3. No quorum voting, the Senate adjourned till the 8th.

House.—On motion of Mr. Atkins (Tenn.) the Senate amendments to the bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions were concurred in....The Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to retain Mr. Barnes in custody....The House then went into committee of the whole on the [illegible], Mr. Haskins (N. Y.) in the chair. After about two hours spent over the Deficiency bill, the committee rose and the bill was passed.

SATURDAY, Jan. 6.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—Mr. Douglass, Chairman of the Freedman's Bank Committee, reported a bill authorizing the Bank Commissioners, in property sold under foreclosure, to secure the debts of the bank, and to sell the same at public or private sale, when it is for the interest of the bank to do so, and also modifying their former action....The House went into committee of the whole on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. The first paragraph being those making appropriations for the salaries of Ministers, Mr. Holman offered an amendment fixing the following rates of salaries for Ministers: Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, $15,000, now $17,500; Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, China, $10,000, now $12,000; Chili and Peru as at present; Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, Turkey, Venezuela, Hawaiian Islands, and Argentine Republic, $5,000, now $7,500; Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador and Nicaragua (one mission), $8,000, now $10,000; Minister and Consul General to Hayti and Liberia, each $4,000, now $7,500 and $4,000. Mr. Monroe opposed the amendment as one offered in the dark and without any reasons to sustain it. Mr. Holman advocated the amendment, and said that the whole system ought to be abolished, and he believed that it would disappear in a very short time. In every one of the enlightened nations of the world, the offices of Minister and Ambassador were now mere sinecures.....A few bills of local import were passed.

MONDAY, Jan. 8.—Senate.—Mr. Sherman presented a petition from prominent business men and citizens of Cincinnati, members of both political parties, asking an amicable settlement of the Presidential contest......Mr. Booth submitted a plan for the adjustment of the Presidential difficulty. It proposes that the Supreme Court shall be the final arbiter in the event of a failure of the two houses of Congress to agree when an objection has been raised to the counting of any electoral vote; the court, in deciding such contests, being authorized to receive in evidence the proceedings of any State officer, or board of State officers, and reports of Congressional committees....Mr. Wallace submitted a series of resolutions instructing the special committee on the Presidential question to report as to whether each house of Congress may examine both the facts and the law to enable it to determine if returns are true returns; if the appointment of electors by the State was in accordance with the provisions and guarantees of the Federal constitution; and, further, that when two returns come from a State, the two houses, acting concurrently, must determine which is the true return, and no electoral vote can be counted without the concurrence of both houses. He spoke at length upon these propositions....By a vote of yeas 3[illegible], nays 3, the resolution passed which was reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections requiring William M. Turner, manager of the Western Union telegraph office at Jacksonville, Ore., to answer the questions propounded as to messages which passed through his office in regard to the appointment of Cronin as a Presidential elector.

House.—Under a call of States, bills and resolutions were introduced and referred, including the following: By Mr. Chittenden, for paying the legal-tender debt in harmony with justice and the pledged faith of the Government; by Mr. Milliken (by request), to extend for two years the Southern Claims Commission; by Mr. Wright, for the free coinage of silver dollars, and making the same a legal tender; by Mr. Hunter, to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas; by Mr. Kehr, for the further redemption of the legal-tender United States notes; by Mr. Buckner, to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and to authorize paper circulation convertible into gold and silver; also, to provide for counting the Presidential electoral votes....On motion of Mr. Wilson, the select committee on the privileges of the House in regard to counting the electoral votes was instructed to inquire whether any votes were given during the recent election contrary to the prohibition contained in the constitution, that no United States official shall be chosen as Presidential elector....Mr. Kasson offered a resolution instructing the select committee on privileges of the House in regard to the counting of the electoral votes to inquire whether any electoral votes were cast by persons laboring under political disabilities, and, if so, what action should be taken thereon. Adopted.... A resolution calling for information as to the purposes for which troops have recently been stationed at Washington was defeated for want of a two-thirds majority....Mr. Mills (Tex.) moved to suspend the rules and adopt the following: "Resolved, That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to the balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our own political fabric depends, and we denounce the lawless invasion by armed forces of the soil of any State or Territory, no matter under what pretext, as among the gravest of crimes." It was lost for want of the requisite two-thirds majority.

TUESDAY, Jan. 9.—Senate.—Mr. Wallace's resolution in regard to the counting of the electoral vote by Congress was called up and Mr. Sherman made a long speech upon Louisiana affairs, claiming that the evidence before the Returning Board justified the throwing out of votes and giving the State to Hayes. The question was further discussed by Messrs. Bogy and Boutwell.... By unanimous vote, and without debate, the House bill to abolish the Board of Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police of the District of Columbia, and to transfer its duties to Commissioners of the District of Columbia, was passed. A resolution ordering the arrest of Enas Runyon, of the firm of Martin & Runyon, bankers and brokers, of New York, and the recusant witness in the Oregon electoral investigation, passed without division.

House.—Prof. Seelye introduced a bill for the abolishment of all import duties on books...... Speaker Randall reported William Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to the House as amenable to proceedings for contempt, for not delivering to the Louisiana Investigating Committee certain telegrams relating to the Louisiana election. A resolution requiring the arrest of Mr. Orton was adopted.... Extracts from the proceedings of the New Orleans Investigating Committee in the case of members of the Louisiana Returning Board were submitted, and the matter referred to the Judiciary Committee.... A bill was introduced by Mr. Watterson to regulate the commerce among States.... Mr. White (Ky.) asked leave to offer a resolution reciting that fears are entertained that there shall not be a peaceable settlement of the Presidential question, and declaring that any attempt to prejudice and excite the public mind in advance of the decision by the authority provided by the constitution is illwise, unpatriotic, and full of danger, and that it is the duty of all good citizens to peacefully and faithfully abide by the results reached in accordance with the constitution. Objected to.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 10.—Senate.—Several bills of no public importance were introduced.... Mr. Edmunds presented the annual report of the Librarian of Congress. Ordered printed. The report shows that the number of bound books in the library is 311,097, and of pamphlets 800,000.... Mr. Wright introduced a bill extending for two years the act establishing a Board of Southern Claims Commissioners. Referred.

House.—The bill authorizing a bridge across the Ohio between Cincinnati and Covington without pivot draw was rejected—yeas, 71; nays, 133.... [illegible] committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill authorizing the formation of a mixed commission to inquire and report as to the future naval policy of the United States. Made the special order for the 23d of this month....The Diplomatic Appropriation bill was under consideration in the House.

THURSDAY, Jan. 11.—Senate.—The Chair laid before the Senate the credentials of E. H. Rollins, Senator-elect from New Hampshire....Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a resolution discharging Enos Runyon, of the firm of Martin & Runyon, bankers and brokers, New York, from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, he having testified before the committee. Agreed to...... Mr. Hamlin reported back the House bill to establish certain post routes, and said the committee had considered the disagreement of the two houses in regard to the fast mail service, and directed him to report in favor of the Senate insisting upon its amendment, and moved that a committee of conference be appointed. Agreed to, and Messrs. Hamlin, Paddock and Maxey were appointed on the committee....The Senate then went into executive session, and, when the doors reopened, adjourned.

House.—Holman's amendment to the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill decreasing the salaries of Ministers and Consuls was defeated—80 to 100. All the amendments to the bill were voted down, and the bill was passed....The Military Appropriation bill was taken up and passed without amendment. It appropriates $263,161, a reduction of $129,919 from the estimates, and a reduction of $24 904 below the bill of last session.... Consent was given for the printing of the testimony taken by the committee on the election in Florida.... The joint resolution for the appointment of an International Silver Commission was considered.

A BIG BROTHER'S WRATH.

How and Why Mr. Frederick May Cowhided Mr. James Gordon Bennett.

[From the New York World.]

A very disagreeable incident on yesterday disturbed the usually tranquil current of life on Fifth avenue, near the Union Club. Mr. Frederick May, a young gentleman well known in this city, had taken up his station on the sidewalk outside the club, and was observed after a little to be evidently waiting for the exit of some one from that establishment. The attention of Mr. James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the Herald, who was then lunching within the club, with his sleigh in waiting at the door, having been called to this fact, he put on his greatcoat and immediately went out. Mr. May at once accosted him, and some words passed between them, Mr. Bennett apparently attempting to quiet his interlocutor, when Mr. May suddenly seized him by the front of the coat; and, drawing what appeared to be a rawhide, struck him violently over the back. Mr. Bennett is a well-knit, muscular man, but his assailant is considerably over six feet in height, and a well-known athlete; and, as it was evident that Mr. Bennett, for some reason, desired to avoid using violence with him, the latter received several severe blows, one of which cut him across the face and wounded him severely. The struggle lasted scarcely as long as this recital requires in writing, but Mr. Bennett was distinctly heard to say, in a contemptuous, bitter tone, "Why don't you kill me at once!" No weapons, however, were drawn on either side. The cowhide was either taken away by Mr. Bennett or dropped by Mr. May, and the combatants closed, Mr. Bennett being thrown and falling on the snow which blocked the street. By this time Mr. William P. Douglass and Mr. John Heckscher, who were in the club, came out, and with some difficulty separated the two. Mr. Bennett was led by them into the club and shortly afterward drove home in his sleigh, Mr. May immediately afterward walking away. Such is the story as told by eye-witnesses.

Of course rumor was at once on the alert with inventions as to the origin of so unusual a scene. It has been known for some time that an engagement of marriage existed between Mr. Bennett and Miss Carrie May, sister of Mr. Frederick May; but, although it has been whispered for some time past that the engagement either had been or soon would be broken off, it was so obviously improbable that any man would willfully draw public attention to the affairs of the young lady by a street encounter, that some more becoming cause for the difficulty had to be supposed, and, upon inquiry among friends of the father of Mr. May, Dr. William May, of No. 44 West Nineteenth street, our reporters were informed that on Tuesday night Mr. Bennett called at the house and had a most unpleasant altercation with Dr. May, in the course of which he used language which Mr. Frederick May, on hearing it, felt bound to resent as he did.

Metal Productions of the West.

Nevada, the silver State, is pouring out daily $125,000 in silver, $75,000 in gold, $8,000 in lead, and $2,000 in other metals, making a yield of $210,000 daily, or $63,000,000 per annum.

California is producing daily about $40,000 in gold, $10,000 in silver, $6,000 in quicksilver, $5,000 in lead and copper, $7,000 in coal, and fully $5,000 in iron, antimony, zinc and other minerals. Its total yield is therefore $75,000, corresponding to an annual product from its mines of $23,500,000.

Colorado is producing $15,000 in silver every twenty-four hours, $10,000 in gold, and $4,000 in other minerals, or $26,000 daily, equal to $7,000,000 yearly.

Utah is credited with a daily out-put of $12,000 in silver, $9,000 in lead and $2,000 in other minerals; $23,000 per day, or $7,900,000.

Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and New Mexico together are turning out each day $20,000 in gold, $17,000 in silver, and $1,500 in base metal, giving a total of $38,000 each day, or $11,550,000 annually.

LAST year 3,793 unclaimed bodies were buried from the morgue and hospitals of Paris. At Pere la Chaise there were buried during the last fifteen years, 218 312 bodies; at Mont Parnasse, 136,810; at Montmartre, 95,[illegible]. Of the twenty cemeteries six are beyond the line of fortification.

THE FINAL COUNT.

What Will the Acting Vice President Do?

[Washington (Jan. 6) Telegram to Chicago Tribune.]

There is great anxiety to know the views of Vice President Ferry upon the electoral question, and particularly to learn, if possible, the plan which he has decided to adopt in the counting of the electoral vote. Ferry, owing to his peculiar position, cannot permit an authoritative statement to be made, but it is confidently believed by those who have excellent opportunities for knowing, that he has adopted one of the two following plans: First, he will either count all the votes, opening only those from the four contested States which he considers to be the rightful ones, and will announce the result to the joint convention, with the statement that that is his judgment as to the proper count; but that if the two houses concurrently arrive at a different conclusion he will obey any instructions which the joint convention, acting concurrently, shall give him.

Second, he will count at first only the votes from States as to which there is no dispute, and will then present the duplicate sets of returns from each of the four contested States to the joint convention, with the announcement that as to them he awaits some instruction from the two houses, acting concurrently. It cannot be stated with equal plainness what his action would be should the two houses not agree upon some specific instruction as to the disputed votes. There is good reason, however, to believe that, in the event of the two houses declining to give him the concurrent instruction he desires, he will then consider himself under the constitution required to declare the result according to his best judgment. In such case there could be little doubt that he would count the returns from the disputed States which the Republicans at present consider the only legal ones.

But of one thing there can be little doubt, namely, that, as to the trouble with the questions connected with the four States in dispute, Mr. Ferry will first ask a concurrent instruction from the two houses. These conclusions proceed upon the assumption that prior to the 14th of February the two houses do not agree upon such rule or specific instructions as Mr. Ferry now contemplates asking. Should such an agreement between the two houses be had before that time, the counting and declaration of the vote would be entirely ministerial.

Decline in Prices of Wall Street Real Estate.

The decline in Wall street property has been both unexpected and tremendous. Five years ago, S. W. Drexel bought the corner of Wall and Broad streets, and erected thereon the marble structure known as the "Drexel Building." For this plot he paid at the rate of $14,000,000 per acre. The price was a general surprise, being far above any sale in America. To-day, however, it would not bring half that price.—New York Cor. Troy Times.

The Suez Canal.

The Suez canal enterprise is looked upon as a success by European capitalists. This water-cut, connecting the Mediterranean and the Red seas, is at present patronized by twenty-four regular lines of steamers, employing 234 steamers, of 509,437 tonnage. Classed by nationalities, the quota of England is 152 vessels, of 350 273 tonnage; France, 18 vessels, of 112,624 tonnage; Holland, 15 vessels, of 36,585 tonnage; Austria, 18 steamers, of 28,227 tonnage; Italy 10 steamers, of 15,218 tonnage; Russia, 8 steamers, of 13,386 tonnage; Germany, 8 steamers, of 11,386 tonnage; Spain, 5 vessels, of 10,751 tonnage.

LORD MIDDLETON, who has been hunting a part of Yorkshire, England, since 1853 at his own expense, says that it has cost him £4,000 a year, and he can't do it any longer without help. The sum is exclusive of the expense of his own horses. He has spent, altogether, over £100,000 on the hunt. Most packs of hounds are now largely maintained by subscription, although bearing the name of an individual.

A NEW Howe truss bridge has just been completed over Neuse river, in North Carolina, on the Raleigh and Gaston railroad. It is 319½ feet in length, and cost $15,500.

NAKED FACTS.

Speech of Ex-Senator Lyman Trumbull, at Chicago.

Startling Statement of Facts Concerning the Election in Louisiana.

The Utterly Infamous Manner in Which Wells' Returning Board Did its Work.

The laws of Louisiana provide for a registration of voters, to commence the last Monday of August previous to the general election; and prohibit any one from voting who is not registered. The registration is made by officers known as Supervisors of Registration, one of whom is appointed by the Governor for each parish in the State, of which there are fifty-seven, a parish corresponding to a county in Illinois.

In addition to making a registration of voters, it is the duty of the Supervisor of Registration to fix the number and places of voting in his parish, and appoint three Commissioners of Election at each voting-place, whose duties are similar to those of Judges of Election in this State. It is his further duty, in case there has been intimidation or other acts of violence in his parish during the period of registration tending to prevent a fair and peaceable election, "to make in duplicate and under oath a clear and full statement of all the facts relating thereto," "which statement shall be corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified electors of the parish." One of these statements the Supervisor is required to file with the Clerk of the District Court of his parish, and the other he is required to attach to the consolidated return of the votes in his parish, which, together with the returns of the Commissioners, the law requires him to forward by mail to the State Returning Board within twenty-four hours after he receives such returns from the Commissioners of Election at the different polling-places in his parish. The Commissioners of Election at each voting-place are required, within twenty four hours after the closing of the polls, to count the votes and make out in duplicate lists of the persons voted for, the number of votes for each, etc., which lists are required to be sworn to by the Commissioners of Election and to be delivered, one to the Supervisor of Registration of the parish, and the other to the Clerk of the District Court of the parish. In case of intimidation or other acts of violence occurring on the day of election, a similar statement is to be made in duplicate as that required of the Supervisor of the intimidation, etc., during registration. One of the duplicate statements is to be sent by the Commissioners with their lists of votes to the Supervisor of Registration of the parish, and the other to the Clerk of the District Court. The State Returning Board is required by the law to consist of five persons, to be elected from different political parties, to hold their offices without limit, with power to fill vacancies. Its powers are similar to the State canvassing boards in most of the States, simply to compile the returns of the votes cast, except in cases where statements of intimidation, etc., accompany the papers sent up by the Supervisors of Registration as required by the statute. when they are vested with authority to investigate the statements, and if they find them true, to exclude the return from the poll or voting-place where the intimidation occurred. Such is substantially the law for conducting elections in Louisiana, except so far as relates to Presidential electors, to which I shall hereafter have occasion to refer. Let us inquire how this election law is administered. You will bear in mind that Kellogg, who was fraudulently counted in as Governor in 1872, is still the acting Governor of the State, and that the whole machinery of the State Government is in his hands and his conspirators'. The present Returning Board consists of Wells, Anderson, Casanave and Kenner, the same persons who constituted the Returning Board in 1874. Wells is Surveyor of the Port of New Orleans by appointment of President Grant. Anderson was a candidate for office at the recent election. Casanave and Kenner are colored men, one an undertaker and the other a saloon-keeper in New Orleans. They are all Republicans, and violent partisans. They refused to fill the vacancy in the board, which had existed for more than two years, though repeatedly asked to do so. Every Supervisor of Registration in the State was appointed by Kellogg, and every one was of course a Republican partisan. Many of them were non-residents of the parish for which they were appointed, wholly unacquainted with the inhabitants they were to register. Some who were appointed Supervisors of Registration of remote parishes were employes in the Custom House at New Orleans. Others were non-residents of the State. Others were under indictment for crime, and many of them most disreputable characters. These were the persons to whom was intrusted the conduct of the election in Louisiana. No man could vote unless registered by them. To them was confided the fixing of the voting places, and the appointment of the Commissioners or Judges or Election throughout the State.

Is it any wonder that an election conducted by such persons should have presented many obstacles to a fair vote by their political adversaries? And such we found to be the case. In some Democratic parishes it was with the greatest difficulty that the people were able to procure a registration of the voters, in others the voting places were fixed without previous notice and at inconvenient points. The Supervisor of Registration of one parish failed to forward the returns of his parish to the State Board at all, and in many cases Supervisors of Registration left out the list of votes returned by the Commissioners of Election at Democratic polls in their parishes, and forwarded the returns from only part of the polling places in the parish; and the State Board in such cases refused to receive certified copies or the original duplicate lists filed in the office of the District Clerk, and thus by their own neglect of duty sought to deprive their political adversaries of the benefit of their votes. Notwithstanding all these obstacles, and the fact that the entire machinery of the election was in the hands of Republican officials, backed up by hundreds of Deputy Marshals scattered through the State under pay of the United States at $4 a day, the face of the returns actually made to and opened by the Returning Board in the presence of the visitors from other States disclosed the fact that the Tilden electors had an average majority of over 6,000 votes.

With these facts before them, the Returning Board had the effrontery to publish, Dec. 6, what they called a true and correct compilation of the statement of votes cast for Presidential electors, in which they gave to the Hayes electors an average majority of 3,540 votes. How the returning officers arrived at this result they did not state. They did not give a list of the polling-places or parishes in the State from which the votes were received or rejected, but simply proclaimed the aggregate vote in the State for each class of electors without explanation of any kind, or any statement to show the number of votes counted or rejected from a single parish in the State. If any such statement exists, it has been made public since we left New Orleans. The actual average majority for the Tilden electors, as shown by certified copies of the duplicate returns filed by the Commissioners of Election at all the voting places in the State, was 7,925. Never having seen a list of the polling-places or parishes from which the returns were rejected, I can only conjecture which they were.

That there was no just cause or legal authority for rejecting more than 10,000 Democratic votes, and changing Tilden's majority of more than 6,000 into a Hayes majority of nearly 4,000, I do know. This brings me to a consideration of under which the Returning Board acted. It is the law approved by Gov. Warmoth in 1872, with some slight amendments not material to be considered.

In my judgment this statute, which in the second section creates a Returning Board for all elections in the State, and in the last section expressly repeals all other acts on the subject of elections, has no reference to the special or particular statute of 1870, providing for the appointment of Presidential electors. My reasons for this are two-fold:

First. It is a rule of the constitution that a general statute on a given subject does not by implication repeal a particular statute on the same subject, and that therefore the creation of a Returning Board for all elections does not by implication repeal the special provision for the canvass of the vote for Presidential electors which is to be found in a particular statute for the appointment of Presidential electors, and nothing else.

Second. If the words in the second section repeal by implication the clause in the particular statute providing for the appointment of Presidential electors, then the words of the last section expressly repeal all the provisions of the statute providing for the appointment of Presidential electors, and there would be no law in Louisiana on that subject.

It is clear to my mind, therefore, that the Returning Board in Louisiana had no jurisdiction to canvass the vote for Presidential electors at all; for if the act of 1870 is repealed, there could be no election of electors, and if not repealed, then the canvass of the votes cast for electors must be made by the Governor and others, as provided by the act of 1870, and not by the Returning Board. If, however, I am mistaken in this, and the Returning Board has authority to canvass the returns for Presidential electors, it is certain it can only do so in the manner provided by the statute. That manner is "to canvass and compile the statements of votes made by the Commissioners of Election, unless they are accompanied by a sworn statement of the Commissioners of Election or Supervisor of Registration showing acts of violence or intimidation as I have already stated. Certificates from all the Clerks offices in the State where one of the duplicates of such statements, if any were made, were required by law to be filed, failed to show that a statement of intimidation or other act of violence at a single voting place or parish had been made out and filed in the manner and within the time required by law. Hence, all the Returning Board could lawfully do was to compile a statement of the votes as received, according to which, as already stated, the Tilden electors had a majority of over 6,000 in the State. When the returns were opened by the Returning Board statements of intimidation, etc., made by Supervisors of Registration and Commissioners of Election were found among them in some few instances, but not in sufficient numbers to affect the general result in the State, if the votes cast at every voting place had been rejected when such statements had been surreptitiously interpolated. Kellogg, Packard, and other outside parties filed objections to counting the votes from nearly every Democratic parish in the State, but of course such objections did not come within the statute, and gave the Board no jurisdiction to reject votes. Supervisors of Registration in Republican parishes generally made their returns at the time, and by mail, as the law required. but Supervisors in Democratic parishes, instead of conforming to the law in those respects, in many instances brought the returns to New Orleans, and there, in a private room of the Custom House, secretly made statements and procured ex-parte affidavits charging intimidation and violence in remote parishes and placed them with their returns, which were not handed in to the Returning Board in some instances till a few hours before it closed the canvass, thus affording the opposite party no opportunity to examine and contradict the charges. Nothing could be more unfair than the manner in which the Returning Board conducted its proceedings. Though frequently applied to by the Democratic candidates to open the returns from the contested parishes, that they might have an opportunity of seeing the statements and affidavits which had been interpolated among them after they left the parishes and prepare to meet them, the board proceeded at the commencement of its sitting with great leisure, sitting only two or three hours a day, and in some instances not opening more than three returns in a day. It refused to take any efficient action to compel Supervisors to hand in their returns, known at the time to be in New Orleans; it refused to send for the duplicate returns of Commissioners of Election on file in the offices of the District Courts, or to receive certified copies of the same in cases where the Supervisor of Registration had failed to forward the Commissioners' returns as his duty required; it changed its rules from time to time in regard to the taking of testimony whereby the Democratic candidates were misled and had much labor for naught; by unnecessary delays during the earlier period of its proceedings it postponed action upon the returns from parishes among which the Republicans had interpolated statements and ex-parte affidavits till there was no opportunity to meet them; it excluded from the room when the returns were opened, except in a few instances of returns known in advance to be contested, the candidates and all others save their own officers—all Republicans—and the visitors from other States, who were permitted to see the seals broken and the papers spread open for inspection, immediately after which they were sent to a private room, to which no Democrat was admitted, for compilation or further consideration in secret; it refused to fill the vacancy in its own body as the law required; and, finally, it changed the result of the election in the State by rejecting 10,000 Democratic votes without a why or a wherefore.

It is said, however, that the action of this Returning Board in Louisiana is to be sustained because it was vested with authority to reject the returns from any poll when satisfied that the election at such poll, by reason of intimidation, violence, or other cause mentioned in the statutes, was not free and fair, and that it did reject returns for these reasons, which produced the result it announced. I have already shown that the board had no such authority to reject returns unless a proper foundation therefor was laid as the law required, and that no such foundation was laid. But assuming, for argument's sake, that the Returning Board had authority of its own mere motion to go wandering over the State in search of evidence to show that the election was not free and fair, then I say there was no such evidence before it as would warrant the result it announced. I cannot go into this evidence in detail, but, so far as I was able to see and examine it when in New Orleans, I state to you to-night that it is my belief that many more colored voters in Louisiana were deterred by violence and intimidation from voting the Democratic than the Republican ticket. Most of the evidence laid before the Returning Board, and which has been extensively published in the Northern newspapers, consisted of ex parte affidavits made in secret in the New Orleans Custom House. It was mostly of a general character charging intimidation and violence by organized parties of whites, without specifying the particular acts which prevented colored Republicans from voting. You all know how easy it is to obtain such affidavits. They were frequently signed with a cross, and the poor, ignorant person was often ignorant of what he had sworn to. Instances of this are now being exposed by the Congressional committees, who are subjecting some of these affidavit makers to oral examinations. One witness testifies that the affidavit to which his name was attached was written out in the Custom House by a person who only put down part of what he stated, leaving out the qualifying circumstances, which would have shown that the outrage to which he swore had no connection with politics; and he states that in swearing to the affidavit he only swore to his name. It must also be borne in mind that these ex parte affidavits so extensively published were got up under the auspices of the same parties and in the same Custom House, where a thousand affidavits were forged and presented to the Lynch board in 1872, as shown by Mr. Carpenter's report. It is not to be denied that in some instances colored persons testified that they had been whipped and beaten, and others had been killed because they were Republicans; but the instances are far more numerous where colored persons have been scourged, whipped and shot because they were Democrats. Colored persons by the score have come forward and sworn to the threats made against them, and exhibited upon their own persons the scars and wounds they have received for no other cause than because they were Democrats or had voted the Democratic ticket. In some parts of Louisiana it is as much as a colored man's life is worth to vote the Democratic ticket. Do you ask how this can be? I will tell you. When the colored people were made free a dozen years ago they believed that they owed their freedom to the Republican party, and it was but natural that they should attach themselves to that party which had given them liberty. Bad men, mostly carpet-baggers from the North, for selfish purposes, took advantage of this feeling to band the colored people together in political organizations against the whites among whom they lived. By the aid of the colored race thus banded together, a few adventurers from the North were able to control several Southern States for a number of years, during which they plundered the people, both white and black. Gradually the more intelligent of the colored population began to find out that they were being used as the mere tools of Northern adventurers for their own selfish and wicked purposes; that the promised measures for the benefit and advancement of their race were not carried out; that they were robbed of the money they placed in the freedmen's banks, and of that raised for the education of their children; that the State Government failed to afford them protection or punish crime; that business was depressed and the whole country around them going to ruin. Under these circumstances the more intelligent of the colored voters of Louisiana, by thousands, voted the Democratic ticket at the last election, and thousands more would have voted the same way but for fear of their colored brethren, the more ignorant of whom, full of fanaticism and goaded on by demagogues who falsely represented to them that they would be re-enslaved if the Democrats attained power, became furious against any of their own race who joined that party. This feeling entered the churches, the family circle and was especially furious among the colored women. Colored preachers proclaimed from the pulpit that colored men voting the Democratic ticket were traitors to their race and ought to have their throats cut; they were expelled from the colored churches; colored women visited their wives and insisted they should not live with such men, and finally if they persisted in voting the Democratic ticket they were in many instances whipped and shot, and sometimes killed. I do not mean to assert that this state of things was general throughout the State, though it was hazardous for colored men unless in large bodies to vote the Democratic ticket anywhere. In most parts of the State the election was free and fair, and, when we first arrived in New Orleans, we were told by Republicans that complaints of unfairness only extended to five parishes; but, when it was ascertained that rejecting the votes from these parishes would not offset the general result, the complaints were extended to other parishes.

I have endeavored to give you as full and fair a history of the late election in Louisiana as time will permit. The result of my observations and knowledge of the law and the facts is, that Tilden carried the State of Louisiana as fairly and by a larger proportional majority than Hayes carried either Pennsylvania, Ohio, or Illinois. Such being the facts, and the certificates of election having been given to the Hayes electors fraudulently, arbitrarily and without warrant of law, and in pursuance, if you please, of a conspiracy formed at Washington just after the election, as part of which an order was issued to the army, before any of the Returning Boards had assembled, or anybody threatened them, "to see that they are unmolested in the performance of their duties," the question may be asked, What are you going to do about it?

The question, for one, I propose to answer to-night. I recognize fully the right of each State to appoint electors of President and Vice President in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct—and that the only inquiries to be made after the electoral votes are cast are, Were they cast in the manner required by the constitution, and by duly qualified persons, who had been appointed in the manner directed by the Legislature of the State?

Who is to make these inquiries? is a question now agitating the country; but it seems to me it is settled by the terms of the constitution and the uniform practice under it from the beginning. The language of the constitution is: "The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted." The framers of the constitution were careful and precise in the use of language, and used no more words than were necessary to express their meaning. By giving due consideration to the words "all" and "then" in the phrase quoted some light may perhaps be thrown upon its meaning. It is plainly the duty of the President of the Senate to open all the certificates from all the States before any of them are counted by anybody. It would have been very easy for the framers of the constitution to have said that the President of the Senate shall open the certificates and count the votes, if such had been their intention; but by requiring all the certificates laid before the Senate and House of Representatives before the count begins, it would seem to follow that they were to make it.

But if there were doubt as to the meaning of the constitution, it would be settled by the practice under it from the beginning. The mode of proceeding at the first election in 1789, and before the Government was organized under the constitution, cannot, of course, afford a precedent for action after the Government went into operation. When the election for the first President took place there was no President of the Senate, nor House of Representatives in existence. A number of persons who had been chosen Senators assembled April 6, 1789, and appointed one of their number President for the purpose of opening and counting the votes for President, and at the same time passed an order to inform the House of Representatives "that the Senate is now ready in the Senate chamber to proceed in the presence of the House to discharge that duty," thereby assuming that the President they had appointed was merely their instrument to make the count. The senators were not then sworn into office, nor was the oath administered to them till Jan. 3 following. At Washington's second election, in 1793, the very first election which took place after the Government went into operation under the constitution, the House passed a resolution, which was concurred in by the Senate, to appoint a committee to join such committee as might be appointed by the Senate to ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice President. The committees were appointed, and reported a mode for canvassing the vote, which has been substantially followed ever since. Here was a direct assertion of the power of Congress over the counting of the electoral vote, which has never been departed from. In 1865, to avoid the necessity of raising a joint committee at each recurring Presidential election to devise a mode of counting the vote, and to provide a mode of disposing of contests over electoral votes, what is known as the twenty second joint rule was adopted. The authorship of that rule has sometimes been attributed to me, and, as I believe it to be in strict harmony with the constitution, and that if adhered to it would peaceably settle the complications growing out of the recent election, I should feel proud of the distinction if entitled to it. That rule was the production of a joint committee appointed according to the practice of Congress from 1793, to ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice President. The committee which reported the twenty-second joint rule was appointed in January, 1865, and consisted of Trumbull, Conners, and Wright, on the part of the Senate, and of Stephens, Elihu B. Washburn, Mallory, Henry Winter Davis, and Cox, on the part of the House. The joint rule was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to by both houses, Feb. 6, 1865, and the electoral votes cast in 1864, 1868, and 1872 were counted in pursuance of that rule, which was considered in force without being re-enacted and without objection, except so far as the joint rule was modified by a concurrent resolution offered by Mr. Edmunds, and adopted in both houses February, 1869, in regard to the electoral vote of the State of Georgia. Mr. Edmunds' resolution, which asserted the power of Congress over the national vote, and disposal of that of Georgia, was voted for in the Senate by Edmunds, Anthony, Cameron, Conkling, Frelinghuysen, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sherman, and most of the leading men now in the Senate.

The present Senate, at its last session, passed a bill which was voted for by Mr. Ferry, its President, and nearly every Republican Senator present at the time, which bill asserts the plenary power of the two houses over the count of the votes for President and Vice President, and their authority to receive and reject votes. By what authority did Republican Senators vote for these measures brought forward by Mr. Edmunds and Mr. Morton, if the constitution gives the President of the Senate the right to count the votes? Every Congress, from the days of Washington to the present time, has asserted its power over and provided for the count of the electoral vote. There is scarcely a member of the present Senate who has not asserted and acted upon this same power, and the claim now set up in some quarters that under the constitution the President of the Senate has the authority to make the count is an assumption at war with the practice of the Government for more than eighty years, and is revolutionary in character. For Mr. Ferry and other Republican Senators to assent to such a claim would be to stultify themselves.

It being, then, the duty of the Senate and the House of Representatives to make the count, they can no more escape it than they can any other duty imposed upon them. In acting upon this subject they must act as independent bodies in the same manner as they do other business. The constitution knows no such body as a joint convention of the two houses of Congress. When the certificates containing the electoral votes are opened, it is in the presence of the Senate, as an organized body, with its President presiding, and of the House of Representatives as an organized body, with its Speaker presiding. The President of the Senate has no more right to preside over the House when the two bodies assemble in the same room than when they are in different rooms; nor has he any more right to preside over the two houses when in the presence of each other than has the Speaker of the House. For convenience, to preserve order, and prevent confusion when the two houses assemble in the same room, it has been usual to provide by concurrent resolution, adopted separately by each house, that the President of the Senate shall preside over both, but this is a matter of agreement between the houses. Whatever is done by either house be done separately, whether they act in the presence of each other or not. But it is said that the counting of the electoral vote by the separate action of each house is impracticable, that they will never agree. As well might it be said that they would not agree to pass appropriation bills or to any other measures necessary to carry on the Government. The concurrence of the two houses of Congress upon many questions is essential to the existence of the Government, and when the time comes when either house of Congress persistently refuses to co-operate in measures of legislation necessary to the existence of the Government our system is a failure. Such a state of things is not to be supposed, nor is it to be supposed that the two houses of Congress cannot agree upon some mode of counting the electoral vote that shall not only have the forms of law but be just and right. No man is fit to represent the people of this country in either branch of Congress who is not willing to unite upon some method that will insure a fair and honest count of the electoral vote. Let us demand this of our Senators and Representatives. It is a reproach both to their intelligence and their patriotism to suppose that they cannot adjust their disagreements. No man can have stronger convictions than I have that Mr. Tilden is honestly and fairly entitled to the electoral votes of Louisiana, and is therefore elected President, but I was never afraid to submit a good case to a fair tribunal for decision and to agree to abide the result. I believe the Returning Board of Louisiana had no jurisdiction under the State law to canvass the vote for electors of President and Vice President and reject votes in its discretion. Others think differently. If there be no other way of arriving at a decision of these questions let Congress ask the Supreme Court or any other impartial tribunal what the meaning of the Louisiana law is, and he will be a bold Congressman who, after that opinion is obtained, shall set up his own opinion against it. It is not for me to suggest what method the two houses shall adopt to bring about an adjustment of pending disagreements; but people have a right to demand that they find some method of doing it. There is a power in this country more potent than the arbitrary acts of Returning Boards, the edicts of party leaders, and the demands of partisan demagogues; it is the power of public opinion demanding what is right. There is a voice which Senators and Representatives, however blinded by party passion, and conspirators against fairness and honesty, however high in authority, will heed. It is the voice of the people. Let that voice be heard at Washington through resolutions of public meetings and monster petitions to Congress demanding of that body to adopt some means which will prevent the inauguration of any man as President through force, fraud, or corruption, and that will give effect to the voice of the American people as constitutionally expressed. If, unfortunately, the two houses should finally fail to agree as to the count of the vote from a particular State, the result would necessarily be the vote would not be counted—and the President of the Senate in such a case would have no more power to count it than he would to pass a bill about which the two houses disagreed.

Mr. Dawes, in the debate on Mr. Morton's bill last session, has shown this very clearly. He said: "If a question arises about the opening of a vote, whether you shall count it or not, and those on whom the constitution has devolved the duty of deciding it fail to agree, the legal consequence is precisely what this bill says shall be the consequence. It cannot be counted, because those upon whom the constitution has devolved the power of determining it have failed to agree that it shall be counted, or how it shall be counted. And because they fail to agree, and because the constitution has not gone further to dispose of the question, we propose to do so by statute. The ingenuity of members of the Senate and the House may be exhausted upon selecting the best and the safest tribunal; but still it will lack constitutional authority; and, lacking constitutional authority, it is naught, and being naught, to set up a man as President of the United States without authority is another definition of usurpation."

The Bulgarian Butchers.

It is a late hour for statistics to come in from the scenes of the Bulgarian atrocities, but it is now learned that the massacres of Christians by the Turks resulted in most cruel death to 15,000 men, women and children, while many thousands of the 92,000 driven from shelter by fire and sword afterward perished from exposure and consequent sickness. This is one of the sins of Mussulman rule, which must be wiped away, or at least avenged, in the struggle soon to break out between Christian Russia and Mohammedan Turkey.

A NEGRO boy, 14 years old, killed two negro girls, aged 9 and 3 years, near Long Cane, Troup county, Ga., recently. He shot the eldest with a gun, and knocked the youngest down with a stick and cut her throat. He is in the La Grange jail, and has confessed the crime. He says the oldest girl cursed him, and the youngest tried to bite him.

The Wreck of the Ship Circassian—Twenty-Eight Persons Find a Watery Grave.

(From the New York Tribune.)

The second wreck of the ship Circassian is the most disastrous that has occurred on the Long Island coast since the wreck of the John Milton, fifteen years ago. She ran ashore in a blinding snow-storm, and all on board, thirty persons, were lost. The crew of the Milton were frozen stiff in the rigging, their arms standing straight out in front of them. The men on board the Circassian had finished on Friday night all necessary preliminaries for attaching a hawser with which she was to be drawn off. During the early hours of the night the wind freshened a little, and the sea began to run very high, until at about 6 o'clock it began to break clear over her. The men, apprehending danger, went into the fore rigging, where they were ordered for greater safety. All on board, thirty-two souls, all told, remained thus exposed until early in the morning, when it was deemed advisable to shift quarters, as the falling of the top hamper caused by the rolling of the vessel, made it difficult to hold on. The crew was safely transferred to the mizzen, where signals of distress were shown. All this time the shore was plainly in sight. The moon was shining brightly, and fires built by the crew of the life-saving station showed plainly the figures of the crowd on the beach as they hurried to and fro, in the vain endeavor to aid the men in the rigging. It was an awful suspense for the poor fellows lashed to the masts and yards of the ship. They saw attempt after attempt made to establish communication with them fail, and each failure seemed to measure their purchase upon life. Every effort to get a boat off shore proved futile. As often as it was attempted the sea drove it high and dry on the beach. Capt. Henry Hunting, of life-saving station No. 10, now brought a mortar into service, and several balls with a rope attached were thrown out to the ship. But one of the cords reached the ship. Its hold was not very secure, and it presently fell off, and the slender thread upon which thirty-two human lives depended was snapped forever. The station men, all the while these endeavors were being made, could see men in the rigging quite plainly, and hear their cries for help. Many of the weather-beaten heroes on the shore, who have been wrecking vessels and saving lives since boyhood, were moved to tears by the piteous importunities of the wretched men off shore. The violence of their efforts to save mitigated the suspense they would otherwise have felt during the early hours. But when the last charge was shot off, and nothing else possible to human effort or bravery remained to be done, they became unmanned, and many of them wept. The nervous excitement and sudden inactivity utterly incapacitated them for any duty. They could not leave the spot, and it only remained for them to remain inactive and see their fellows perish before their eyes. To leave the beach would only add to the terrors of the death that stared its victims in the face, and to remain inactive would probably give cause for unjust reproach from the poor, helpless waiters on the wreck. Superintendent Huntting and his men remained and tried to answer the calls from the wreck, but nothing that was said on shore was heard on the ship on account of the direction of the wind. In terror and suspense the morning wore on, the wind having veered around in the meantime to west-southwest. During the early part of the night, before the men went into the rigging, the cables were slackened, but the ship moved only a short distance and continued through the night to strike the bottom. Every time she struck the men thought she would lose her masts to which they had lashed themselves. While conscious of the great danger and the utter impossibility of saving themselves if the mast should go by the board, it being of iron, they were unable to slacken the lashing. Some of them, with more self-possession than others, had taken this contingency into their calculations and had not securely lashed themselves, and among those were the only four saved from the wreck. At half-past 4 a. m., the long-dreaded crisis came and the mizzen-mast went by the board with a crash, carrying the mainmast with it. A tremendous swell had struck the Circassian aft and raised her very high. When it receded she thumped heavily, and the terrific jar threw the mast over her side. The masts being iron went to the bottom immediately, carrying with them twenty-eight souls. The Custom House officer, detailed to superintend the landing of her cargo, in his description of the terrible scene says: "The ship was lying about 600 feet off the shore. Amid the howling of the tempest and the roar of the waves there was borne to our ears the voices of the poor fellows in the rigging, singing hymns and praying in chorus to God. There was hardly a dry eye on shore among us as we heard these thrilling and supreme appeals made to God. Among those on the wreck were ten Shinnecock Indians, who, as a rule, are very good men. During this agonizing scene, which lasted for hours, we heard these men praying. The beach was lined with hundreds of people, many of them women, sobbing piteously. Some of them were wives of the doomed men. The wind on the shore raged with terrible violence, driving people hither and thither. The life-saving crews of Southampton, distant five and a half miles, and East Hampton, about the same distance, arrived, bringing their mortars with them, but did not attempt to use their life-line when firing, as nothing could be done. They, however, fired a number of blank shots to reanimate the courage of those on board."

Vanderbilt's Immense Wealth.

The late Commodore Vanderbilt could not have left less than $100,000,000, and possibly the rumored amount, one-half greater, more nearly represented his estate. In the New York Central he must have left an interest of not less than $41,000,000, while his property in the Harlem road (which has long been considered an appendage of his private estate) and in the Hudson River road must foot up at least as many more millions. Added to this, merely taking into account his railroad investments, he had many millions of stock—the exact amount being unknown—in the Lake Shore road, of which for years he has been President.

Besides the above, he owned a controlling interest in the Canada Southern road, having a capital stock of £1,500,000. Also, he owned stocks and bonds in the New Haven railroad, the Boston and Albany, and the Staten Island railway, and heavy interests in various New York street-car lines.

WHEN WE ARE PARTED.

When we are parted, let me lie
In some far corner of thy heart,
Silent, and from the world apart,
Like a forgotten melody.
Forgotten by the world beside,
Cherished by one and one alone,
For some loved memory of its own,
So let me in thy heart abide.
When we are parted, keep for me
The sacred stillness of the night;
That hour, sweet love, is mine by right,
Let others claim thy day of thee.
The cold world sleeping at our feet,
When stars upon thy pillow shine,
My spirit shall discourse with thine;
At thy heart's door I stand and wait.

Four Victims of the Brooklyn Fire.

It was only on Friday last that Mr. Charles Halpin, of Stamford, received a letter informing him of the death of three near relatives in the Brooklyn fire. He saw their names (McClellan) in the published list of the dead, but, as the family lived in New York, and very rarely went to Brooklyn, he did not suppose for a moment they were his relatives. It appears, however, that one of them, a young lady of 20, had an admirer living in Brooklyn, and he purchased tickets for the young lady, her mother and her two brothers, and invited the whole party to accompany him over to Brooklyn to see the "Two Orphans." One of the two brothers being delayed at his work down town, did not get home in time to accompany the others. They left his ticket for him, but it was so late by the time he was ready to go that he reluctantly resolved not to go at all. The rest of the party—mother, son, daughter and her lover—went, and all were lost, the bodies of all but one being burned beyond recognition.—Stamford Advocate.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 18, 1877.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

MONDAY, January 15th, 1877.

DEAR COURIER—The great magnates of the country are gathering here, and hotels are crowded, while the saloon business is said to be increasing. Sheridan and Longstreet and even Gen. Joe. Johnson, were on the floor of the House last week and the political cauldron is bubbling beautifully. It's fun to sit by and see the [illegible], see the fires below, and what commotion they produce on top. I have often been glad that my name was not brought before the people for their suffrages in the Presidential canvass, for what terrible mental suffering I would have enjoyed by this time, waiting for the verdict of the people. More than two months have passed and yet everybody wants to know who is going to be inaugurated President. Even the ladies here are engaged in discussing the point. We were reliably informed of the following little incident which took place last Thursday at a reception given by one of the cabinet ladies, which was attended, as is customary, by the wives of Democratic senators and representatives. It happened that in the general gossip which naturally is largely engaged in on such occasions, that the conversation turned on the dignity and grace with which certain ladies had presided over the White House. Some one of the ladies remarked that Mrs. Secretary Fish would have filled the difficult position with credit, where upon the wife of one of the cabinet ministers present said that Mrs. Hayes would not be second to even Mrs. Fish in this high station. A lady, the wife of a Democratic congressman, said, laughingly Mrs. Pelton, the sister of Mr. Tilden, was a very accomplished lady, and would grace the White House, whereupon Mrs. Secretary Morrill said, with considerable heat, "Tilden will never occupy the White House. "We have the army and navy and if force is necessary to inaugurate Hayes it will be used." This was said with rude pointedness of speech, and the manner of Mrs. Secretary was so brusque and unlady-like that the Democratic ladies present felt that it was not proper for them to tarry longer and they immediately withdrew.

Committees are at work trying to come to some amicable adjustment of the matter, but very little is being accomplished. The Senate committee investing the Oregon case, is coming to the melancholy conclusion that there has been no bribery, no corrupt use of money and that the hopes they at one time entertained of fixing upon the National Democratic Committee or upon some of Mr. Tilden's personal friends, complicity in the misuse of money are doomed to disappointment. This is especially vexatious, because of late there has been an increasing conviction among Republicans that the Oregon case is stronger than they hoped, and that it needed to have some taint of corruption fixed upon it in order to break it down. Sound lawyers have been struck with the merits of the defense made by Gov. Grover before the committee, and particularly with the fact that he appears to have acted, not in haste, but with great deliberation, in strict accordance with the laws of the State of Oregon as these have been settled in an anologous case by a decision of the Supreme Court. A lawyer said to-day that he found Gov. Grover's case much stronger than he had originally thought it.

It is the opinion of some who have watched the investigation that the facts and the law will force the committee to the conclusion that either Cronin's claim is good, as having received the highest vote as an eligible candidate, or Oregon is entitled to but two votes. The latter conclusion seems to be thought the most probable.

The South Carolina committee has returned, and Mr. Sayler, the chairman, states that the evidence taken by the committee will demonstrate to the satisfaction of all reasonable men three facts: First, that Wade Hampton and the entire Democratic State ticket and a majority of the members of the House of Representatives were elected by majorities ranging from 200 to 1100. Second, that the intimidation was almost exclusively on the part of the radical negroes against those of their own color, who announced their intention to vote for Wade Hampton and other Democratic candidates for State officers; third, that the riots at Cainhoy and other places were instigated by the radical leaders, their object being to arouse Northern prejudices against the Southern people. So far as he was able to ascertain from the precinct returns, Mr. Sayler is of the opinion that the Hayes electors were elected. He says, however, that there is some doubt about this, because of the difficulty of determining whether or not certain precinct returns should be regarded. There were about 40 precinct returns missing, and they had to go to secondary sources in order to ascertain what the vote was in those precincts. He thinks they approximated the result at these missing polls, and in order that whatever doubt there was, might be given to the Republican side his committee would doubtless admit the choice of the Hayes electors. About the election of Hampton, however, there could be no doubt. All of the decent Republicans in South Carolina admit his election, and say that it is for the best interests of the State and the people that he should be recognized as the legitimate Governor.

Cyrus W. Field, the new member from New York, in place of Mr. Ely, was sworn in the other day. It is seldom a country preacher in Connecticut raises such a brood of boys as did David Dudly Field, senior. Probably when he was perplexed years ago over the double problem of saving his small congregation from the Presbyterian variety of damnation, and the stomachs of his large family from starvation, he never dreamed that one of his boys would live to lay cables under the Atlantic, another to sit on the Supreme Bench of the United States, another to take rank among the great financiers of his generation, and a forth to lead the New York bar. The Democracy did a good thing in sending Mr. Field here at this time, for there is need of brains in the Lower House, to counterpoise the dead weight of brains in the upper one.

The Grand Duke Alexis and his suit are expected. Apartments have been engaged for their use at the Arlington, and it is probable the distinguished party will remain here a fortnight or longer to enjoy the gayeties of the fashionable season. I supppose the usual American flunkeyism will be again developed, that greeted him on a former visit. Snobs are plenty in Washington, and no doubt the young Duke, who is said to possess good common sense, will be thoroughly disgusted by the time of his departure.

The death of Vanderbilt and the Bennet-May affair are the leading topics of gossip here. After eighty-one years' service of Mammon and six months' worship of God, Commodore Vanderbilt has gone to settle the vexed question as to whether it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. Possessed of no other aristocracy to worship than that of wealth, we bow down and bump our heads at the low level our miserable deity demands. The lower the god the lower the worship. The rich man dies and a great city mourns as if a kingly heart, full of generous impulse, had ceased to beat, and a great human benefactor had passed away. Cold, calculating, mean and selfish, Cornelius Vanderbilt had not even a claim to admiration in his success as a money getter. I cannot find a single act of charity or even of kindness commensurate with his wealth to justify the praise. It is true that a rich man has the same right to his accumulations that the poor man has to his wages; but he is not entitled much praise or lamentation unless he have something beyond mere wealth. A rich man dies, and thereupon the papers are filled with flattering eulogies of his greatness. A greater, a better man was crushed beneath the cars of Commoder's railroad only a day or two before the death of the millionaire. Happy little songs and joyous Sunday school music will 'prepetuate his name long after Vanderbilt has been forgotten. Yet he and his family perished, not at home, surrounded by all the luxury and elegance of wealth, but out in the snow storm, in the dark and gloom of a winter's night, amid crushing timbers, and the glare of consuming fire, with the shreaks and groans of the dying as a parting song. Mr. Bliss passed away to that reward gained by the labor of a life time.

The Democrats had a grand demonstration here last Monday, Gen. Jackson's day. The assemblage was very large, and great enthusiasm prevailed. Capt. M. H. Nines, formerly of Fort Wayne, called the meeting to order and introduced some of the best speakers in the country. While the meeting was at its heighth, a dispatch came from Indianapolis as follows:

"Democracy in convention assembled Every one of the ninety-two counties being represented by over 2,400 delegates, send you greeting on this day. The state that destroyed the Republican party's hopes in October now demands that the votes of 40,000,000 of people shall be made effective in this land, and S. J. Tilden and T. A Hendricks shall be inaugurated President and Vice President of these United States. W. D. MANSON, Chairman.

If you could have heard the shout that went up when it was read, you would then have some idea of the estimation in which the Hoosier is held here. It wasn't the "old rebel yell" either, for there were generals, and colonels, and captains, and privates there, who fought for the Union, and are fighting for it still.

J. Proctor Knott, and Proof. Seeley, of Mass. were talking over the presidential matter the other day, when Knott said:

"Professor, I do not wish to interrupt you in your eloquent constitutional argument, but I want you to explain to me an invitation I have just received to dinner, the interpretation of which perplexes me a great deal." It is as follows:

"The pleasure of your company is requested at dinner to-morrow evening, at Welcker's, to meet Professor Seeley and other distinguished gentlemen. The dishes will be uncovered by the steward precisely at seven o'clock, and the dinner will then be eaten.

"Now, what I want you to interpret for me, Professor," said Mr. Knott, "is who is to get the dinner—the steward, or you and I and the rest of the guests?

This certainly puts the question in a common sense light, so that anybody can understand who is to count the vote.

Holloway's Pills.

"I had no appetite; Holloway's Pill gave me a hearty one."

"Your pills are marvelous."

"I send for another box, and keep them in the House."

"Dr. Holloway has cured my headache that was chronic."

"I gave one of your pills to my babe for cholera morbus. The dear little being got well in a day."

"My nausea of a morning is now cured."

"Your box of Holloway's Ointment cured me of noises in the head. I rubbed some of your Ointment behind the ear, and the noise has left."

"Send me two boxes; I want one for a poor family."

"I enclose a dollar, your price is 25 cents, but the medicine to me is worth a dollar."

[illegible]

"Let me have three boxes of your pills by return mail, for chills and fever."

I have over 200 such testimonials as these, but want of space compels me to conclude.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS,

And all eruptions of the skin, this ointment is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone; but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Invariably cures the following diseases:

DISORDER OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel or with aches and pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys these pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

For Stomachs out of Order, no medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these pills; they remove all acidity occasioned by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasm—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and stomach.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the best known in the world for the following diseases: Ague, Asthma Billious Complaints, Blotches on the Skin, Bowels, Consumption, Debility, Dropsy, Dysentery, Erysipelas, Female Irregularities, Fevers of all kinds, Fits, Gout, Headache, Indigestion, Inflammation, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Lumbago, Piles, Rheumatism, Retention, Stone and Gravel, Tic-Douloureaux, Tumors, Ulcers, Worms of all kinds, Weakness from any cause, &c.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

None are genuine unless the signature of J. Haydock, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills, and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be suspicious.

Mr. Sherman Hollister, of the firm of Hollister & Benedict, has just returned from his old place in Ohio, somewhat under the weather.

We are glad to learn, that Dr. Fitch Physician and Surgeon has concluded to locate among us; Read his advertisement in the card colum next week.

Dave Weamer has started in the sewing machine repairing business, and has forsaken the "Devilship" for a berth where there are no "fires to build."

Our list of subscribers has been holding its own notwithstanding the hard times. The list of new subscibers will over balance those who have dropped off.

All those who wish to participate in a grand masquerade Ball on the 22d of February, are requested to leave their names with Hollister & Benedict immediately.

There is talk of organizing a gentleman's Quartette in this place, for the purpose of singing and furnishing music for home entertainments. A fine thing, start it along.

There is a bad place in the walk just west of the post office, which will cause some person a doctors bill if they are not careful. We have reference to that slippery place.

David Kahn has a pet in the shape of a piece of Beefstake, which runs about his store and makes some noise. It is growing finely and will make a nice purp in time.

Mr. Elmore Cowan, of Steuben county, and Miss Fanny Latson, of this place, were married at Hamilton, at the residence of A. J. Baxter, on the 18th of Dec.

We learn there is to be a grand masquerade ball given at Hollister & Benedicts Hall in a short time. Preparations are being made for a fine display and a lively, enjoyable time.

The presbyterian church has one of the finest, largest and best toned bells in the city, costing $250, of which $150 were paid by individual donations by the young men of this place.

When you are asked by a friend to smoke a cigar, and he hands out three costing ten cents each, how much cheek does it require to put them all in your pocket and walk off? Question.

We would be pleased to receive communications from every township in the county. By this means our readers will be enlightened as to what is transpiring throughout the county.

It will pay you to read the speech of Hon. Lyman Trumbull, delivered at Chicago, published in this week's Courier. Statements in regard to the elections in Louisiana are vividly set forth.

See change in Root & Co's. advertisement. They are selling goods cheaper than ever, owing to the general depression in trade. Give them a call, No. 46 and 48 Calhoun Street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

A nice time was had by the teachers of "young ideas" on last Saturday evening, at the residence of J. W. Rickel, who invited all the teachers and School board to take tea and spend the evening with himself and family,

By Request.

Rev. W. Langdon Sanders, pastor of the Baptist church, has been requested by many to repeat his discourse delivered last Sabbath, on "Baptism and Communion," and will do so on next Sabbath morning at 10½. All are invited.

"What is home without a mother?" It is all in all, when she pops her head in through the door and says in soft soothing tones: "M——. turn up that light or mosey off to bed, and that immediatly," exit young man in a very short time.

We have received Vol. 1 No. 1, of the Warsaw Republican, a neat, clean, and well gotten up eight column paper, published by Quincy A. Hossler, formerly of the Indianian, of that place, and later of the Gazette, Fort Wayne. Success and prosperity are our best wishes, Bro. H.

Parents should read the Rules and Regulations, of the Auburn graded school, adopted by the Board of Trustees, which were printed at this office. Study them carefuly and it may be the means of saving you future trouble.

Miss. Nettie Thoman, of Crestline, Ohio, sister of W. G. Thoman, late editor of the Courier spent a few days in this city visiting her brother and friends, and returned home on Saturday, last.

Our business men complain that trade is miserably dull notwithstanding the good roads. How couldn't be otherwise. The conspirators in power have stolen the people poor, and now they are trying to steal the people.

If parties don't wish to be represented in the Courier as "married men," they must not write their names as such on the hotel registers. It was a good joke, boys, but we are innocent, for we "followed copy," precisely.

Death is often caused by a severe Cough or Cold. Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup should always be taken in time, for it never fails to cure the worst cases of Coughs or Colds almost instantly. Price 25 cents. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Sam, Pete & Max, are "hard up" no longer, for "it has been decided" as will be seen by their new advertiement in this weeks issue of the Courier, that they are doing an immense business.

We omitted an item last week which was unintentional. We ought to have said that Rev. J. W. Welch was presented with a fine suit of service clothes, as a New Years present from the members of his congregation. He returns his sincere thanks to the doners of this useful and valuable gift.

The trains on all the railroads centering at this place, were greatly delayed on Monday of this week on account of the heavy snow and hail that fell on that day. The mail train on the Eel River road was five hours making the trip from Butler to this place, a distance of twelve miles.

Hereafter the Courier will be in charge of Mr. Walter Peterson, until the return of Mr. Mays from Washington. Any one so well and favorable known to the people of DeKalb county, needs no further introduction. Mr. Peterson is fully authorized to transact all business relating to the Courier.

W. G. Thoman.

It is a pleasure for us to anounce that our schools are giving excellent satisfaction under the supervison of Prof. Seiler and his corps of teachers. We have quite frequently, of late, heard parents say that their children are learning faster this winter than formely.

Eight little gurls, whose ages are between seven and nine years, Sunday School scholars of Miss Orpha Bodine, donated eight dollars to the Presbyterian church on dedication day; also five little boys aged between ten and twelve years, scholars of R. Elson, gave five dollars.

The Art Entertainment given by Prof. Kramer, at Ensley's Hall on last Thursday and Friday nights, for the benefit of the Catholic church, of this place, was not as well patronized as it should have been, owing, no doubt, to the other amusements which attracted many on those evenings. The scenes were excellent.

On Saturday last a man and his little boy stepped into Hollister & Benedict's restaurant, and asked for a dish of oysters. "Don't you want a dish for your little boy?" asked the waiter. "Oh no," said the man, "I'll give him half of mine," and then had the cheek to ask for two spoons, and a discount on the price of the oysters.

Holloway's Ointment.—Eaysipelas and all inflammatory diseases yield to a diligent use of this powerful preparation. In the foot, hand and neck, their approach should be checked at once—if supperation ensues danger is imminent, and the knife cannot be employed without [illegible]. This Ointment will remove the disorder, without cutting, pain or peril. 25 cents per box or pot. For sale by F. E. DavenPort.

An exchange says that "if small pox can be cured by cream of tartar, it is time that everybody knew the fact. The directions are, to dissolve one ounce of cream of tartar in a pint of boiling water, and to drink when cold at short intervals. Not a very exact prescription, to be sure; but the remedy is so simple that it may be well worth trying. It is said that thousands have been thus cured, and that no marks of the disease remain."

Why don't our churches unite and set apart some special evening, making it memorial to P. P. Bliss, who was so well known as one of the most exemplory christians in this country. There are but few, even in this place, who are not acquainted with the beautiful songs of Mr. Bliss, and for what purpose they were composed. Why should we not meet and commemorate one night to this christian man.

We have received a communication which is intended to injure some person. We are willing to publish articles intended to advance and interest our readers, but articles of a personal character must be accompanied with the signature of the writer, which contributations will then only be published at the option of the editor. Readers please remember this.

Farmers in and about Ligoner are disposing of their stock of hogs, on account of a disease prevailing in that section. The Ligoner Banner, noticing the actions of the farmers says!

Rather than run the risk of losing their swine from the prevailing disease, several farmers in this neighborhood have sold off their entire stock of shoats and hogs. If the disease should wholly disappear by spring, shoats will probably command good figures, and be hard to get at that.

Zimmerman Bros. have built and placed in the Presbyterian church as fine a lot of seats as can be found in North Eastern Indiana, being made of good sound material, the workmanship being substantial and tasty, while the design is without a fault. It is pleasing to mark this, and lay before the readers of the Courier, the fact, that such things can be procured of our home manufactories, and at the same time keep money at home.

The following named parties were immersed last Sabbath by the Rev. W. Langdon Sanders, pastor of the Baptist church of this place: Mr. B. Shilling and wife, Mr. C. Asheiman and wife, Mr. C. Mauherhan, Miss, Maria Moore, Miss McDowal. The following have also united this week by experience: Mr. A. W. Whelock, Mrs. Bennit and Mrs. Wilson. The meetings are still continued every night with increased interest, and others are excepeted to be baptised next Sabbath.

As was given out, the Presbyterian mite was entertained by Mrs. Geo. Patterson, living about ten miles west of town, on Wednesday afternoon and evening last. As the sleighing was excellent, a large number of the older class taking advantage of the opportunity for a sleigh ride and a pleasant time, filled several large sleighs and started for the afternoon social. When evening was nearing, the young people made their start, and after spending a few hours in social enjoyment, all started for home, expressing themselves as having had a good time.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine prescribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe Coughs, Colds settled on the Breast, Consumption, or any disease of the Throat and Lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany; and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case, Try it. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

On Thursday evening of last week a large sleighing party from Waterloo and Garrett, visited Auburn, making their headquarters at Hollister & Benedicts, where they partook of the good things which were so abundantly spread before them, and kept time to the music of Hague's Quadrille Orchestra, till the wee sma' hours when they betook themselves to their conveyances and "made a home run." If smiling faces and joyous laughter is any criterion with which to judge, we should say this party was an enjoyable one to all who participated in it. A large number Auburn's citizens also took part in the amusements.

Quite an amusing and also serious incident occurred on Wednesday morning, in which Miss. Ziggler and Miss. Murphy, Teachers in the Auburn graded school, came near being seriously injured. From parties who were present we glean the following, Mr. C. P. Houser, drove to the school house with his horse and cutter for the purpose of fastening some seats to the floor. While Mr. H. was indoors, the above parties not wishing to let the opportunity pass, proposed to take a sleighride, and accordingly took a whirl around the school house. When they had got nearly around the buildings, the bell began to ring, frightening the horse so that it became unmanageable, and started on a run, throwing the ladies out in a snow bank. The horse was stopped on Main St. with no further damages than that of frightening the ladies and breaking the dash of the cutter.

A Card to the Public.

For many years we have made two medicines suited to the ailments of a vast class of sufferers. Thousands of cures have been made by them, and, in fact, the word failure could not be coupled with them. But within the last two years counterfeits of our medicines have sprung up, dangerous in their close imitation of our Trade Mark. To secure the people, we have placed upon each genuine of Holloway's Ointment the fac simile of the signature of our agent, Mr. Jos. Haydock. To counterfeit is felony. We shall relentlessly pursue any one who imitates this with the utmost vigor of the law. We most earnestly beg that the great mass of the American people will aid us in our efforts to protect their health, and help us in our task of bringing these most unprincipled men to the bar of Justice Uniformly refuse to purchase Medicines purporting to be ours unless Mr. Jos. Haydocks signature is attached to each box of Pills or pot of Ointment and the end will soon be reached.

The public's obedient servant
Holloway & Co.

"Do you except sentimental compositions for publication?" asked a lantern-jawed looking individual, as he came rushing into the office last week.

"What is the nature of your sentimental article?" we inquired.

"Politics," said he, "I have been bulldozed, insulted and imposed upon by members of the Republican party, and I must and will have retaliation."

"In what manner were you bulldozed?" we asked.

"By being blacked from the tip of my fingers to my elbows, with ink, yes, with ink, printers ink!"

We told him we charged ten cents a line for advertisements and fifteen for personal articles, which he suggested was pretty high, and made up his mind that if we would sell him a few ladies calling cards to print, he would not urge the artical upon us, and departed, vowing vengence on the man who put ink on his hands while warming them at the stove.

Dedication of the Presbyterian Church.

The New Presbyterian Church of this place was dedicated last Sabbath in the presence of a full house by the Rev. J. D. McCord, of Allegan, Mich., assisted by the Pastor, Rev. Henry Johnson, Rev. McCord also preached morning and evening, and the universal expression is that his sermons were among the best, most practical and useful.

As usual in such gatherings an effort was made to raise the amount necessary to dedicate the church clear of debt, which, by the Treasurers report, was a little over one one thousand dollars. Considering that the church and outfit cost but a little short of six thousand dollars, most, no doubt, expected the amount required would be much larger, and therefore the congregation, instead of being frightened, were agreeably surprised, and the amount was raised cheerfully and without any difficulty. The best of feeling prevailed, and well there might, for such a church is a credit to the town as well as to the congregation. It is a substantial and commodious structure, with splendid seating, heated by a furnace and lighted with gas, and there are, perhaps, but few superior building in Northern Indiana. The members and congregation are united and are in earnest.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

GARRETT.

I desire to call your attention to a first class case of radical bulldozing, which has been perpetrated on this community. About eighteen months ago, the workman and officials of the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Company began to gather on what had been selected as the site of Garrett. Among other inconveniences with which they had to contend, was that of obtaining their mail, which had to be gotten from Auburn or Avilla. This was such a serious inconvenience, that efforts were soon made by those living here to obviate it, and by the influence of one of the high officials of the road, who had interested himself in the matter, Postmaster General Sewell was prevailed upon to establish an office at Garrett, and Mr. W. A. Pratt, Jr., was appointed postmaster, and Mr. Kinney assistant. The office was in charge of Mr. Kinney, who gave general satisfaction to all who patronized the office, and everything went on very pleasantly until the late elections, when both the postmaster and his assistant committed the unpardonable offense in Republican eyes, of voting for Uncle Jimmy and Tilden.

You will recollect that Mr. Orin Clark ran for the Legislature as representative of DeKalb County, but notwithstanding his assurances of what he intended to do for DeKalb when he got to Indianapolis, the people declined to send him. Disappointed in this, he began to look around to see if there was anything else he could get to console himself with, when his eye fell upon the Garrett postoffice, and he set to work with the aid of John H. Baker, to bulldoze those who held the position, out, and put one of his youthful progeny's who rejoices in the cognomen of Frank, in, notwithstanding a large majority of those who obtain their mail at this place, irrespective of their political affiliations, protested against it. On the first of this month the man who dared to vote in opposition to the great Republican party, was politely invited out, and the ingenious youth above named, installed in his place. We believe there was some dissatisfatcion among Mr. C's. friends here, at the appointment, as there were several local aspirants for the place who did not think it fair for a man who did not live in the town, and had no need for the office. to obtain the appointment.

We don't suppose Mr. Clark has lost any sleep from thinking how he has taken the bread from the family of a man whose only fault was that of exercising the right which belongs to every American citizen. We have to depend on the Courier to show up these specimens of "radical civil reform" for us, as the gentleman who pretends to publish a Democratic paper here, says it "suits him," and some thinks from his course, he must expect some little favors from the new regime, or else is prepairing to make a graceful flop if Hayes should chance to be inaugurated. Justice.

JUNCTION.

Who is Don Pedro?

Mrs. A. Flarida is lying quite sick with the lung fever.

The spelling school Friday night was a success. Miss Edith Essig and Billy Link were the best spellers.

—I am receiving letters from persons who wish me to give them a puff, but as they fail to send the required amount to pay for it, I decline to do anything of the kind for them.

—The B. & O. company have again changed time, taking effect Sunday, Jan. 14th. The time of the mail trains, both east and west, are not changed, but the time of the expresses are changed, and will hereafter pass this point as follows: Going east at 3:38, and going west at 11:53 p. m. All passenger trains daily, including Sundays. Freight trains that will carry passengers are No's. 14, 15 and 16, and will pass this place the same as on the old card.

—At last the long-looked-for reporter for the Republican has come in the shape of "Alphonso," with his wit and humor. We welcome him in our midst, and hope his silence, since the "Snap-Shots" ceased, will be explained. He comes down on a certain young man rather heavy, and says he is effected by Divine Providence, and does what he is forbidden to do. We don't know of any such person, but we do know of people who never mind their own business, and are always adding fuel to the flames. They are a class of men who, when helped to a good thing, would not thank you for your pains, and will kick you after you are down. We will endeavor to write up all the items of interest. Persons interested in the welfare of the Junction, will do well to subscribe for the Courier. Don Pedro.

NEWVILLE.

—Mr. Mathias Rogers, residing about two miles southeast of this place, was seriously injured a few days ago by the falling of a hay rack upon his head and shoulders. The rack was suspended by ropes in his barn, and gave away while he was under it. He is now recovering.

—Two young men were expelled from school by the teacher at Coburn's Corners, for bad conduct, one day last week.

—Mrs. Al. Bryoads, of this place, has been dangerously ill the past ten days, and her life was dispaired of. She is some better at this writing, and hopes of her recovery are entertained by her friends.

—Rev. E. W. Erich closed his protracted meeting at the Lutheran church last Sabbath.

—Our townsman, Geo. Wise, has been enjoying the luxury of a gathering on his hand the past week. The Lord afflicts those whom he loveth,

CORUNNA.

To-day, (Wednesday), grain is coming in lively, about fifteen loads of wheat having arrived up to the hour of noon from the south-eastern part of De Kalb county. The following prices are being paid: Wheat $1.36, Oats 30c Corn 50c, Potatoes 80c @ 90c, Hogs, live 5¼ @ 5½, Dressed 6.00 @ 6.75 Hides, green 6, Poultry 5c @ 7c, Butter 18c, Eggs 18c, Clover Seed, $8.75.

An account of the sleighing party that made a raid upon our friend Ensley last week would be edifying; but Lafe M. is invulnerable and will not interview worth a cent.

Now that the sleighing is good there is no let up to poor Bucephalus, and everybody who can procure a rig are on the road with a Sarah Jane by his side. Glang, 2:40!

Hank Quince started Saturday night in charge of two car loads, double-deckers, consisting of hogs and sheep, for the Buffalo market.

Through eastern passenger trains on Tuesday morning came in with double headers owing to the heavy snow storms east of Buffalo.

Protracted meeting continues with unabated interest at the M. E. Church.

WATERLOO.

—sleighing is excellent and well improved.

—Williams' inaugural is short and rather good—We wonder who wrote it. —Press.

For the information of Bro. Baxter, we will say that the fellow who wrote that inaugural, is the same identical fellow that beat the "Grandson" last fall; you perhaps recollect something about him. He wears "Blue Jean," and is rather long. Why, Charley, you certainly recollect him!

—A case of loving "not wisely" but "too well" was in Husselmans Court last Monday. The parties reside in Fairfield township.

—The United Bretheren have decided to preface their quarterly meeting which is to be held in this place on Saturday, with a series of meetings during the week. Soc-et-tu-um.

THE DEAD TREE.

BY ALFRED B. STREET.

It lies along the margin of the brook
Enameled with bright moss, red, green, and white,
With pearly sheen of its smooth bark between
The deep, dark ruts and twisting of the grain,
Twisting against the sun in equal rings.
One end has melted into saffron bits
So soft the rabbit crushes them in prints;
The other lies within a dense bouquet
Of bushes, while upon its middle bulk
A sapling rears its slender shape and grasps
Its clutching arms below. The fissured bark
Has mostly vanished. Here and there, in spots,
Its village, house of the cricket and the tribe
Of insects that the flicker's drum-roll sounds
Its knell to. In the hollowed cave within,
The snow sifts half-way, and the autumn leaves
Scud shuddering from the wind, the wolfish wind
That follows with its howl the cold, gray hours
Which tell November near. A shelter warm
For the lost hunter when the bitter sleet
Stings the black air of night, and the slight trail
Has vanished in the snow, and bush and tree
Look so like one another in the depths,
Even to his practiced eye, that he has strayed
In circles till his limbs can stir no more,
And he can only drag within the [illegible]
[illegible]
The sharp tick of the [illegible] guides no more
His death; till morning sets the woods aright,
And brings his gladdened footsteps out at last
To his rough chopping, and his shanty rude
At the wood's border.
In the summer time
The badger dries his thick, gray jacket there,
Wet with the sparkle of the sunny shower
That glazed the air into a diamond.
The touchwood, wakening, like the owl, at night,
Lights its pale cressets all along the cave,
A chapel then, that echoes with the choir
Of crickets in full song. How long this trunk
Has lain dissolving, fancy only tells.
The young black eagle has exchanged his hue
For the gray Drinker of the sun's; the sprout
Has seen its twin, red, crumpled leafage turn
Into a world of verdure lifted high,
Upon a spotted shaft that dares the blast
Since the first groan was uttered in the fall
Of the proud oak whose specter there is stretched.
Oft have I made the bulk a noon-tide seat,
And watched the bee, laden with flowery wealth,
Darting within, what time some isinglass
Of filmy rain shone in the summer blue
Like sheen upon the purple of the plum,
Or the red squirrel, powdered with the drops,
Streaked to its shelter, flashing white in pearl.
Soon the old hollow wooden cave will melt
Into brown ruin, and green waves of fern
And moss roll over its cracked fragments, till
A bower of saplings plumes the pillared spot,
And beetle-blots of gold and sable shapes
Frame a rich chequer all the summer day.

ONE FARTHING DAMAGES.

CHAPTER I.

In a darkened chamber, dark with the awful shadow still more than with the lack of material light, four persons were gathered round a bed, on which lay a man bearing in his face the unmistakable signs of the summons which none can refuse to answer. A weeping girl knelt by the bedside, her face bent over the nerveless hand which lay upon the coverlet, and which she held as though by that convulsive clasp she could hold her father still to life. The doctor and nurse stood quietly aside, as having done their part and waiting for the inevitable end. A shaded lamp cast a ring of bright white light amid the surrounding gloom, and within its gleaming circle, at a table covered with papers and writing materials, sat the dying man's solicitor engaged in the preparation of his will. The instructions were short and simple. Bernard Hope had but one near relative, his daughter Mary, now kneeling by his bedside, and to her, as was natural, he desired to leave his few possessions.

After an interval of silence, broken only by the suppressed sobs of the weeping girl and the monotonous scratching of the attorney's pen upon the paper, he paused, and inquired in a harsh, unpleasant voice:

"What names shall I insert as trustees? You should have two at least."

The dying man paused ere he replied with an effort:

"Geoffrey Howard, Major 111th, now in India. I have no other friend."

"In that case may I venture to offer my humble services, subject to the usual proviso. I should be delighted to be useful to Miss Hope, and if your friend is abroad there may be difficulties."

"True, Slythorpe, I thank you. Make yourself trustee, then, with Maj. Howard. Legacy—200 pounds for your trouble."

"Nay, my dear sir, quite unnecessary. I really——"

But again the ready pen traveled over the paper, and a quarter of an hour later Mr. Slythorpe announced that the document was ready for execution, and in a low mechanical monotone read over its provisions. The sick man seemed more than once to lose consciousness during the reading, but at the close he appeared to nerve himself for a supreme effort.

"Yes, that will do. Give me the pen," he said, and, with a shaking hand, affixed his signature, and, with eager eyes, watched the doctor and nurse as they added their own as witnesses, after which he sank back exhausted on his pillow. "Thank God, that's safe!" he gasped. "Mary, my child, you and Geoffrey—you and Geoffrey! What was I saying? God bless you, my darling! God bless——"

These were the last words Bernard Hope ever spoke. For a little while he lay with half-closed eyes, still breathing, but past all consciousness of earthly things. The doctor stepped noiselessly to the bedside, and laid a finger on the fluttering pulse, now beating with unnatural quickness, now failing altogether. Another quarter of an hour passed—a quarter of an hour which seemed an age to the anxious watchers and then the doctor laid down the thin, white hand, and, tenderly touching the head of the orphaned girl, said:—

"My dear, the Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away. Your father has passed to a better world."

CHAPTER II.

A year had passed away since Bernard Hope's death, and Mary still remained an inmate of the house of Mrs. Murgatroyd, the good woman whom we have seen in attendance at her father's last illness, and who, to her occasional occupation as nurse, added the more permanent one of letting lodgings. Mary's sweet face and gentle manner had quite won the heart of the good-natured landlady, who was unceasing in her endeavors to soothe her grief and minister to her comfort. Mary still showed in face and figure the tokens of the fiery trial through which she had passed. Her slight form looked slighter still in her soft black drapery, and the shadow of an unforgotten sorrow still rested on her delicate features. Mary Hope had been her father's constant companion, and she sorely missed the happy hours in which his powerful intellect and varied experience had been unfolded for her benefit. But she had, too, another trouble—none the less hard to bear that it was one in which she could have few confidants. Maj. Howard, of whom mention has already been made, was not only her father's most valued friend, but had insensibly grown very dear to herself; and when, six months before Bernard Hope's death, he was summoned with his regiment to India, he left Mary his promised bride. Twice he had written within the first few weeks of his departure, since which time there had been a terrible silence; and, in the same week which left Mary fatherless, a second blow fell upon her. The 111th had been engaged in a smart skirmish, the number of dead and wounded being considerable. Maj. Geoffrey Howard was reported among the fallen; and Mary had to mourn at once her lover and her father.

The death of Maj. Howard left Mr. Slythorpe sole trustee of Mr. Hope's will. This to Mary was a matter of the most perfect indifference. Suspecting evil of no one, she was as willing that her little fortune, amounting to some £5,000 or £6,000, should [illegible] in Mr. Slythorpe's hands as in those of any other person. But of late the attorney had begun to persecute her with attentions which, [illegible], would have been distasteful from any one, but were doubly so from a person whom she could not help regarding with an instinctive dislike. And in truth Mr. Slythorpe was not precisely the person to win a fair lady's fancy. Undersized, high-shouldered, with blinking, lashless eyes, and a general angularity, not to say knobbiness of feature, he might have been expected to rise superior to any weakness as to personal appearance; but such was by no means the case. In Mr. Samuel Slythorpe's own opinion, Mr. Samuel Slythorpe was a gentleman of considerable personal advantages, and it was his constant endeavor to make the very best of them. He was obtrusively, we might almost say offensively, clean. His shirt-front, collar, and wristbands were all of intense whiteness and starchiness, giving him the appearance of being, so to speak, "all shirt;" while his hands, which were naturally coarse and red, were made still coarser and redder by perpetual washing. He was always profusely scented, and his short, scrubby hair was tortured, by the combined use of the brush and the pomatum pot, into the semblance of the split almonds wherewith tipsy-cakes are wont to be decorated. His hats and coats were always intensely new, and he perpetually creaked as he moved his patent-leather boots, maintaining a friendly rivalry in this particular with his well-starched shirt-front. In his habitual gorgeous array—indeed, if possible, looking even cleaner and newer than usual—Mr. Slythorpe this morning knocked at Mrs. Murgatroyd's door. That good lady was at the moment engaged in dusting Miss Hope's room, and, catching sight of his approach, exclaimed:

"There's that nasty worrying lawyer again, I do declare. Slythorpe, indeed! I'd Slythorpe him!"

It would be hopeless to endeavor to express on paper the intensity of meaning Mrs. Murgatroyd threw into her newly-coined verb; but it was evident that "Slythorping" in her mind included all the tortures of the middle ages, with a supplement of horsepond and other modern inventions. Mary smiled at the good lady's vehemence.

"My dear Mrs. Murgatroyd, you really shouldn't be so severe. Mr. Slythorpe is a little peculiar, but I have no doubt he means kindly, and you know he is the trustee of poor papa's will."

"I know he is, my dear, and I wish he wasn't. I know he shouldn't be trustee to a tomcat of mine, drat him."

"Now really, Mrs. Murgatroyd, you are too bad," said Mary, smiling in spite of herself. "I am sure poor Mr. Slythorpe isn't nearly so dreadful as you make out."

At this point the conversation was interrupted by the entrance of the gentleman in question, and Mrs. Murgatroyd, passing him with a final sniff of abhorrence, quitted the apartment.

Mr. Slythorpe, for once in his life, appeared ill at ease. He was got up with his accustomed care, and the suggestion of scented soap which accompanied him was even stronger than usual; but his usual self-satisfied air was wanting. He evidently had something on his mind—some piece of rascality, a physiognomist would have conjectured, which he either had recently perpetrated or was about to perpetrate. Let us hope that the physiognomist would have been wrong.

"My dear Miss Hope," he began, after the first greetings had been exchanged, "I grieve to be the bearer of very unpleasant intelligence."

Mary looked up with quiet indifference, scarcely believing that, after all she had gone through, any news, good or bad, could have for her more than the most passing interest. Slythorpe continued:

"I am sure that you will believe I did it for the best; but misfortunes will happen, you know, even with the utmost care and caution. I am sure I thought the investment as safe as the bank; but there's no trusting anything nowadays."

"What is the misfortune, Mr. Slythorpe, for you haven't yet told me? Nothing very serious, I hope."

"Only too serious, my dear Ma—"—he tried to say "Mary," but couldn't get it out, and substituted "Miss Hope"—"nothing less than the loss, I fear, of the whole of your little fortune."

Mary turned very pale, but gave no other sign of emotion. "How did it happen?" she said, with an effort.

"Your money was, as you know, in the 3-per-cents, where it produced a miserable £160 a year. In the hope of doing better for you, I sold out, and invested it in a new mining company, the Wheal Marina, which promised to pay a minimum dividend of 10 per cent., and so would have just trebled your income. And this morning I am grieved to find from the Times that the company is an utter smash. The Directors have bolted, and the shareholders will lose every penny of their money."

"Is all gone? Nothing left?"

"Not a sixpence, and you remain liable for calls to the amount of about as much more."

Poor Mary's fortitude quite gave way. "Oh, dear, what shall I do? I haven't a friend in the world."

"No, no, don't say that, Miss Mary," said Slythorpe, in a gently patronizing manner; "it isn't as bad as that comes to. I haven't disguised my own feelings toward you; and, though you've lost your money, you know that needn't make any difference between you and me. My affection ain't of the mercenary sort; in fact, as I got you into the mess (though with the best of intentions, mind you), it's only fair I should get you out of it."

Mary had hidden her face in her hands, but she became aware, from the increased intensity of the all-pervading scented-soap aroma, that Slythorpe was drawing nearer to her, and, in another moment, his arm was around her waist. She drew herself up proudly:

"Sir, I am willing to believe you mean kindly, but your offer under such circumstances is an insult. Be good enough to leave me."

Slythorpe would have parleyed, but with the air of an outraged queen Mary Hope rang the bell, and, obedient to the summons, Mrs. Murgatroyd appeared.

"Open the door for Mr. Slythorpe, if you please."

"You'll be sorry for this, you'll find, Miss Hope," said Slythorpe; but Mary vouchsafed no answer, and the attorney retired discomfited, Mrs. Murgatroyd holding the door for him with an expression of thorough enjoyment. As soon as it was closed upon him, she bounced back into Mary's room, and flung open the windows.

"Let's have a breath of fresh air, for goodness' sake, after that nasty, slimy, scented serpent. I always feel as if the house wanted disin—what d'ye call it?—with Condy's Sea-salt or Tidman's Restorer, or some o' them deidolizers, whenever he's been in it. Why, my dear lamb, whatever is the matter?"

Poor Mary's overwrought nerves had at last given way, and she fell upon the sofa in a fit of violent hysterics. Mrs. Murgatroyd, with motherly instinct, let her emotion have its way, and she soon so far recovered as to be able with many tears to tell the story of this new misfortune, finally crying herself to sleep on the good old woman's sympathizing bosom.

CHAPTER III.

It was two days after the scene recorded in our last chapter, and Mary Hope, with the Times before her, was answering advertisements for a governess. Mary was not one to sit still under the pressure of calamity, however heavy, and, having got over the first shock of [illegible] about bravely to earn her own livelihood. With this view she was now seeking to procure a situation, either as governess or companion, entering upon her task with a brave heart, although she well knew the trials to which such a position would probably expose her. She had answered these advertisements, and had folded and sealed her letters, and now, with her open desk before her, was counting her little store of ready money, and calculating how long she could at any rate subsist before she found employment. In replacing her purse her hand fell upon a portrait, which she took out, and gazed at fondly. "Dear old Geoffrey, if you had lived, how different my future would have been! I suppose I ought to say God's will be done, but, O, it's very, very hard!" A few moments she continued gazing through her tears at the portrait, when a sharp knock at the outer door startled her, and she replaced it in the desk. She heard Mrs. Murgatroyd in conversation with some one, and then a quick, well-remembered voice said, "Where? This room?" And in another moment the door was flung open, and Mary Hope was sobbing in her lost lover's arms.

After the blissful excitement of the first meeting had subsided, a season of mutual explanations followed. Geoffrey Howard had been dangerously wounded, and had been a prisoner for the greater part of a year in an Indian dungeon, where for many weeks his life had hung on a thread by reason of an attack of malignant fever. His worn and sallow features, his skin bronzed to Oriental swarthiness, and the scar of a deep saber-cut across his cheek, scarce hidden by a rather ragged beard, bore eloquent witness to the perils he had passed through. He had landed in England but twelve hours previously, and had lost not a moment in seeking the presence of his darling and her father, for he was of course ignorant of Bernard Hope's death. Mary, too, had much to tell, and, nestling by Geoffrey's side, her little white fingers hidden in the ragged brown hands of her lover, which held them as though they would never again let them go, she told him all she had gone through—the loss of her father, the history of the will, and, lastly, the loss of her little fortune.

"I don't understand it," said Geoffrey. "The man has been playing some deep game."

"Perhaps he really wished to get me more—what do you call it?—interest for my money. I dare say it was meant kindly enough, though it has happened so unfortunately."

"I don't believe it, darling. If he had really had your interest at heart, he would have regarded safety before all things. I strongly suspect that if all things had gone well you would simply have received your 3 per cent., and Mr. Slythorpe would have pocketed the difference."

"O Geoffrey, Geoffrey! I'm afraid you have come home very uncharitable. Besides, what does it matter about a lot of stupid money, now I have got you back again?—unless, indeed, you would have liked me better for having the money."

There was only one possible answer to such an accusation, and Maj. Howard made it—that is to say, he called Mary a little goose, kissed her, and dropped the subject, having taken care, however, to ascertain the address of Mr. Slythorpe and the name of the company in which Mary's money had been lost. On leaving her, he took a hansom cab and drove to the office of the liquidator of the company, when, on his stating that he desired to make some inquiries on behalf of one of their shareholders, Mr. Slythorpe, he was informed to his astonishment that there was not and never had been any shareholder of that name on the books of the company. He next inquired whether, perchance, the shares were standing in Miss Hope's own name, and again was answered in the negative. Utterly bewildered, he drove to Mr. Slythorpe's office. Mr. Slythorpe was at home, and he speedily found himself in the attorney's presence. Mr. Slythorpe was a little nervous. He was always a little nervous with strangers till he knew their business; and Maj. Howard's announcement that he had called on behalf of Miss Mary Hope did not tend to increase his confidence. He was, however, far from suspecting Maj. Howard's identity, but jumped to the conclusion that he was a hostile solicitor employed by Miss Hope to call him to account. Maj. Howard's next remark tended to confirm that impression.

"You stated to Miss Hope, I think, a couple of days ago, that the property bequeathed to her by her father's will had been invested in the Wheal Marina Company, which has just come to grief. You are of course aware that an investment upon such a rotten security was a gross breach of trust, for which you are liable."

"Not at all; the power of investment is unlimited. Indeed, shares of companies are specially included."

"You are certain of that?"

"Quite so. I drew the will myself."

"Very good. The shares stood, I suppose, in your own name."

"Ye-es; in my name, of course, as sole trustee."

"Then pray how is it, Mr. Slythorpe, that I don't find your name among the list of shareholders of the company?"

Mr. Slythorpe's countenance fell.

"Because—because—I may as well make a clean breast of it—to tell you the truth, the money never was in that company at all. It was a false alarm, sir, a false alarm."

"Then, where on earth is the money, sir? And what do you mean by a false alarm?"

"I'll tell you, if you'll have a little patience. As a brother solicitor, I'm sure you won't press harder on me than you're quite obliged. Miss Hope's money is in the Wheal Mary Ann, one of the most flourishing companies going, and her shares are worth just double what I gave for them."

"Then what on earth induced you—"

"I'll tell you. Between ourselves, I've taken an uncommon fancy to Miss Hope, and I had made up my mind to make her Mrs. S.; but somehow she didn't take to me quite as kindly as I could have wished. Now the other morning when I took up the Times, almost the first thing I caught sight of was the smash of the Wheal Marina, and the similarity of name gave me quite a turn, for just at the first moment I thought it was the Wheal Mary Ann. And then the thought struck me, 'If it only had been, my lady, you'd have been glad enough to say "Yes" to Samuel Slythorpe.' And then I thought I'd try it. It was merely a little innocent practical joke—a roose d'amour, sir; a mere roose d'amour." And Mr. Slythorpe smiled.

"You atrocious scoundrel!"

There was a sudden blow, a heavy crash, and Mr. Samuel Slythorpe measured his length on the floor. The clerk outside, hearing the downfall, popped his head into the room, but, seeing the state of things, discreetly retired again, remarking:

"Beg pardon; thought you rang, sir."

Meanwhile, Maj. Howard, having knocked Slythorpe down, proceeded to knock him up again; and, with his own dandy cane, which stood by the side of the fireplace, gave him one of the most tremendous thrashings ever recorded in the pages of history. And the clerk in the outer office, who owed Slythorpe many a grudge for acts of petty tyranny, listened at the door, smiling pleasantly at each "swish" of the descending cane, and finally indulged in a war dance expressive of triumph and exultation, round the office-stool.

A fortnight later, Maj. Howard, looking wonderfully better in health and strength, stood before the altar of a quiet city church with a graceful little figure by his side. And with no pomp or ceremony, no breakfast, no speeches, no wedding guests, with only good Mrs. Murgatroyd for bridesmaid, the two true lovers were made one. And six months afterward, in the Court of Queen's Bench, the great assault case of Slythorpe vs. Howard was tried. And when the lawyers on both sides had had their say, the presiding Judge said, "Gentlemen of the jury, it is not disputed that a very violent assault was committed on the plaintiff, and he is therefore entitled to your verdict. But in assessing the damage, gentlemen, you will consider the general merits of the case, and give the plaintiff only such compensation as you think he fairly deserves." And the jury, in awarding one farthing by way of damages, expressed their unanimous regret that there wasn't a smaller coin.—London Society.

Americans the Biggest.

Statistics have been recently furnished in regard to the size and development of Americans, which are of interest. They serve to dissipate a good many unfounded notions that have crept into the general mind, and have obtained wide credence. These statistics were compiled from those taken in examining men for the army. Toward the close of the war, when the average age of soldiers was the highest, there were examined 10,162 men, of whom 6,359 were native born, 589 Canadians, 454 Englishmen, 1,417 Irishmen and 1,343 Germans. The mean height of the Americans was the greatest, 5 feet 7.29 inches; of the Canadians, 5 feet 7.5 inches; of the Englishmen, 5 feet 6.8 inches; of the Irishmen, 5 feet 6.5 inches; of the Germans, 5 feet 5.9 inches. The difference between the Germans, who were the shortest, and the Americans, who were the tallest, was about two inches.

A SAN FRANCISCO young lady received an invitation to attend the theater the other evening just as the Chinaman came for her wash. She hurriedly made out a list of the washing, and answered the invitation. Then she sent the list to the young man and kept the answer to his note. There was soon a very much confused young man, a very much mortified young woman, but no theater going for either of them that night.

YES, if you would be polite, you will have to lift your hat to a lady just the same, though old zero gets under and makes a skating rink of your glary and hair-skirted pate.

WATCHMAKING IN AMERICA.

Testimony of the Swiss Commissioner—American Superior to Foreign Watches.

M. Edouard Favre Perret, Swiss Commissioner to the Centennial Exhibition, and member of the International Jury on watches, has given the results of his observations on American watchmaking in a public address at Chaux-de-Fonds, Locle, and Neuchatel. Being himself a large watch manufacturer, his statements made a profound impression in Switzerland, and will be read with the liveliest interest in this country. After sketching the growth of watchmaking in Besancon, by which the French market for watches was lost to Switzerland, he spoke substantially as follows:

For a long time America has been the principal market for our watches. To-day we must [illegible] prepare to struggle with the Americans on the fields where hitherto we have been the masters. Mr. Dennison, the father of American watchmaking, traveled through the canton of Neuchatel, studying our mode of manufacturing, seeking to inform himself of everything, and carefully noting the weak points in our industry. After his return to the United States, in 1854, he founded a factory at Boston—"The Boston Watch Company." The capital, scarcely $100,000, was subscribed by capitalists more than by practical business men. In the beginning, the company turned out only the rough skeleton movement and attended to the finishing; all other parts, such as trains, balances, jewels, etc., were imported from Switzerland. Little by little, however, the factory extended its operations and produced other parts. But, as the profits were small, the capitalists abandoned it and it failed in 1856.

Another American, Mr. Robbins, scented a good speculation and bought the factory and tools for $75,000. A new company, "The American Watch Company," was formed, with a capital of $200,000, which was increased to $800,000 before the war which put on foot a million of soldiers, and, as every one wanted a watch, there was great animation in the watch business. At this juncture, which might have been a lucky one for our industry, we failed to comprehend our real interests. Instead of sending good watches to the Americans, the worst trash was sent. The Americans, however, went to work on an entirely different plan. The company increased their plant and turned out a better ordinary watch than the Swiss watch. At the end of several years the American watch enjoyed a good reputation, while ours were discredited everywhere. In 1865, the capital was increased to $750,000, and the operations of the company grew to immense proportions. The Waltham Company give employment to 900 workmen and make about 425 movements per day. They have again increased their capital, till it amounts to $1,500,000, beside $500,000 as a reserve fund. This watch factory is a real power; there is none like it in Europe. We have seen it in all its details, and we have admired its splendid organization.

Last May, on the eve of the Exhibition, we still seemed masters of the situation. One event, however, dealt us a mortal blow. The Waltham Company announced a reduction of from 40 to 50 per cent. on prices already lower than their rivals, the reduction to date back to Jan. 1, 1876. It is unnecessary to tell you, gentlemen, how very detrimental this was to the Swiss watch. Still another and more important reason explains the growing prosperity of the American Company. Their tools work so regularly that all parts of the watch may be interchanged, by a simple order on a postal card, without necessitating the forwarding of the adjoining piece.

The question has often been asked, can the Americans sufficiently supply the demand of their markets? Yes, they can; we are driven out of the American market. In 1860 the American companies produced only 15,000 watches. To-day they produce 250,000, which can be easily doubled. We sent to the United States in 1872 366,000 watches. In 1876 we shall barely send them 75,000 watches. The Americans have already begun to send their manufacture to Europe. In England they sell annually from 20,000 to 30,000 watches.

The American watch commences to drive from the English market the Swiss watch and even the English watch. The Americans began by creating a demand for their goods in the Indies and in Australia, and then—thanks to some powerful importing houses—they invaded England. At Moscow and St. Petersburg they have already established important branch offices. Their aim is to drive us first out of their own country, and then to compete with us on our own soil. I sincerely confess that I personally have doubted that competition. But now I have seen—I have felt it—and I am terrified by the danger to which our industry is exposed. Besides, I am not the only one to think so. The Societe Internationale have sent a delegate to make inquiries, and his report perfectly agrees with mine. Up to this very day we have believed America to be dependent upon Europe. We have been mistaken. The Americans will send us their products since we cannot send them our own. Their importation is not confined to watches alone. Already America has commenced to send cotton goods to England, which hitherto monopolized that article in the markets of the world.

Can the Americans maintain their prices? Yes, they can, for if they obtain a good profit on their superior quality goods, they can afford to be satisfied with a smaller profit on the lower grades of watches. In America, everything is made by machinery; here we make everything by hand. In Switzerland about 40,000 workmen make, on an average, each forty watches per annum. In the United States, the average is about 150 watches. Therefore the machinery produces three and a half to four times more than the workmen.

Had the Philadelphia Exhibition taken place five years later, we should have been totally annihilated without knowing whence nor how we received the terrible blow. We have believed ourselves masters of the situation, when we really have been on a volcano. And, to-day, we must actually struggle if we do not want to encounter, in all the markets, that rival manufacture. For a long time we have hoped that the customs duties, amounting to 25 per cent., might be reduced. We cannot count upon it. America needs all her resources, and, whether Democrats or Republicans be in power, we cannot hope for a reduction of import duties. We must, therefore, make up our mind to lose the American market. It has been complacently said that the Americans do not make the entire watch, but are dependent upon Switzerland for several parts of the watch. This is a mistake. The Waltham Company make the entire watch from the first screw to the case and dial. It would even be difficult for them to use our products, so great is the regularity, so minute the precision with which their machines work.

They arrive at the regulation of the watches—so to say—without having seen it. When the watch is given to the adjuster, the foreman delivers to him the corresponding hair-spring, and the watch is regulated. [Sensation among the audience.] Here is what I have seen, gentlemen! I asked from the director of the Waltham Company a watch of the fifth grade. A large safe was opened before me; at random I took a watch out of it and fastened it to my chain. The director having asked me to let him have the watch for two or three days, so as to observe its motion, I answered, "On the contrary, I persist in wearing it just as it is to obtain an exact idea of your manufacture." At Paris, I set my watch by a regulator on the Boulevard, and on the sixth day I observed that it had varied 32 seconds! And this watch is of the fifth American grade; it cost 75 francs (movement without case). On my arrival at Locle I showed the watch to one of our first adjusters, who asked permission to take it down—that is, to take it to pieces. I, however, wished first to observe it, and here is the result which I noted: Hanging, daily variation, 1½ seconds; variations in different positions from 4 to 8 seconds; in the heated room the variation was very slight. Having thus observed it, I handed the watch over to the adjuster, who took it down. After a few days he came to me and said, word for word, "I am completely overwhelmed; the result is incredible; one would not find one such watch among fifty thousand of our manufacture!" This watch, gentlemen, I repeat to you, I took at hazard—out of a heap, as we say. You understand from this example, that the American watch may be preferred to the Swiss. I have finished, gentlemen, and I have told you of things such as I have seen them. It remains for us to profit from this sad experience, and to improve our manufacture.

A TERRIBLE MOMENT.

What Mr. George A. White Felt and Saw at Ashtabula Bridge—The Plunge into the Abyss and the Fearful Sensation Experienced.

Mr. Geo. A. White, a Boston merchant, who was one of the saved at the terrible accident at Ashtabula, Ohio, relates his thrilling experience, as follows:

"Mr. Swift and his wife, another gentleman and myself, just before we got to the Ashtabula bridge, had formed a whist party. We had fastened the table and all four were quietly discussing the game when the dread catastrophe occurred. To give our ideas or feelings would be hard. No pen or words can picture the untold horrors that were endured by the human beings upon that train at this time.

"We were in section 1, in the rear of the car. I had just looked at my watch. It was 7:35 o'clock when we reached the bridge. We had heard a brief and loud crunching sound. The first we really began to see of the accident was when the bell-cord snapped. It made a noise like the report of a pistol. As it came in two it broke one of the lamps, and they went out simultaneously. There was a crashing of breaking wood and glass around. I didn't know that we were going down a terrible abyss of seventy feet.

"Why, I thought there had been another collision, and that our coach had been telescoped. I got up, and told the gentleman alongside of me to get up, that we were going to have an accident. We had time to think in the descent. He got out into the aisle and I followed. I then, for the first time, began to realize the truth.

"I experienced a fearful sensation, which was a commingling of fear and an idea that something heavy was falling and going to crush me. At this time my clothing was being pierced and torn with splinters.

"In going down there was hardly any sound. The only thing we heard was that heavy breathing which bespeaks a fear of something terrible to come. The first sound that [illegible] was after we struck the ice. The breaking of the glass was like rifle-shots, and the train coming down made a terrible roar. Our car fell as it rode—bodily and straight—which saved our lives.

"How did I get out? As soon as the car touched bottom I could see nothing; all was dark. I groped my way out through the east end of the car. Behind us was the Buffalo car, standing on end, almost perpendicularly, resting against the abutment of the bridge, one end having taken our platform.

"How did the wreck look? Why, at the right of us, facing the west, was a car which lay on its side. The top of it was close on to ours. One car lay just as it was running. I went up over the roof of the other car to take a look up and around. I saw a gentleman and, I think, a lady, following me. On looking into the car I saw a large number of people lying together in a mass. The car was crushed at its bottom and sides.

"The scene within was horrible, heartrending—indescribable. It was enough to unnerve the bravest. There were maimed and bruised men, women, and children, all held down by the cruel timbers. They were in different stages of delirium and excitement. Some were screaming, some were groaning, and others praying. There was hardly any one within who seemed rational.

"I saw the encroachments the fire was making. While on the roof of that car I took a speedy survey of the situation. I realized the terrible, yawning chasm. I shall never forget the horrors of that night.

"I kept measurably cool, but I must have been excited, for I could not realize that I was hurt. I could see the flames ahead. I saw how speedily they would consume the wreck. Some one had quenched the fire in the rear end of our car—the Palatine. I returned to the Palatine, and felt that we had yet some minutes to spare before our turn would come. I made the remark to my friend that there was yet time to save all in our car. Almost every person in the Palatine seemed frantic. All wanted to escape. I did the best I could to help under the circumstances. Nearly every one who had been saved walked away, bent on saving self. I went back through a window into the Palatine. I found a gentleman who had an ankle crushed. I couldn't get him to move an inch. I saw we had no time to lose. Seconds were precious. He seemed to be crazed. He said he wouldn't leave unless he got his overcoat. I gave him one I happened to lay hold of then, and I pushed him out into a gentleman's arms.

"We passed another gentleman out head first to some person who took him from the outside. The next gentleman we took had a leg broken. We just did the best we could—we laid them in the ice and snow. We passed out still another, who also had a broken leg. They were laid beside the car. It was quick work. The flames were devouring everything. Above all rose the cries and moans of the wounded and dying. Oh! such a scene! Mr. and Mrs. Swift had been held down by the table at which they had sat. They were much bruised and shaken. Mrs. Swift showed herself to be a brave little woman, for she was as cool and collected as could be.

"In our car we nearly all saved our hand-sachels, shawls, hats, and overcoats. Swift walked out slick as you please, with his silk tile, as though he was all prepared and going to a party. I went through the Palatine again, and I am sure no one either injured or dying was left in it. All its passengers escaped.

"I think none of the Buffalo-car passengers were saved. The coach fell on end, and I never heard a sound from it after the fall, and no one came out. All was death within, in my estimation. The Buffalo was full of passengers. The parlor-car was just ahead of us, and no one came out of it. I think all the passengers it held were killed."

LARGE numbers of beavers have made their appearance in Cumberland and adjacent counties in Virginia, and along the tributaries of the Appomattox.

THE GRASSHOPPERS.

War on the Pestiferous Insects—Invoking the Aid of Congress—Prof. Riley's Suggestions.

A document signed by the Governors of Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota and Dakota Territory has been presented to Congress, asking for a commission to examine into the grasshopper plague, and report upon the best methods for guarding against its annual return to the districts devastated during the past few years. Individuals have been able to do little toward the successful opposition of grasshopper ravages, and States have only partially checked the curse; but it is hoped and believed that a combined effort will in time do much in the direction of the annihilation of the insect-pests.

In aid of the proposed national work, the State Entomologist of Missouri, Prof. Charles V. Riley, contributes suggestions, to be followed out by all concerned, as follows:

> Protect your fields and prairies, as far as possible, from burning this fall. Ask your railroad managers to co-operate by burning coal during the dry weather, and by instructing their section masters to have a few hundred feet carefully burned each side of their track. Then set all these fields on fire next spring after the new hatch and before they commence to travel. Save all straw, old hay, and other cheap combustible material that can be got to use in the spring in burning the young. Harrow and drag wherever you can. This is the best work that can be done in the fall. A revolving harrow will more than pay for itself on newly-turned ground, and a sharp-toothed harrow can be used to good advantage on the bare and uncultivated places, and along roadsides where the eggs are known to be laid. Ditch! Commence at once to surround your field or garden with a ditch as here recommended. Employ the first two weeks that would otherwise be devoted to planting next spring either to ditching or making pits, or to plowing or deep harrowing. Don't plant until, by burning, crushing and trapping or starving, you have got rid of the bulk of the pests. Sow your grain in "lands," or stripe fifty to 160 feet wide, to permit of ditching between them, and those of you who have fall wheat up and doing well, where the eggs are thickly laid, should make ditches at intervals through the field to facilitate the saving of it in the spring.
>
> Organize, so as to insure intelligent and concerted action. Demand of your Legislature that it enact a bounty law which will render the labor bestowed on the destruction of the eggs, not only valuable as preventing injury to yourselves, but doubly remunerative to those who take the trouble to collect them.
>
> Make provisions for procuring as large a supply of hogs and as [illegible] as large a number of chickens, turkeys and ducks, next spring, as possible.

These suggestions are, in the main, sensible and practical, and the remedies offered are much more to be relied upon than unusual climatic influences or premature hatching to destroy the eggs and young locusts.

It is useless to stand idly by and see crops destroyed. There must be action, and by the concerted efforts of farmers, scientists and legislators the onward march of the all-consuming insects may be broken, and the myriads successfully driven into their "last ditch."

Poland's Opportunity.

Referring to the partition of Poland and its subsequent results, an English paper says: "It is impossible to help seeing that the iniquitous partition of Poland has had, sentiment apart, enduring practical effects. If justice has not overtaken the wrong-doers with a full measure of retribution, it is always administering little doses of vengeance, which are troublesome, and fraught with dangerous consequences. Had the three monarchs who divided the old kingdom only annihilated the race which inhabited it, they might have reigned in peace over a solitude of their own making; but they let it 'brokenly live on,' and hence a series of revolts, sanguinary wars, conspiracies, and discontents which on at least three occasions taxed the utmost power of Russia to subdue. In 1793, when the heroic struggle under Kosciusko awoke the muse of Campbell to a burst of pathetic eloquence which the world will never let die, in 1830, and even so lately as 1862, it required two years of tremendous effort on the part of the hosts of the Czar to extinguish the conflagration and stamp out its smoldering fires. Even now, when civil and religious liberty under its ferocious masters is a mere name, when all emblems and memorials of nationality are prohibited, and the language of the nation is proscribed, and most of its natural leaders are in exile, so indestructible is its vital force that a large army, protected by three of the strongest fortresses in Europe, is needed to prevent another rising. Nor is that all. Russia's peril is Poland's opportunity, and whenever war approaches the dominion of the Czar the Pole begins to plot, to protest and to threaten, as an ally of any power, no matter what, which would only repay to the destroyer of his country a small debt of the vengeance due ever since the days of Catherine. At this moment Russia stands in the attitude of a power determined to pick a quarrel with Turkey, and the Poles are again stirring."

Dirt as Medicine.

Some very extraordinary properties have been discovered in the earth of New Jersey. It seems to be an infallible cure for chronic diseases, for rheumatism, wounds, bruises and corrupting sores. The application is very simple. The earth is bound on to the limb, and changed once a day. Some very extraordinary cures have been performed, and people carry off quantities of the earth and apply it at home. It can be found not only by the acre, but by the mile. It is as good for animals as it is for man. A farmer had a hog that was fearfully lacerated. Inflammation set in, and the hog was turned out to die. He crawled to a hollow filled with swash. He laid himself down and continued to wallow. In three days the inflammation was gone. The animal began to eat, and in less than a week was perfectly cured. Whether the medical properties are chemical or mineral no one can tell as yet. The farm on which this remarkable earth is found is owned by a New York merchant. His friends already distinguish him as the Mud Doctor.

Generals of the Army.

The names and rank of the general officers of the United States army are as follows: William T. Sherman, General of the Army; P. H. Sheridan, Lieutenant General; Winfield S. Hancock, Major General; John M. Schofield, Major General; Irvin McDowell, Major General; John Pope, Brigadier General; O. O. Howard, Brigadier General; A. H. Terry, Brigadier General; E. O. C. Ord, Brigadier General; C. C. Augur, Brigadier General; George Crook, Brigadier General. The names of the Major Generals and of the Brigadier Generals are given in order of seniority of service.

The Ashtabula Horror.

The Cincinnati Times, in an article on railroad accidents and their causes, concludes as follows:

> There is this peculiarity about the Lake Shore road—there have been fewer accidents in its history than on almost any trunk line on our continent, but those few have been such as can never be forgotten. It is one of the best built and best managed roads in the world—double steel track, stone ballast and best of rolling stock. It will go for a decade without damaging a car, breaking a wheel, or even missing a connection, and then, all of a sudden it plunges into a catastrophe that makes the world shudder. Thrice in the last fifteen years it has suffered from accidents that are typical of railway horrors—Ashtabula, Painesville, Angola! And each of these seem to have been the work of fate, of which no prescience could warn, no prudence provide against. The soil from Cleveland to Buffalo is a mixture of sand, clay and gravel, and the streams running lakeward have dug for themselves deep and narrow gorges. Across these the road passes by double-track viaducts of the finest character. That at Painesville is a massive stone structure which can stand the wear of ages. Most of the others are iron bridges of the best make. And yet, amid the fierce cold and heavy snow storms of the lake shore many of these gorges have been the scenes of sad disaster. At Angola a rail snapped by the frost, and the train plunged into the gorge, lighting on end, and burning up with the passengers in it. At Painesville, some years ago, at just this season of the year, and amid just such a snow storm, one of the trains was brought to a standstill by the drifts. A trustworthy officer was sent out to flag following trains, but, blindfolded by the fierce storm, and overcome by the cold insidiously creeping through his veins, he failed to attract the attention of a pursuing express, which crashed at terrific speed through the blockaded train.

Mr. Schuyler's Report on the Eastern Outrages.

Mr. Schuyler's complete report is ready. It states that seventy-nine villages were burned, many more pillaged, at least 9,000 houses burned, 72,000 persons deprived of shelter, 15,000 killed, and that many more died from disease, exposure and imprisonment. The rebellion was insignificant and the massacres unnecessary.

Mr. Schuyler vainly tried to obtain from the Turkish officials a list of outrages by the Bulgarians. The vague statements in circulation were disproved during the investigation. He heard most of such statements in Constantinople. They became less exaggerated and diminished as he approached the locality. He obtained proof of 115 persons killed by the Bulgarians, including twelve women and children. Detailed lists are given of the population of the Christian villages killed, likewise of the Mohammedans. At Panagurishta only two women were killed amidst the fighting.

No Turkish women or children were killed in cold blood. No Mussulman women were violated; no purely Turkish village, excepting Uruthi, was attacked or burned; no Mussulman house was pillaged; no mosque sacked. It has been maintained that the massacres and outrages were not ordered by the Porte, but Mr. Schuyler has strong reason to believe that Abdul Kerim Pasha, Hussein Avni, and Midhat Pasha had cognizance of these deeds, if they did not actually order them. Men the most distinguished for their cruelty have been promoted or decorated, while an attempt has been made to punish some Turkish officials who did their best to spare innocent lives.—London Daily News.

A Six-year-old Boy's Suicide.

The 6-year-old son of Dr. A. R. Eaton, of Elizabeth, N. J., committed suicide, on Saturday, by shooting himself in the breast. It seems the little fellow has been very despondent during the last few weeks, owing to the death of a sister who had been his constant companion, and on more than one occasion threatened to kill himself. His parents endeavored to cheer him and divert his thoughts, but to their efforts he replied that he wanted to be an angel and live with his little sister. On Saturday morning his mother chided him for something, whereupon he went away apparently much affected. Shortly after this Mrs. Eaton heard the report of a pistol, and rushing up the stairs was met by her son, who, pointing to the bullet wound in his breast, said: "Don't cry, mamma; I won't die; the bullet didn't hit my heart." He retained his consciousness until the bullet was extracted when he died.—Boston Globe.

The Texas Frontier.

It is announced from Washington that the subject of outrages upon American citizens on the Mexican border of the Rio Grande by the revolutionists is occupying the attention of our Government, and that orders will soon be sent to our army and naval forces in that quarter with a view to their protection, as there is now no Government in Mexico to which an appeal can be made for that purpose. As regards the Indian marauders who cross into Texas, the question is likely to be brought to the attention of Congress whether outrages on American citizens shall be permitted to continue, or whether this Government shall take into its own hands the manner of redress.

The citizens of Gatesville, Texas, desire that their home shall be more peaceful than is general in that State. Therefore when a party of rowdies from a neighboring place were disorderly on their way through Gatesville to a ball, firing into houses and breaking down fences, the citizens promptly held a peace meeting. The consequence of the consultation was that, when the rowdies on their return repeated their bad behavior, a volley of bullets killed two of them and wounded more.

HENRY G. SHAW ("Josh Billings") said to a St. Louis reporter that he had been told by Ossian E. Dodge of a fact in Artemus Ward's career in contradiction of the accepted history of that humorist. Mr. Dodge was traveling in the Western States with a show, consisting of a musical machine and vocalism. He met young Browne, liked his wit and sprightliness, and employed him as an agent. While thus engaged Browne wrote the quaint letters about the "snaix and wax figgers" that introduced him to the public as "Artemus Ward, moril showman."

THE Minnesota State railway bonds, issued in 1858, will become due and payable in about a year. They amount to $2,275,000, which, with twenty years' interest at 7 per cent., will make the total principal and interest $5,460,000. The people voted a loan of five millions, and if all the bonds had been issued, as was originally intended, the State would have had $12,000,000 to pay.

Cowardly Assaults.

When a candidate for high office is so well liked and so popular with the masses as to make his defeat difficult in a fair and honorable fight, mean and cowardly men are not wanting who delight in manufacturing lies and slandering his good name. There are also those whose selfishness prompts them to prostitute their honor, pervert truth, and ignore right, for the sake of injuring a competitor in business, whose prosperity they envy, and with whose business sagacity they have not the talent to successfully compete in an honorable way. These thoughts are suggested by the mean, cowardly attacks made upon me and my medicines, by those who imagine their pecuniary prospects injured by the great popularity which my standard medicines have acquired, and the continued growth of my professional practice. Narrow-minded practitioners of medicine, and manufacturers of preparations which do not possess sufficient merit to successfully compete for popular favor, have resorted to such cowardly strategy as to publish all sorts of ridiculous reports about the composition of my medicines. Almanacs, "Receipt Books," and other pamphlets are issued and scattered broadcast over the land, wherein these contemptible knaves publish pretended analyses of my medicines, and receipts for making them. Some of these publications are given high-sounding names, pretend to be issued by respectable men of education and position, for the good of the people—the more completely to blind the reader to the real object in their circulation, which is to injure the sale of my medicines. "The Popular Health Almanac" is the high-sounding name of one of these publications, which contains bogus receipts, without a grain of truth in them. Not less devoid of truth are those which have been published by one Dr. L., of Detroit, in the Michigan Farmer, and by other manufacturers of medicines, in several so-called journals of Pharmacy. They are all prompted by jealousy and utterly fail in accomplishing the object of their authors, for, notwithstanding their free circulation, my medicines continue to sell more largely than any others manufactured in this country, and are constantly increasing in sale despite the base lies concocted by such knaves. The people find that these medicines possess genuine merit, accomplish what their manufacturer claims for them, and are not the vile, poisonous nostrums which jealous, narrow-minded physicians and sneaking compounders of competing medicines represent them to be. Among the large number of pretended analyses published, it is a significant fact that no two have been at all alike—conclusively proving the dishonesty of their authors. It is enough for the people to know—that while thousands, yes, I may truthfully say millions, have taken my medicines and have been cured, no one has ever received injury from their use.

Sore Throat, Cough, Cold

And similar troubles, if suffered to progress, result in serious pulmonary affections, oftentimes incurable. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" reach directly the seat of the disease, and give almost instant relief.

THERE can be no mistake about it, "Matchless" plug tobacco takes the lead. Old fine-cut chewers say it gives better satisfaction and is cheaper than fine cut. You cannot be imposed upon, as each plug has the words, "Matchless P. T. Co." on a wooden tag. Try it once and you will always chew it. Manufactured by the Pioneer Tobacco Company, New York.

DURANG'S Rheumatic Remedy will most positively cure any case of rheumatism, gout, neuralgia or lumbago on the face of the earth, no matter of how long standing. It is taken internally, the only way the disease can be reached, and cures quickly and permanently. Price, one dollar a bottle. For sale by wholesale and retail druggists everywhere.

WORTHY OF NOTE.—An exchange says there is scarcely a day passes that we do not hear, either from persons coming into our office or in some other way, of the success of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment in the cure of coughs and colds, so prevalent about town just now.

IF we can benefit the readers of this paper any by recommending Parsons' Purgative Pills to be the best anti-bilious medicine in the country, we are willing to do so. We have had about as good a chance to know as any one.

ELECTRICITY, the grand vitalizing principle of organic life, is within the reach of all. Dr. Collins' Voltaic Plaster is the realization of the dream of medical men for centuries. It banishes pains and aches as by magic.

PENSIONS!

ARE PAID TO EVERY SOLDIER who was disabled while in the service of the United States, by reason of wounds, accidental injuries, hernia, or rupture (no matter how slight), loss of eye-sight, diseased eyes, disease of the lungs or heart, rheumatism, loss of hearing, varicose veins of the legs, piles, falling back of measles, or chronic diarrhœa. Even the loss of a finger or toe, in any way, by accident or otherwise, or any other injury or disease, entitles a soldier to a pension. Pensions and bounties procured where discharge papers are lost. New discharges obtained when lost. FULL BOUNTIES PAID TO ALL SOLDIERS who were discharged by reason of wounds, rupture, or accidental injuries, under new laws. PENSIONS INCREASED. It is from 10 to 15 years since many received their wounds, or the disease for which they were pensioned. In some manner the disability has increased from what it was at first. Previous to March 3, 1873, invalid pensioners could not draw more than $8 per month, no matter how badly disabled. Now $18 may be divided between $8 and $18 for invalid pensioners after the $8, the pension is rated at $10, $12, $14, $16 and $18. Where the pensioner can't labor, $24. Under the old law $8 was given for finger or thumb, now it is $4 to $8 per month. So apply at once and get an increase. No charge for advice; and no fee until claims are paid. Thousands are yet entitled to pensions and bounties and don't know it. CIRCULARS FREE. "SOLDIERS' REVIEW," an eight page paper on pensions and bounties for 75 cents per year. Specimen copy FREE; send address on "postal." Send 25 cents and get a book with all pension, bounty and land laws. It shows what every soldier and his heirs are entitled to; it contains all acts of Congress for 15 years back, including last Congress. Address (with stamp), P. M. CLARK, 315 LOCUST ST., ST. AMERICAN
NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY

Contains: A complete list of Newspapers and other Periodicals in the United States, Territories, and Dominion of Canada, arranged alphabetically by towns, giving name, days of issue, politics, or general character, form, size, subscription price per year, date of establishment, editors' and publishers' names, and CIRCULATION ESTIMATES.

The object of the AMERICAN NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY is not very different from that of the well-known mercantile agencies which exist in all leading cities. The latter keep their subscribers informed of the character, habits, reputation, business ability and financial strength of persons with whom they are likely to have business transactions, enabling them thereby to so regulate those transactions as to secure probably profitable dealings, or to avoid such as will be likely to result in ultimate annoyance or loss.

The DIRECTORY conveys the best obtained information concerning the character and value of newspapers. Its patrons are the men who expend money in advertising (a large and important class), and it is from them that the publishers of the DIRECTORY, in their capacity of advertising agents, derive their profit and support. It is to them and not to newspaper publishers that they owe the duty of faithful service. The theory that advertising agencies are the servants of newspapers, and should advance their interests first, is annihilated by the system long adopted by publishers, almost without exception, of ignoring any idea of protecting the so-called agency and maintaining the right to appoint competitors in the same field without the consent of those already occupying it.

AS THE MOST IMPORTANT PORTION OF THE INFORMATION SUPPLIED BY A MERCANTILE AGENCY CONSISTS OF A REPORT OF THE FINANCIAL STRENGTH OF THE PERSON ABOUT WHOM INFORMATION IS ASKED, SO IS THE CIRCULATION OF A NEWSPAPER GENERALLY CONSIDERED THE POINT UPON WHICH INFORMATION WILL BE OF MOST VALUE TO THE ADVERTISER.

There are, among merchants, some who deny the right of a mercantile agency to inquire into their private affairs, and who decline giving any information upon which a report may be based; but the mercantile agency does not, on that account, neglect to make a report. It gets from other sources the best obtainable information, and upon this its estimate is based, although it cannot be denied that the reticence of the party in question is almost always attributed to a knowledge upon his part that a true report would be prejudicial to his credit. The report made is, therefore, likely to be less favorable than it might have been had the information asked for been cheerfully and frankly furnished.

So also there are among newspaper publishers some who deny the right of any one to inquire into their affairs. It has been the policy of the publishers of the DIRECTORY to omit all information about circulation whenever plainly and unequivocally commanded to do so. In such cases the matter is disposed of by annexing to the report the words "objects to stating circulation." In every case where the above command is not plainly and unequivocally conveyed to the publishers of the DIRECTORY, they make up their report in same manner pursued by the mercantile agencies in estimating the financial strength of a merchant, and, like the institutions referred to, they decline to reveal the sources from which they have obtained their information.

It is undoubtedly true that no publication of this character is privileged, and that in an instance where a merchant or a newspaper is seriously injured by an unjust or materially incorrect report the courts furnish a remedy, and both mercantile agency or Directory publisher will be held responsible for actual damages shown to accrue to an injured party from a report proved upon trial to have been erroneous.

This is a liability which the publishers of the DIRECTORY cannot escape; it is, therefore, one which they hold themselves at all times ready to meet.

The greatest possible care is taken to make the DIRECTORY reports correct. Every publisher is applied to very systematically. All information is taken in a form which excludes any but definite statements which cannot be misunderstood, while every effort is made to protect honest publishers against such as would resort to lying or perjured reports to gain an unfair advantage.

It has rarely been found that a cause of complaint has arisen against any report which has appeared in either of the seven annual volumes of the Directory already issued which has not resulted either from the neglect of a publisher to respond to appeals for information or an effort on his part to substitute other and different information instead of answering the plain questions upon the blanks furnished for the purpose from the DIRECTORY office.

The Directory estimates the circulation of no newspaper until after an application has been made to its publisher for the actual figures, and sufficient time allowed to elapse for the statement to come to hand had any such been forwarded.

It is believed that no publisher of a newspaper expresses dissatisfaction with the circulation accorded his journal in the AMERICAN NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY who does not desire to impress the public that his edition is greater than it is in reality.

The reason given by several publishers for not furnishing an authoritative statement of their circulation for publication in the AMERICAN NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY is that many advertisers believe the circulation to be greater than it really is, and that this is an advantage to the publisher which would be lost if actual facts should be made known.

An unusual number of publishers of the leading daily papers are this year furnishing the AMERICAN NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY with the actual figures of their circulation.

In addition to the above information, the AMERICAN NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY for 1876 contains classified lists as follows:

PERIODICALS PUBLISHING OVER 5,000 COPIES EACH ISSUE; RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS; NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE, HORTICULTURE AND STOCK-RAISING; MEDICINE AND SURGERY; EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS, OR DEVOTED TO EDUCATIONAL MATTERS; AMUSEMENT AND INSTRUCTION OF CHILDREN; FREEMASONRY, ODD FELLOWSHIP, TEMPERANCE, AND KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS; COMMERCE AND FINANCE, INSURANCE, REAL ESTATE, SCIENCE AND MECHANICS, LAW, PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS, SPORTING, MUSIC, FASHIONS, AND WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE; ALSO, NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS PRINTED WHOLLY OR IN PART IN THE GERMAN, FRENCH, SCANDINAVIAN, SPANISH, HOLLANDISH, ITALIAN, WELSH, BOHEMIAN, PORTUGUESE, POLISH AND HEBREW LANGUAGES.

THE INDIANAPOLIS

SENTINEL.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1877.

Every reader and thinking man in the state who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for at least one of the editions of the Sentinel. Farmers, Merchants and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL.

The Weekly Sentinel will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than Compare Favorably with any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be Newsy, Literary, and full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

TERMS.

Invariably cash in advance.

OUR PORKER.

"A pig" I exclaimed, in great astonishment, pausing in the act of helping Nelly to a slice of the steak. We were at breakfast.

'Yes, my dear,' said Mrs. Dobb, 'a pig. We could keep one just as well as not, and it would be quite a little item of saving, when meat is so high.'

'Why, Susan you'd have to buy food for it—corn and apples, and I don't know what all—it would cost more than it would come to.'

'No,' persisted my wife, 'it would not, James. Father always kept a pig.'

'But he lived in the country.'

'That makes no difference. I was talking with neighbor Jones about it over the fence yesterday, and he said we threw away swill enough ever day to keep ten pigs.'

'I should like to know what Jones knows about our swill,' said I.

'Why he judged from his own experience, James. He keeps a pig.'

'And while we are on the subject, Susan, I'll just take the opprtunity to say I do not approve of your flirting with married men over the fence.'

'James, do be serious! Flirting, indeed—with pigs and swill for a basis of conversation. You just want to vex me.'

'Oh, pigs are a pretext; any thing will do for a pretext when a woman is determined to flirt. I knew a woman once who tried the portrait of her dead grandmother as a pretext for a flirtation. As for Jones—.

'Now, James, you shall not go on in that way, before the children, too. Look at Nellie's eyes!'

'Perhaps you'll pretend,' I continued, 'that Jones didn't bring you a bunch of Isabellas at the same time—'

'Yes and you ate the best part of them last evening, yourself, for I saved them for you, and you know Mr. Jones' grapes are much superior to ours; I'm sure I'm thankful for all he gives me. Will you get a pig for me, James, or won't you?'

'Oh, if you ask it as a favor, Susan, of course I will. I'll get you anything that will be a sourse of pleasure, you know; but if you want a pig for a pet, don't try to pretend it's for economy's sake.'

'A pet!' pouted Susan. 'How ridiculous you are! I detest pets.'

'Then why don't you avoid them, my dear?'

'What are you driving at? I don't know.'

'Why, you are in one now, Susan. Be calm. The coffee will get cold.

Mrs. Dobbs gave me one despairing look, and then poured the coffee. Before I left the house I had promised to see about getting a pig.

Now if there is any eatable animal that I know less about than I do of another, It is the pig. I remember having seen pigs alive when I was a boy, but since I grew up my knowledge of the species has been confined to the porcine corpses I have seen suspended from hooks in market places, and to certain works of art in which they had been represented—not in landscapes, I may remark; so if there had been a market for live pigs adjoining my studio I could not have selected an available one from the lot. I thought about it a good deal during the day, and the result of my meditations was, on my way homeward way in the afternoon, I made a circuit around by the residence of Peter Vann Popp a Dutchman whom I employed to take care of my garden, and to do such other heavy work as might be necessary about the house from time to time. On consultation I found that Peter was just the man for the business. He had a brother who kept a small farm up the Palisades on the Hudson, and Peter said:

'Next week I goes oop to see Hans, and my wife she goes along, too, so I brings you a pig home Mr. Dobb.'

'Good!' said I 'I'll pay your fare, for your trouble, Peter, besides the price of the pig. A good one, now! None of your snubnosed, pug-eyed fellows, you know—a sleek intelligent one.'

'Yah,' said Peter.

A few days later the pig came I was just leaving the house to go down town when I met Peter with the pig in a bag.

'I got him,' Peter remarked—very unnecessarily, however, for the pig announced the fact in his own behalf. Nothing but a pig could have squealed so.

'Where I put him?' asked Peter.

'Oh put him in the barn,' said I. There is a barn attached to our house, but there was nothing in it. Animated by a desire to put the barn to some useful purpose, I bought a cow and put her in there last summer, but she gave no milk the second week, and so I sold her. I was glad I had another tenant for the barn.

But Peter shook his head. That wouldn't do. A barn was no place for a pig. I would have to have a pen, he said.

'It would hardley do to let him run in the garden, I suppose.' said I musingly. 'Can you build a pen, Peter?'

'Yah,' Peter said he could, and so I sent him off after tools and materials, having the pig tied to a tree by one leg. My family gathered about the new comer and viewed him with deep interest. He was a little fellow but healthy, as was proved by the capacity of his lungs.

'Mercy!' cried Susan, 'what a noise he makes. He must be hungry, Jaems.' Susan's experience with babies encouraged her to this conclusion.

'I know what'll make more noise than that,' said my Fred, with a rougish twinkle in his eyes.

'What is it?' I asked, to encourage my son.'

'Two more pigs, said Fred.

When I came home at night the pig was fast asleep in his pen on a heap of straw, and I felt quite a pride in him. I had secret hopes of my own in regard to him, though I did not impart them to Susan. He cost $2—that is, per se. The pen cost about $10 more, and Peter's fare brought the sum total up to $14.83.

I watched the growth of our porker with a high degree of interest. The swill pail always stood by the side of the wood-house door, and, though it was not an agreeable object in an aesthetic point of view, I could not for some time get over a vexatious kind of curiosity as to its contents. I found strange things in itsome times—viewed as articles of food; one of Fred's boots, for instance, or a pair of scissors, or a teaspoon. Once, when I found a silver fork in the swill, I remonstrated with the servant girl—a stupid German creature, who had succeeded to our intelligent Bridget when the latter got married.

'It is not so much that I care for the silver, Katharine,' said I, 'but I don't want the porker choked to death in his prime.'

My wife discharged Katharine, in an impatient moment, soon after this, because the girl threw into the swill-pail four quarts of rich, cream colored milk that had been procured with great trouble from the country, to make a prize pudding for a dinner party that I gave to some of my friends. Katharine was pure city bred, and had never seen such looking milk before in her life; she supposed it spoiled, and into the swill-pail it went.

We had our porker about a month, and he had grown with marvelous celerity. The condition of things in my back garden occupied a large share of my attention; for though small, it had been liberally stocked and diligently cared for, and there was quite a rivalry between my neighbor Jones and myself in this matter. Jones boasted of very superior erudition in these things, and being a gentleman of leisure, he had more time to look after them than I had; but I struggled hard not to be distanced. There was no disputing the point of Jones' Isabellas being rather ahead of mine, but in most respects I felt myself his peer.

September showed our gardens rich with an abundance of tomatoes, cabbages onions, beets, beans and so on, while the apple tree, the two plum trees, and the grape vines hung heavy with their load.

One day our porker got out of his pen, and went rooting around in the garden with a tumultuous exercise of his fredom. Of course, those women never saw him; it was washing day, I believe. The havoc he had made by the time I came home at night was thrilling to witness. Nobody could tell how long he had been out of his pen; but judging by the devastation I witnessed, he must have been out since morning. Tennyson's verse in 'Maud' may give a faint indication of my emotions, as I stood in the back door that evening:

> "The roots of my hair have stirred * * *
> And my pulses closed their gates with a shock > on my heart."

There was nothing to do now, however, but to put him back in the pen. As he had grown, the porker had developed a very ugly expression of countenance, and as I looked at him now, with his tushes protruding in a most villainous way, I confess it was no cheerful sight for a timid man. However, I got a big stick, and went at him with loud 'shoos' and extravagant flourshings of my weapon. He eyed me quietly out of his vicious little optics, and whisked his tail defiantly. I soon found there was no driving him back to the pen. He dodged me in the most exasperating manner. He doubled and twisted in a way to set at naught all my calculations. I was no match for him. Jones came out while I was exercising the porker, and laughed at me over the fence.

'You don't go at it the right way, Dobb,' said he.

'Perhaps you'd like to try it yourself Mr. Jones,' I said with some dignity and a very red face.

'Take him by the tail,' said Jones, calmly, in reply. 'Get his nose aimed toward the pen, and then pull his tail. The more you pull one way the more he'll pull the other, and he'll be in the pen, before you know it.'

Susan, who was standing on the back steps looking at me, laughed so heartily at this, that I felt quite good humored again, and asked Jones to come over and give us the benefit of his superior wisdom. After a little banter, and the handing of a cluster of Isabellas to Susan, he climbed the fence.

'Now, Dobb,' said Jones, 'we'll form a line—you and I, and Mrs. Dobb and the servant girl.'

'I beg to be excused, Mr. Jones,' laughed Susan, with a timid glance at the porker.

'My dear madam,' said Jones gallantly, 'there's no danger at all. I am quite in earnest, I assure you. It is a pig's nature to yield to overwhelming numbers. We have only to form a line and close down upon him in a sort of crescent, and he will give up the struggle at once, as you will see.'

So it was undertaken. Peter stood by the fence, eyeing us with a deep expression of interest. We moved down upon him; he wheeled about, snorted, and then made a dive at us, or rather at me, and, whish! he went right between my legs, so that I sprawled out on the ground most ungracefully. Susan and the servant girl ran screaming into the house, and Jones was over the fence in no time.

The result of it was, we sent for Peter. It had now grown somewhat dark, but Peter made short work of the job. He got a rope, and took in his other hand the big stick I had been flourishing; then he went up to porker, fetched him one tremendous blow over the proboscis, and while poor piggy was staggering and seeing a million of stars, slipped the rope over one of his hind legs, and had him into the pen in a trice.

'Peter,' said I after that, 'you may come around to-morrow; if you are not engaged, and gather what is left of the vegetables.'

He did so. There was a good deal left after all. Porker's havoc was greater in apearance than in reality. Peter stored the cellar with abundance—among other things, with a nice lot of superior beans in the soft pods, which lay there till they got very mouldy, and were fit for nothing but swill

I remember, as if it were but yesterday, the morning those beans were fed to our pig. I was going out of town to be gone three days, on business of importance. I saw a supply of the mouldy beans fed to the porker, and then I departed. To say that I did not think of my pig while I was away, would be to state an untruth. I did think of him. Though lost to sight he was to memory dear.

I am seldom away from home, and consequently I am missed when I am away—and my welcome on my reurn is wont to be of the most affectionate description. But on this occasion, greatly to my surprise, Susan was not in the front hall to greet me. I waded through the children in the back part of the house, where Susan was. I fancied she looked at me with a half frightened air, but I took her fondly to my arms, and was about imprinting a rapturous kiss on her lips when my eye chanced to go out of the window, and I suspended the kiss midway of delivery. The door of the pig pen stood wide open, and there was a peculiar aspect of desolation about it.

'Where's our porker?' I asked, postponing the kiss pro tempore.'

'Our porker,' said Mrs. Dobb, gravely, 'is in his grave.'

'Good heavens!' I cried, 'dead!' and immediately went out to look at his deserted abode.

I was quite calm by dinner time, and informed Susan that I was ready to hear the particulars of the sad event.

'Well, James,' she commenced, 'you know you directed those beans to be fed to him.'

'Oh, that's it! I thought it would be laid at my door in some manner, notwithstanding the little circumstance that I was over two hundred miles away. Well, proceed.'

'So the girls gave him beans for dinner, and beans for supper, and the next morning she went out with some more, and then I heard her scream, I went out and there he was—swelled up—oh, dreadfully—twice as large as life, dear—and lying on his side and kicking his legs faintly. Neighbor—Jones looked over the fence and asked what the matter was—'

'With a bunch of Isabellas, doubtless.'

'And when we told him, he came over to see the pig, and said phoo! he wasn't dead, that he knew what was the matter with the pig; bloated stomach; he could cure him. Have you any brandy?' I told him we had, and came into the house and got a bottle.'

'What! that's S. O. P. brandy?'

'Yes, dear, of course.'

'Good gracious! And you gave that fifteen dollar brandy to that miserable two dollar pig.'

'Yes, dear, but it did no good. Then neighbor Jones bled him—'

'The savage!'

'And that did no good, either. So at last we gave it up, and neighbor Jones had his man bury it in the garden.'

'Mrs. Dobbs,' I asked, 'do you mean to tell me that you have buried the dead hog in our garden?'

'No, dear, in Mr. Jones' garden.'

A sudden idea crossed my mind.

'Well, upon my word, it seems we are not even to have the benefit of the carcass as a fertilizer on the soil. This caps the climax.'

'What do you mean, James.'

'Why, Susan, don't you know that dead animals enrich the soil where they are buried, in decomposing and supplying ammonia and phosphoric acid, and things that makes the vegetables grow big.'

'James, how can you talk such stuff?'

'Stuff! not a bit of it. Jones knows all about it. That the way he fertilizes his garden. He's got a dead dog and three cats buried at the foot of his grape-vines—which accounts for the superiority of the Isabellas, me dear.'

'Mr. Dudd, if you don't stop, I shall leave the table.'

So I stopped, like a dutiful husband. But Susay hasn't eaten a grape from Jones' garden since.

We have had the pig-pen cleaned up nicely for the children, and they use it for a play-house. It makes a very good play-house.

The Iron Rail.

A spicy sketch descriptive of a trip over the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe Railroad and of the beauties, scenery and pleasure resorts of the Rocky Mountains, by "Nym Crinkle," the musical and dramatic critic of the New York World, sent free on application, together with the San Juan guide, maps and time table of this new and popular route from Kansas City and Atchison to Pueblo, Denver and all points in Colordo, New Mexico, Arizona and the San Juan Mines. Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St, Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables, routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

FROST WORK.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A little one sought me this morning,
Her blue eyes shining bright,
While over her cheek the dimples
Were playing in changeful light.

"Come up to my room," she whispered;
"A curious thing is there!
A painter has worked through the night hours
In the cold and shivering air.

He has made a beautiful castle,
Far up on a mountain high;
And a forest of stately trees,
With boughs that reach to the sky.

They are all on my window, mother,
The strange and beautiful things,
And the morning sun above them
A rainbow beauty flings!"

I went with the little prattler
The [illegible]
And glorious in the sunlight
Was the delicate tracery.

For all night long the artist
Had silently wrought away,
And only put up his pencil
At the coming in of day;

Softly and stealthily toiling,
By the holy light of the stars,
And the light that streams like a glory
From the far-off crystal bars.

He had gone, as he came, in silence,
But his work was left behind;
Like the fairies that send their favors
By night to the good and kind.

How often the silent worker
In the busy mart of time
Weaves a life of angel beauty,
Then soars to another clime.

And when lip and brow have faded
In the dust and gloom of death,
Their memories come to the living,
Evangels of love and faith.

Oh! teach me, beautiful frost work,
Another lesson in life—
The web that is woven by night-time
At morning with gems may be rife.

STARVED ON THE PLAINS.

The Memorable Donner-Reed Expedition of 1846—Snowbound in the Sierras—Forty Emigrants Dying of Hunger.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle.]

Probably no event of a similar character ever more stirred the feelings of the earlier settlers of the West, and particularly those living in Illinois, than did the tragic ending of the Reed and Donner expedition to California in 1846. The originators of this expedition were James F. Reed and George and Jacob Donner, kind and open-hearted men, yet of bold and energetic dispositions. They had come with their families into Illinois only a short time after its admittance into the Union, and finally settled in Sangamon county, not far from Springfield. In 1845 vague reports would occasionally reach that vicinity of the richness of soil and healthfulness of the climate of the far West, and especially of the land known as California, and these began to create a restless spirit among the settlers. Reed and the Donners called meetings of their neighbors, and induced many to join the proposed expedition, which finally left Springfield on the morning of April 14, 1846. The party numbered about forty persons, two-thirds of whom were women and children.

At Independence, Mo., the final preparations for crossing the plains were to be made. They were joined there by parties from Illinois, Iowa, Tennessee, Missouri, and Ohio, swelling the original number to nearly 100 persons. As all know, it was necessary at that period for persons crossing the plains to travel in large bodies, as the Indians were very hostile. Again, it was never safe to set forth on such a journey until the grass was of sufficient growth to afford sustenance for the stock. Everything being in readiness, extra wagons filled with provisions, etc., the company departed from Independence early on the morning of May 11, 1846, upon their long and weary journey.

All went well until they arrived at a point a few miles above the mouth of the Big Blue river, the spot where Manhattan, Kan., now stands. The party continued its journey up the Platte river valley, passing Fort Laramie, and at last reached Fort Bridger without serious mishap. So far the trip had occupied the entire summer, and the month of September was well advanced.

At Fort Bridger the expedition tarried four days to rest man and beast. It was here that they met with an act of treachery which undoubtedly led to their horrible fate. A prominent guide of that period, one Hastings, had discovered a more direct route to California, known as Hastings' cut off. It passed through Weber's canon to the south end of Salt Lake, about where Salt Lake City now stands, and was 300 or 400 miles shorter than the old route. But it was fraught with so many difficulties and dangers that it was safer to travel by the northwestern trail. It was the intention of the Reed and Donner party to take the old route: but one Vasquez, who was in command of the fort, and who was in some manner connected with the Hastings cut off, urged Reed and his party to take the new route, telling them that it was much safer, and that they would reach their destination many weeks earlier. Reed and his friends agreed upon the Hastings route, and started once more upon their journey.

Reaching the present site of Salt Lake City, the first great obstacle presented itself. There was no road at all, the country being one dense mass of forest and underbrush. There was no other course but to literally cut and hew their way through to the outlet of Salt Lake, now termed the river Jordan. This stupendous task was the indirect cause of several deaths in the party, and brought about much bad blood among its members, the malcontents charging Reed with the entire blame of the prevailing state of affairs, as he had been rather urgent in having the party take the Hastings route. The dissatisfied ones at last openly declared that Reed or they should leave the company, or bloodshed would follow. So it proved; in an altercation with Reed soon after, the ringleader of the grumblers, one Patrick Breen, who had come from Iowa, struck him fiercely over the head with the butt end of a loaded ox gad, cutting him severely. He was about to repeat the blow when Reed's wife, who was a witness of the affair, sprang in between the two men, to prevent further trouble. In his madness Breen struck the woman to the ground with the whip handle. This made Reed almost insane, and in a moment he had cut his opponent in two with a butcher knife which he carried, then, drawing a brace of large revolvers, dared any of the dead man's friends to interfere. By strenuous efforts his friends prevented further butchery, and the affair for the time was ended. This tragedy cast a gloom over the entire party.

Two or three days' travel from the scene of the disturbance brought them to the springs where they were to provide water and grass for crossing what was known as Hastings desert, an alkaline region destitute of water or vegetation. The treacherous Vasquez had informed them that it was less than fifty miles wide, while it proved, in fact, more than eighty. It was understood that they must travel day and night, only stopping to feed and water the cattle. When about two-thirds of the way across the stock manifested signs of exhaustion, and the company directed Mr. Reed to go forward until he found water, and report. He did so, reaching it in about twenty miles, and was on his way back to camp when he met his teamsters, about 11 o'clock at night, driving the cattle, having left their wagons. Soon after leaving his teamsters one of their horses sank down in the road, and while they were endeavoring to raise it, the cattle—nine yoke of oxen—scented the water and made for it. They were never found; and there was Reed and his family, with all their supplies, out on a desert hundreds of miles from any human habitation, and the winter very nearly at hand. The other members of the expedition drove their teams much further, and some succeeded in reaching water. Reed not receiving any information, and their supply of water being nearly gone. Reed started with his family on foot, carrying the youngest child in his arms. In the course of the night the children became exhausted; but a cold hurricane commenced blowing, and they were forced to move on, although the sufferings of the children were intense. Near daylight, to their great joy, one of Jacob Donner's wagons was reached, which proved to contain the latter's family. Donner kindly conveyed the unfortunate family to where the others were camped, where they remained a week trying to find Reed's cattle; but the search was fruitless. He then divided his provisions, borrowed a yoke of oxen, and, leaving his seven wagons in the desert, moved on with the others.

Some days further on it was found that the provisions were running short. Reed proposed that, if two men would go forward to Capt. Sutter's in California, he would write him (Sutter) a letter, asking for provisions and animals to assist the party to its destination. None was eager to undertake a journey fraught with so many dangers, but finally two men consented to go. These two were Wm. McCutcheon, who had joined the train from Missouri, and a Mr. Stanton, of Chicago, a man of the most daring bravery and whose nobleness of character cost him his life. Their progress was slow, and week after week elapsed without any tidings from them. Affairs were now becoming very desperate in the camp; the food was well-nigh exhausted. The expedition was camped in the mountains, and it was impossible to proceed further at that season of the year on account of the heavy snows. Here the party would have to remain until spring. It was finally agreed that Reed should go forward to ascertain what had become of Stanton and McCutcheon, and hurry up supplies. So, leaving his wife and five children in care of friends, he started out on horseback. The Donner brothers were camped a mile or two in advance of the main body, and with them was a man by the name of Walter Herron, who, when Reed reached them, volunteered to go with him, which Reed agreed to. Having but one horse they rode in turns. In the course of a week their provisions gave out, and they traveled for days without food, except wild geese and other game, which they were obliged to devour raw. When crossing the Sierra Nevada mountains, Herron became so desperate as to propose the killing of the horse. Reed, knowing that they would never be able to cross the mountains alive without the aid of this animal, vowed he would put an end to his own life rather than perish of hunger and cold among the mountains. That afternoon Herron became delirious for want of food, and his case looked hopeless, when, to Reed's great joy, he found a handful of beans in the hollow of a log, and, although almost starved himself, gave them to his companion. The following day they came upon some abandoned wagons, which they ransacked, but failed to find any food. Taking the tar-bucket from one of the wagons, and scraping the tar from the bottom, Mr. Reed found a streak of rancid tallow, which he made known to Herron, who at once swallowed a large piece without giving it a smell. He swallowed a second piece and wanted more, which Reed refused to give him, having himself eaten some which made him deathly sick. Soon afterward they descended into Bear River valley, where they found a party of emigrants, who relieved their sufferings. They here found Stanton and the two Indians sent by Capt. Sutter to aid in carrying the provisions which he had kindly let Stanton have. Reed was so terribly emaciated that the others did not recognize him until they had conversed together for some minutes.

The next morning, Oct. 23, 1846, both parties continued their journeys. Mr. Reed went on to Capt. Sutter's, told his story of the terrible condition of the expedition, and Sutter, ever ready to extend a helping hand to the suffering, supplied him with an abundance of provisions and thirty horses and mules to convey the same to the emigrants. Reed here found McCutcheon, who had been prevented from joining Stanton on account of sickness. With the aid of two Indians, Reed and McCutcheon started to return to their friends. Weeks and weeks were spent in the attempt to recross the mountains, but every plan proved fruitless. The snow was so deep that men and horses sunk out of sight in it. To Reed, who had so many lives at stake, the failure was terrible.

Of the suffering of those who had been caught in the mountains no better description can be had than that furnished in a diary, the writer of which is unknown. It came into possession of Capt. George McKinstry, who was stationed at Fort Sacramento in 1847.

TRUCKEE'S LAKE, Nov. 20, 1846.

Came to this place the 31st of last month; went into the pass; the snow so deep we were unable to find the road, and turned back to the shanty on Truckee lake. Stanton came up one day after we arrived here. We again took our teams and wagons, and made another unsuccessful attempt to cross the mountains, as snow fell all the time. We now have killed most of our cattle, having to remain here until next spring, and live on lean meat without bread or salt. It snowed during the space of eight days after our arrival, with little intermission, though now clear and pleasant, freezing at night; the snow nearly all gone from the valleys.

Nov. 29—Still snowing; now about three feet deep; wind west; killed my last oxen to-day; wood hard to get.

Nov. 30—Snowing fast, and seems likely to continue for days; no living thing, without wings, can get about.

Dec. 1—Still snowing; snow about six and a half feet deep; very difficult to get wood, and we are completely housed up; our cattle are all killed but two or three, and these, with the horses and mules, all lost in the snow; no hopes of finding them alive.

Dec. 9—Commenced snowing about 11 o'clock; took in Spitzer yesterday, who is so weak that he cannot rise without help, caused by starvation; some have a scant supply of beef; Stanton trying to get some for himself and Indians; not likely to get much.

Dec. 14—Snows faster than any previous day; Stanton and Graves, with others, making preparation to cross the mountains on snow shoes; snow eight feet on a level.

Dec. 17—Pleasant; Wm. Murphy returned from the mountain party last night; Bayless Williams died night before last.

Dec. 21—Milton arrived from Donner's last night; sad news, Jacob Donner, Samuel Shoemaker, Rhinehardt, and Smith are dead; the most of them in a low condition; snowed all night, with a strong southwest wind.

Dec. 25—Began to snow yesterday; snowed all night, and snows yet; extremely hard to find wood; offered our prayers to God this (Christmas) morning; the prospect is appalling, but we trust in Him.

Jan. 1, 1847—We pray the God of Mercy to deliver us from our present calamity, if it be His holy will. Commenced snowing last night; provisions scant; dug up a hide from under the snow yesterday, but have not commenced on it yet.

Jan. 4—Fine morning; looks like spring; Mrs. Reed, Milton Elliott, and Eliza Williams started a short time ago with the hope of crossing the mountains; left the children here; it was hard for Mrs. Reed to part with them.

Jan. 6—Eliza Williams came back from the mountains yesterday evening, not able to proceed; the others kept ahead.

Jan. 8—Very cold this morning; Mrs. Reed came back, not being able to find their way over the mountains; they have nothing but hides to live on.

Jan. 13.—Snowing fast; snow higher than the shanty; it must be 13 feet deep; cannot get wood this morning; it is a dreadful sight for us to look upon.

Jan. 15—Clear day again; Mrs. Murphy blind, and Lathrop not able to get wood; has but one ax between him and Kiesburg; it looks like another storm; expect to hear from Sutter's soon.

Jan. 17—Lathrop became crazy last night; provisions scarce; hides our main subsistence; may the Almighty send us help.

Jan. 21—Fine morning; the women do not like hides, but must either eat them or die.

Jan. 22—Commenced snowing yesterday, and still continues; one of Stanton's Indians died three days ago; food growing scarcer; don't have fire enough to cook our hides.

Feb. 5—Snowed hard until 12 o'clock last night; many uneasy for fear we shall all perish with hunger; we have but little meat left, and three hides; Mrs. Reed has but one hide, and that is on the Graves house; Milton lives there, and will likely keep that; two children died last night.

Feb. 8—Fine, clear morning; Spitzer died last night; we will bury him in the snow; Mrs. Eddy died on the night of the 7th.

Feb. 9.—Mr. Pike's child died last night; Milton is at Murphy's, not able to get out of bed; Mrs. Eddy and child were buried to-day; wind southeast.

Feb. 10—Beautiful morning; thawing in the sun; Milton Elliot died last night at Murphy's shanty; Mrs. Reed went there to see after his effects; John Denton trying to borrow meat for the Graveses, but failed; they have nothing but hides; all are entirely out of meat, but we still have a little; our hides are nearly gone; God's help, spring will soon smile upon us.

Feb. 15—Morning cloudy until 9 o'clock, then cleared off warm. Mrs. Murphy refused to give Mrs. Reed any hides; put Sutter's pack hides on her shanty, and would not let her have them.

Feb. 19—Froze hard last night. Seven men arrived yesterday from California with provisions, but left the greater part on the way. Some of the men have gone to Donner's camp, and will start back on Monday.

Feb. 22—The Californians started this morning, accompanied by some of our party, who were in a very weak condition. Mrs. Kiesburg started with them, and left Kiesburg here unable to go. Buried Pike's child this morning in the snow; it died two days ago.

Feb. 23—Froze hard last night. To-day pleasant and thawy, and has the appearance of spring, all but the deep snow. Shot a dog to-day and dressed his flesh.

Feb. 25—To-day Mrs. Murphy says the wolves are about to dig up the dead bodies around her shanty, and the nights are too cold to watch them, but we can hear them howl.

Feb. 26—Hungry times in camp; plenty of hides, but the folks won't eat them; our little party eat them with tolerably good appetite, thanks be to the Almighty God. Mrs. Murphy said here yesterday that she thought she would commence on Milton and eat him. I don't think she has done so yet. It is distressing. The Donners told the California folks four days ago that they would commence on the dead people if they did not find their cattle, then ten or twelve feet under snow, and did not know the spot or anywhere near it; they have done it ere this.

Feb. 28—One solitary Indian passed by to-day; had a heavy pack on his back; gave me five or six roots resembling onions in shape; tasted like sweet potato, but full of tough little fibers.

Feb. 29—Ten men arrived this morning from Bear valley with provisions; we all leave in two or three days, and cache our goods here; they say the snow will remain until June.

Thus ends the journal. Capt. McKinstry, who forwarded it to Springfield, as before stated, furnished the conclusion of the affair in his brief letter:

The above-mentioned men started for the valley with seventeen of the sufferers. They traveled fifteen miles and a severe snow-storm came on. They left fourteen of the emigrants, including the writer of the above journal and his family. Lieut. Woodworth was immediately sent to the assistance of the others, but before he reached them they had eaten three of their number, who had died from hunger and fatigue. Woodworth brought in the remainder. The rest of the unfortunate party reached Sutter's Fort in April, 1847.

The emigrants thus caught in the mountains died, one by one, until about forty of their number were literally starved to death, among them being the two Donner brothers and their wives, together with seven of their children. The camp where the Donners died is marked by a small body of water among the mountains, now known as Lake Donner, in the western part of the State of Nevada.

Demand for American War Material.

The arms and ammunition industries in Birmingham, England, are reported dull—a circumstance explained by America's activity in this direction. Moreover, American machinery has been largely adopted on the continent; notably in Russia, where it is asserted that 3,000,000 rifles have been produced by machinery bought from the Colt Rifle Company five years ago by Gen. Gorloff, military attache at Washington, and an American arms company is reported to have sold 100,000 pistols to Russia in the past year. Gen. Gorloff at the same time perfected in America what is known now as the Russian cartridge. American firms have also been doing a very large arms trade with Turkey and Egypt, but there is stated to have lately been a lull in these transactions on account of a stoppage of remittances from Turkey; not because she hasn't paid, but because the makers have overdrawn their accounts with the Turks.

VANDERBILT'S MILLIONS.

The Will of the Late Railway Magnate—The Eldest Son Gets the Lion's Share—Prospective Legal Squabble Over the Great Estate.

The will of the late Commodore Vanderbilt has been published. It will occasion a very general feeling of surprise that, notwithstanding his fortune amounted to over sixty millions of dollars, his wife receives by the will, as originally drawn, $500,000, together with the family mansion and all its appointments, to which he adds in a codicil 2,000 shares of railway stock, equivalent to $200,000 more. This peculiar disposition of his property, however, is in accordance with a marriage settlement made in due form before marriage with his second wife, by which she agreed not to claim her lawful interest, the compact being made in view of his extreme age at the time of the marriage, the Commodore being then over 70, and of the additional fact that she had nothing to do with the accumulation of his fortune. To five of his living daughters he bequeaths $2,500,000; to the sixth, the interest upon $400,000 in United States 10-40s, the principal to go to her heirs; to the seventh, the interest on $300,000 of the same class of bonds; and to the eighth, the interest upon $500,000—the total sum to the daughters or their heirs, two or three of them being dead, being $3,700,000. To his son, Cornelius J., who borrowed so lavishly of Horace Greeley and never repaid it, and who has been considered the black sheep of the family, he leaves only the interest on $200,000 of 10-40 bonds, which is amply sufficient under the circumstances. Then follows a long list of smaller bequests, which are pretty liberal, especially in the case of grandsons by favorite children. This brings us to his favorite son, William H. Vanderbilt, who has had the responsible charge of his business for many years. In the will, as originally written, he left to him about $50,000,000, but, in a very inconsiderate and heartless manner, he appends a codicil which takes away $11,500,000 of this amount and bestows it upon William H.'s four children. Such unfatherly conduct as this in reducing his favorite son to about $40,000,000, especially when that son has but $10,000,000 in his own fortune, and leaving him to struggle along with the vicissitudes of this rough and inhospitable world, especially in these trying times, is a sad comment upon the want of charity which has always characterized the Commodore.

From the New York papers we learn that already there is talk of a contest over the will. One of the legatees is reported to have said that relatives outside of William H. Vanderbilt's family would never let it stand as it is in peace, unless William H. should avoid all cause of dispute by giving his less fortunate coclaimants a liberal share in the immense wealth left by the Commodore, of which, under the will, he controls the great bulk. The fight would be made by or for the Commodore's daughters and his son Cornelius Jeremiah, whose legacies were mere pittances compared with the immense sums bequeathed to William H. Vanderbilt and his sons. The discrepancy between the two or three score of millions left to William H. and the comparative trifle of a few thousands given in trust to his brother, Cornelius Jeremiah, would, a legatee said, probably be the first objective point in the attack on the will, and the point made would likely be that Cornelius Jeremiah was epileptic, and unable to care for himself, and that, consequently, more adequate provision should have been made for his support; and, even if the attempt to break the will failed, probably it would be kept in the courts for years, pulled to and fro by lawyers, and an injunction might be served on William H. Vanderbilt to prevent him from acting as President of the New York Central Railroad. At all events, the will would not be received submissively by some of the relatives unless the principal legatees smoothed it over by making a more equitable division. The ground of objection to the will has not yet been explained, but undue influence is hinted at. It is understood that the widow is entirely contented, or at least, for reasons satisfactory to her, will not attempt to enforce her common-law right of dower, which it is claimed by some lawyers she could do, in spite of the ante-nuptial agreement not to do so alleged in the will.

Texan Frontier Life.

Six men start to go from Fort Griffin to San Antonio. Two of them own the wagon. The other four are passengers. A day's journey from Fort Concho the party encamp. Two of the passengers persuade the owners of the team to go out hunting with them, and they go, leaving the other two men in charge of the camp. The two passengers who went hunting come back without the owners of the wagon, and tell the camp-watchers that they have killed the owners in order to have the wagon to themselves. The two innocent men take their choice of being killed on the spot or keeping quiet and sharing the proceeds. They acquiesce in the latter alternative, and the four drive on to Concho. Here one of the innocent men interviews the Sheriff, and the two murderers, snuffing danger in the air, hastily gear up and rapidly drive off. The Sheriff summons a posse and follows in pursuit. The Sheriff's force overtakes the wagon at Kickapoo Springs, and captures one of the two murderers before he can use his arms. The other runs to a thicket of hackberry bushes, where he lies down flat on the ground and opens fire upon the Sheriff and his posse. The Sheriff and his men fire upon the hackberry grove from the open prairie, and fight the ruffian in this way from 10 in the morning until 3 in the afternoon. One of the Sheriff's party is shot, and he wildly turns upon the prisoner, shoots and kills him in his tracks, and then lies down and dies. The man in the hackberry grove finally ceases firing, and then the Sheriff and several wounded men move upon the thicket. They find the murderer pierced by several balls, and dead.

SPANK, SPANK, SPANK.

Spank, spank, spank,
From morning till night, from early daylight,
With the tears in her eyes,
And with numerous sighs,
A mother was wielding a weapon of might—
A slipper, all woven with cardinal red,
Which she flourished triumphantly over her head,
Then brought it in vengeance upon the bare flank
Of the child on her knee.
Spank, spank, spank.
"It hurts," bellowed he,
"Glad on it," quoth she.
Spank, spank, spank.

Spank, spank, spank.
There's a maiden who now is preparing to wed.
But do you suppose
That the fair creature knows—
That the thought has once ever entered her head—
That ere long she'll be playing a mother's sad part,
With her precious young darling clasped close to her heart,
And a slipper careering above his bare flank—
That soon she will learn
To spank, spank, spank;
And though bellow do he,
She will right merrilee
Spank, spank, spank?

Pith and Point.

THE question agitating fashionable circles is: "Do those gentlemen in ulsters wear trousers?"

WHY is a man who expects a kiss and is refused like a shipwrecked fisherman? Because he has lost his smack.

A THIEF who stole half a dozen sheets from a clothes-line in Saco pinned a paper on the line and wrote upon it, "I believe I have got them all!"

THE Russians have over 3,000 torpedoes in the Black sea, and it is now as dangerous a place as the committee-room of a woman's right's convention.

AND now they say that Russia is afraid to go to war. Young ladies who danced with the Grand Duke when he was in this country don't believe a word of it.

How DEAR to my heart are the scenes of my childhood
When fond recollections recall them to view—
The shingle that mother had carved out of hard wood,
To wallop my —— trousers, until it was blue.
The old oaken shingle, the iron-bound shingle,
The moss-covered shingle that hung on the wall.

MR. LONGFELLOW once received a letter requesting him to compose an acrostic, the first letters of which should spell "My sweet girl." The applicant added, "Write as if it were some beautiful girl with whom you were in love—just as if it were for yourself." At the foot of the letter were these words: "Send bill."

A PATERSON Christian refused an opportunity while out sleigh-riding to put his arm around another man's wife, "for fear that the Lord would paralyze the offending member." In Brooklyn such cases of paralysis never occur, and some suppose it is because there are so many provocations that the Lord doesn't know where to begin.

THE Buffalo Express takes the liberty of indulging in a profound thought now and then. It comments thus: About this time farmers are sitting in the evenings by their comforting firesides, with a pitcher of cider, plate of apples and pan of nuts before them. In the interim, between their eating and drinking they look solemnly upward and exclaim: "What awful hard times!"

SAYS the Norwich Bulletin: "Leap year is over. No more invitations out to balls and parties. No more having to say, 'I will always love you like a sister, but I cannot be more to you.' No more having slippers and pen-wipers sent to you. No more girls feeling like going out West. No more men going out into the woods to hide. Everything calm and peaceful for another four years."

The Alabama Indemnity.

The London Times contains a long article upon the settlement of the Alabama claims, with which upon the whole it professes to be satisfied. It will be remembered that the arbitrators originally awarded the United States $15,500,000, as a settlement of these claims, and that the commissioners to make the awards have distributed about $10,000,000, leaving a surplus of $5,500,000, upon which there is no individual claim that is allowable. At first it would appear that there is a discrepancy, and that Great Britain had paid $5,500,000 more than is necessary to satisfy the claims. The Times, however, points out to its readers the very natural distinction that, while the arbitrators considered the responsibility of Great Britain with reference to all the cruisers which had committed depredations and the direct destruction of property occasioned by them, the commissioners have had to decide how far individuals were damaged, and to admit claims only so far as they could be substantiated. After the lapse of years, it has been difficult sometimes to trace the various persons interested in the ownership of vessels. Where the vessel was fully insured, the owners received their compensation and the underwriters also received theirs, as they insured at war risks—in fact, insured themselves for high premiums against the very losses which occurred. Thus, although the commissioners may not succeed in distributing the whole of the award, it was just for the arbitrators to award the amount they did, since in a certain manner the whole people of the United States were losers.—Chicago Tribune.

Gen. Crook's Campaign.

Gen. Crook, who has just given up his Indian campaign again and returned to Fort Fetterman, says that it was too cold out there, and the Indians were too far off. On Christmas, the mercury froze in the bulb. The Indians are thought to be scattering. Crazy Horse is on the Little Missouri. The campaign has kept the Indians on the move in dead winter, and Gen. Crook thinks the hostiles will not stand another campaign. The friendly Indians, with a small column of troops, will finish matters.

Come Now and Let Us Reason Together.

Why do people so frequently say to Dr. Pierce, "I suppose your Golden Medical Discovery cures everything?" Because it has been the practice of knavish physicians to manufacture worthless nostrums and attempt to dupe the ignorant and credulous by recommending them to cure every form of disease. To such an extent has this been practiced that it is no wonder that many have acquired prejudices against all advertised remedies. But Dr. Pierce does not advertise his standard preparations as "cure-alls," does not claim that they will perform miracles, but simply publishes the fact that they have been developed as specifics for certain forms of disease for which he recommends them, after having tested their efficacy in many hundred cases with the most gratifying success. It is a fact known to every well-informed physician that many single remedies possess several different properties. Quinine, for instance, has a tonic quality, which suggests its use in cases of debility; an anti-periodic, by which it is efficacious in ague; and a febrifuge property, which renders it efficacious in cases of fever. The result of its administration will also vary with the quantity given and the circumstances under which it is employed. So, likewise, the Golden Medical Discovery possesses both pectoral and alterative, or blood-cleansing properties of the highest order. By reason of these two prominent properties it cures two classes of diseases. First, those of the respiratory organs, as throat, bronchial and lung affections, chronic coughs and asthma, and second, diseases of the blood and glandular system, in which affections all skillful physicians employ alteratives, as in cases of blotches, eruptions, ulcers, swellings, tumors, abscesses and in torpor of the liver or "biliousness." While its use is, by its combination of properties, suggested in cases of pulmonary consumption, yet you need not take it expecting it will cure you if your lungs are half consumed, nor because it is recommended as a blood medicine would its proprietor advise you to take it expecting it to cure cancer. It will not perform miracles, but it will cure many grave forms of disease.

WE were pleased to see, not long since, in one of our exchanges, some pretty severe remarks addressed to several persons who, during an interesting lecture by Rev. Jno. S. C. Abbott, kept a continuous coughing, which prevented many from hearing. People who cannot refrain from coughing had better stay away from such places, or else take a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment with them.

THERE can be no mistake about it, "Matchless" plug tobacco takes the lead. Old fine-cut chewers say it gives better satisfaction and is cheaper than fine cut. You cannot be imposed upon, as each plug has the words, "Matchless P. T. Co." on a wooden tag. Try it once and you will always chew it. Manufactured by the Pioneer Tobacco Company, New York.

GOOD ADVICE.—If there is any of our readers who doubt the wonderful curative effects of Durang's Rheumatic Remedy, let them write to any prominent person in Washington city, where it is manufactured, and they will learn that it will do even more than is claimed for it. Sold by all retail druggists, and at wholesale in all large cities. Price, $1.00.

THE importance of giving Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders to horses that have been out in the cold rain, stood in cold wind, or drank too much cold water, cannot be over-estimated; no man should be without them who owns a good horse.

SANFORD'S RADICAL CURE For CATARRH

INSTANTLY relieves and permanently cures this loathsome disease in all its varying stages. It possesses the soothing and healing properties of plants, herbs and barks in their essential form, free from every fibrous contamination, and in this respect differs from every other known remedy. In one short year it has found its way from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and wherever known has become the standard remedy for the treatment of Catarrh. The proprietors have been waited upon by gentlemen of national reputation who have been cured by this remedy, and who have, at considerable expense and personal trouble, spread the good news throughout the circles in which they move. When you hear a wealthy gentleman of intelligence and refinement say "I owe my life to Sanford's Radical Cure," you may feel assured that it is an article of great value, and worthy to be classed among the standard medical specifics of the day.

"The benefit I derive from its daily use is to me invaluable."
HENRY WELLS, OF WELLS, FARGO & CO.

"It has cured me after twelve years of uninterrupted suffering."
GEO. W. HOUGHTON, WALTHAM.

A BRAVE WOMAN.

An Incident of the Ashtabula Horror—A Farmer's Wife Who Would Not Desert Her Husband.

A Detroit correspondent of the New York Herald relates the adventures of Johnson B. Orburn and wife, who were on the ill-fated train that went down with the bridge at Ashtabula. They were on the way to Saginaw valley. Both are past 40, and Mr. Orburn is an Ohio farmer, who lately purchased a farm in Saginaw county. As the train pulled out from Ashtabula the farmer's wife began eating luncheon, and her husband was trying to read a newspaper by the light of the lamp.

He says he felt the first movement when the bridge gave way. He first imagined that one of the wheels under his car had become detached, as a corner of the car seemed to settle down a little. He dropped the paper and seized the back of the seat in front of him. Then the whole car seemed to lift up, and several women shrieked in alarm. There was no sensation of falling. On the contrary, both agree they thought the car was running up a steep hill. This would prove that the rear end of their car settled down first. From the time the bridge gave way till the cars struck the ice not more than ten seconds could have elapsed, and yet during that brief interval the husband threw one arm around his wife, she grasped the seat and asked what had happened, and he told her to secure a brace for her feet, and added: "We are off the track and running through the fields!" The rear end of their car struck first, smashing itself to kindling wood, the debris being thrown over the passengers in front. The farmer found himself on the floor, held down by a mass of wreck on his left leg, while his wife was thrown across him, with the wreck of two or three seats holding her against the side of the car. While thus held, and before either had spoken, one end of the car settled a little, and the wife was released.

"Mary, are you living?" asked the husband, being his first words after the fall. She replied that she was not even hurt, beyond a bruise or two, and by this time the shouting and confusion around them proved that the train was off the track, though neither one suspected that it was more than a tumble into a wayside ditch. It was wonderful how a woman could retain her presence of mind under such exciting circumstances, but Mrs. Orburn didn't even cry out after the shock. Scores of other passengers were shrieking in pain and fright as the cold waters flooded one end of the car and the flames began to eat away at the other.

The woman cleared herself of the broken seats just as the fire started, and she then ascertained that her husband was pinned fast to the floor by the wreck of matter on his leg, which was partially bent around one of the iron standards of a seat. She worked with all her might to set him free, but the raging flames were now only a few feet away, and the smoke and heat were becoming terrible.

"Mary, take hold of my foot; bend my leg toward you with all your might, and see if you can't break it!" called the husband, who thought he could easily free himself if the leg was released from its cramped position. The wife seized his foot, meaning to obey, but at that moment the car lurched over a little and her husband released himself. When they left the car her dress was on fire, showing that another minute would have enveloped both in the flames.

Both were able to walk to the hotel as soon as released, having escaped with only a few bruises. The heroic wife and mother was not only ready to obey her husband's orders, but she had a plan of her own.

"When I saw the flames just upon us," she said, "and while I was sure that my husband would be burned alive, I made up my mind to put one of the cushions over him, lie down on top of that, and hope that while I was being burned up help would come to him for our children's sake."

"I was afraid she wouldn't be strong enough to break my leg," added the husband, "and then it would be all up with me. I was going to have her get out, and then, rather than be burned alive, I was going to— Well, I had the big knife in my right-hand pocket, and my right arm was free to get it and use it!"

American Beef in England.

The importation of fresh meat from America, writes the Liverpool correspondent of the London Daily News, is rapidly becoming an important branch of trade, and it is expected that in a short time, when the arrangements of the various steamship lines between New York and Liverpool are completed, the shipments to the English markets will be so extensive as to cause a very sensible and welcome fall in the prices. Experience shows that the quality of American beef is in no way inferior to that of beef of home growth, and, as regards price, it can be sold at a profit to the importers at rates varying from 2d. to 3d. per pound (retail) below those charged for ordinary butchers' meat. With such advantages on its side as excellence of quality and cheapness of price, the American beef is fast making its way; at present the weekly supply which reaches Liverpool is about 600 tons. The greater portion of this is at once dispatched to London, where it is taken by the West-end clubs and other leading institutions. The remainder is sent to Birmingham—where the result has been a decrease of 2d. per pound in English beef—Leicester, Nottingham, Sheffield, and other towns.

Whys and Means.

Why do people write that they "accept with pleasure" an unpleasant invitation, when they really mean that they do so with reluctance?

Why do ladies bid their servants say that they are not at home, when they mean they are engaged or unwilling to see visitors?

Why do actors grumble that the drama is going to the dogs, when they mean that they themselves are not in favor with the public?

Why do men tell their wives that they will be detained by business, when they really mean to be detained by a club dinner?

Why do women bid their husbands escort them to Broadway, when they really mean to make them pay for a new bonnet?

Why do singers speak with diffidence of the powers of their voice, when they mean to swallow greedily all the compliments you give them?

Why do inviters often call their country house a "little place," when they mean to show you a palatial residence?

Why does your friend tell you "any toggery will do," when he means to sport a dress suit and white choker?

Why do china dealers name so preposterous a price, when they mean to jump at less than half if they be offered it?

Why do pianists complain that they are sadly out of practice when they are asked to play, while in reality they mean they want more pressing, and then willingly yield to it?

Proposed Admission of Utah.

Delegate Cannon, writes a Washington correspondent, is "confident of procuring favorable action before the end of the session on his bill admitting Utah to the Union as a State. It is now in the hands of the House Territorial Committee, where it has been since it was offered early last session. He thought it would have been considered by the House last session had it not been for the absorbing political matters before Congress during that period, and seems assured that with the subsidence of the Presidential trouble, which he thinks will take place before a great while, it will receive attention. Cannon says it is a well-understood fact that Utah contains a sufficient number of people to warrant Congress in admitting it into the Union. Inquiry develops the probability that the proposition to admit Utah will be strongly opposed in both houses. It is a scheme that gives promise of bringing the entire Mormon question into prominence, and it is the opinion of many members that this question will have to be settled one way or other by Congress before Utah can become a State."

Duels in Massachusetts.

The Boston Transcript says: "A duel on the Puritan soil of Massachusetts would not be an entirely unheard-of thing. In fact, the first affair of honor in American annals is one that took place in 1621 at Plymouth, between two serving-men, who were therefor sentenced by the stern and prompt moralists of our ancient heirarchy to be tied neck and heels together for 24 hours. The next famous duel, too, chronicled in America, was that on Boston Common (under the late lamented big elm), in 1728, when young Woodbridge killed young Phillips with his sword, to the great and painful scandal and excitement of the community. Dueling was not always under the quasi stigma now attaching to it. Gen. Washington approved of Gen. Greene's decision to accept a challenge, if the latter thought his honor would suffer from a refusal."

The Black Hills.

Extract from a letter from Green River, Wyoming: "Eleven miners came into Camp Brown, on the 6th, for supplies, from the head of Wood river, and all bring coarse gold with them. They report about thirty men now in the diggings working with rockers, making $10 per day and upward. One man by the name of Watson found a nugget worth $30. The party report no snow on the route and very little in the camp. They return immediately with about forty men, who join them from Lander City, in the Wind river valley, who feel jubilant over the new discovery, as they have been waiting for the purpose of going into that country early in the spring, but now leave with the Wood river party. Distance about eighty miles from Camp Brown."

Iron Cars.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune thinks that the moral of the Ashtabula accident is—iron cars. "Let the cars," he says, "be built entirely of iron, like many of the baggage and express cars now in use on the New York Central railroad. Let them be heated by steam from the engine, or by a furnace underneath the car, so arranged that by no means can fire get into the body of the car. Use less glass surface for windows. Many persons lost their lives by being pierced by the sharp-pointed fragments of glass left in the frames in which they are set. Have the doors open outward, that they may not be blocked and fastened by anything that might face against them. We have iron steamships and iron buildings, why not iron railroad cars?"

BROTHER MOODY severely condemns "the idea of allowing the prettiest girl to be kissed for 25 cents, and of having our daughters sell cigars to young men."

THE ESTEY ORGAN.

The Instrument, the Makers, and the Manufactory at Brattleboro', Vt.

THE INSTRUMENT.

Few people in the civilized world to-day, among those who are interested in music and the forms of musical expression, have not heard of the Estey Organ, and smaller still is the number of those who do not, after practical acquaintance with the superior merits of that noble instrument, cheerfully concede the proud claim of its makers, that

THE ESTEY ORGAN LEADS THE WORLD.

The foremost musicians of Europe and America hasten to join their testimony to that of professional and amateur organists and instrumentalists, of all degrees of proficiency and celebrity, and all with remarkable unanimity affirm that no reed organs, of whatever manufacture, native or foreign, can possibly compare with those from the house of Messrs. Estey & Co. in power, tone, workmanship and style. Such a position and reputation can only be gained legitimately. Mushroom manufacturers that grow up in a night and flaunt their wares in the face of the public, gaudy and impudently, may seem to flourish for a time; but their prosperity is a lie, as their pretensions are a cheat. The sure success that crowns honesty, industry, probity and thoroughness is slow of growth; but when it comes it is steadfast and honorable to the end. The Estey Organs have achieved this success gradually, through years of sturdy toil, patient experiment, tireless watchfulness and unvarying promptitude in additions and improvements.

Thirty years ago the primitive prototype of the present magnificent instrument was made. Place the two side by side and read the history of a generation of industry and invention. Thirty years ago only the wealthy could afford to possess musical instruments of any sort, and thousands of churches were destitute of the charm of instrumental music in their worship. To-day the humblest home may have its fireside organ, to lend sweet attraction to the home circle, and the feeblest church or Sabbath school a beautiful instrument, to give voice and earnestness to its pious praise. This happy change is due to the Estey Organ more than to any other one cause. The constant and undeviating aim of its makers has been to produce a perfect reed instrument that should be within the reach of the popular purse in price. Every mechanical appliance that human ingenuity could devise and human patience perfect has been brought to bear upon this end. Trustworthy experience from all quarters has lavished its ripest fruit unstintedly to promote this object. The materials used have been rigidly subjected to every possible test that could in any way conduce to their adaptability and durability. What is the result at the end of thirty years? The lowest priced pipe organs that are worth buying cost $1,500. Messrs. Estey & Co. furnish for from $200 to $300 a reed organ so admirably balanced in tone and power that two-thirds of the congregation in an ordinary small church would suppose it a pipe organ if it was concealed from view. A really good piano from a reliable maker cannot be bought for less than $400 to $500. An Estey Organ, suited to the capacity and requirements of any family, may be purchased for $150 or $200, and a thoroughly good one for $70. This is practical philanthropy, of a quality as refreshing as it is rare. This is something worth working and waiting for, and it is peculiarly gratifying to know that all concerned—maker, seller, buyer and performer—reap an equitable share of the benefits of a result so truly beneficent.

That which conserves the public welfare promotes private interest. Good wine needs no bush. Honesty pays best. Messrs. Estey & Co. have proved the truth of these aphorisms, and in an age of shams have demonstrated that solid merit is the true touchstone of success. Nine thousand organs were turned out there last year and sent to every quarter of the globe, in more than one instance supplanting entirely the instruments of European makers in the old world. These organs represented a business of over one million dollars!

THE POPULAR ESTEY ORGANS.
THEY LEAD THE WORLD.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

"Scientific men, inventors and manufacturers from all parts of the world have visited the Estey establishment and unanimously pronounce it unsurpassed in perfection of detail and comprehensive system. Recommendations, such as flood the country for every conceivable invention of money making and money spending man, are cheap enough. Many that sound and read well may be bought for a song. At the present time, therefore, it is in order to quote a few testimonials which the Estey Organs have called forth, that are a test of value and approval which cannot be gainsaid—the voices of the masters in music bearing witness to that fine truism, as old as human endeavor and human fruition, that only true merit achieves true success.

[From RICHARD WAGNER, the Composer, par Excellence.]

"The tone of the Estey Organ is very beautiful and noble, and gives me the greatest pleasure. My great friend, FRANZ LISZT, is also charmed and delighted with them."

[From MME. ESSIPOFF, the Wonderful Pianist.]

"I have often had the opportunity to hear and play on the Estey Organs in St. Petersburg and Warsaw and was perfectly charmed with their full, sympathetic tone. On no other organs can be produced, with such purity and precision, the choir-like sound in the lower registers so similar to a fine church organ."

[From HERR RUBENSTEIN, Director of the Imperial Conservatory and the Musical Society at Moscow.]

"It gives me great pleasure to give due praise to Messieurs J. Estey & Co. for their really splendid Organs. The tone of these instruments is full, noble and charming and has the advantage of pleasing and captivating the ear. To these artistic qualities must be added that they are of solid workmanship and of the most elegant finish, and I doubt not their having an extraordinary success in Russia."

[From CAMILLE DE SAINT SAENS, Composer, Pianist and Organist of the Madeleine Church, Paris.]

"I have played upon the Organs of Messrs. Estey & Co., and been charmed with their quality of tone, which comes very near that of a Pipe Organ, and the resources it gives to the player."

[From PAULINE LUCCA, the Celebrated Prima Donna.]

"I have heard the beautiful Cottage Organs of Messrs. Estey & Co., of Brattleboro', and was astonished at the full, noble and sweet tone of these instruments, which resemble so much the Pipe Organ—a quality which I have never found in any other American organ or harmonium."

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE, Feb. 9th, 1876.

[From OLE BULL, the Great Violin Virtuoso.]

"After having played and examined the Cottage Organs of J. Estey & Co., I can fully confirm that they are the best substitute for the Pipe Organs in smaller churches and in schools, and that the smaller ones are very appropriate for family use and should be highly recommended.

J. H. NEBELONG, Organist."

COPENHAGEN, Nov., 1875.

"After having used and heard the above Organs, in our late concerts, we fully concur in the above statement, and say in addition that the tone is very beautiful, round and effective.

"FRED. BULL, Director of Music. OLE BULL."

[From FRANZ ABT, the World Renowned Composer and Author of "When the Swallows Homeward Fly," etc.]

"The Estey Organs deserve the highest admiration, as well for their beautiful, sympathetic tone as for their easy, delicate touch and solid, elegant construction. I consider them unsurpassed by anything I have ever seen."

[From PROF. W. HOWARD BOANE, Jr., the Eminent Composer and Director, Cincinnati, O.]

"For purity and beauty of tone, for variety of combination, and durability of construction, I prefer the Estey Organ to any I have seen."

THE ESTEY ORGAN.

Every organ which leaves the Estey manufactory, from the little Cottage Gem, with its four octave manual and single set of forty-eight reeds, to the Double Bank Pedal Organ, with seven full sets of reeds and sixteen stops, bear the uniform stamp of entire faithfulness in manufacture. No need to puff such wares ad nauseum, with flaming advertisements like a quack medicine; no need to push their sales by cheapening the price. A simple statement of fact is their best recommendation. They are as perfect as human ingenuity, care and skill can make them, and are sold at the lowest price consistent with a fair profit. Whenever improvements are possible they are adopted at once, whether in workshop, machinery or instrument. Under such circumstances, it ceases to be a wonder that the sale of the Estey Organ is increasing with such rapidity, both at home and abroad; and that enlarged facilities for its production are already necessary, although the Estey establishment has been for years the largest reed organ manufactory in the world. Nine thousand organs were turned out last year. These organs represented a business of over one million dollars! Such figures are more eloquent in testimony of worth than the most flowery and skillfully worded sentences.

THE MAKERS.

The firm of J. Estey & Co. is made up of Mr. Jacob Estey, his son, Julius J. Estey, and his son-in-law, Levi K. Fuller. Mr. Estey, senior, is the veteran reed organ maker of America, if not of the world. He begun the business in Brattleboro', thirty years ago, in a single room, with six workmen, and has make his way constantly forward, in spite of more disasters and drawbacks than often attend such enterprises. This fact is due to the man himself. He has made himself, through force of honesty, energy, shrewdness and perseverance. Plodding on and on, smiling at disasters by fire and flood, planting his feet resolutely on all obstacles, with indomitable faith in himself and his work, he has reached a very proud place among his fellows, while still in the prime of a hale and vigorous manhood. His executive ability is great. He knows every detail of the vast business and watches its daily progress with a marvelous approach to omnipresence. But, however absorbed he may be in this direction, he has never neglected his highest duties and privileges as a citizen. Always foremost in everything conducive to the public welfare, actively interested in affairs of church, State and society, his influence has been wide and good and the cordial esteem he has earned so honorably waits impatiently for a fitting opportunity to do him honor in kind.

The younger members of the firm, who have been active partners for a decade of years, had been trained in the business under the tuition of their senior for some time previous, and the partnership only served to concentrate their energies. They are young men of sterling natural ability, and seem to have been particularly well fitted for the positions assigned them. Mr. Julius Estey is at the head of the counting-room and supervises the [illegible] intricacies of the immense business with a clear-headed faculty that might well be considered a synonym for uniform correctness. The counting-room of a manufactory is where its heart beats. Health there means strong and regular pulsation through all the veins and arteries of workshop and storehouse. Mr. Fuller is at the head of the mechanics of the concern. His native talent, stimulated by a thorough mechanical training, has been invaluable and indispensable in the long and uninterrupted series of experiments and inventions which, under his ready and intelligent guidance, have been combined in the complete whole known as the Estey Organ. Both these gentleman are, equally with their elder, in the van of every movement that tends to promote the public wealth and prosperity; as reliable, progressive, faithful and enthusiastic in all such matters as in their personal affairs. Character stamps these men as it does their manufactures. Positive merit is the underlying principle of their success.

THE MANUFACTORY.

The Estey Organ manufactory is well worth a visit to any interested in mechanical and art progress. The works are situated on an elevated plateau, overlooking a considerable portion of the village of Brattleboro'. They consist of eight main slate covered factories, which are forty feet apart, three stories high, one hundred feet long, and from thirty to thirty-eight feet wide. Near by is a gas house, which supplies not only the factories, but some portions of the village, with illuminating gas of excellent quality. A steam fire engine, named "J. Estey," is kept constantly ready for use and may be manned at a moment's notice by a drilled company of the workmen. A perfect system of speaking tubes and electric bells establishes instantaneous communication between the office and all parts of the premises. Over five hundred workmen are employed, and every care is taken to secure for them health, comfort and safety, as well as a perfect and economical working of the establishment. Many of the little rooms occupied by the tuners are made charmingly cozy with pictures and flowers, arranged to suit the taste of the occupants. The cheerful hum of machinery mingles with the chirping of thousands of reeds, and sends forth a not discordant song of industry which penetrates many of the pleasant homes of the workmen.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 25, 1877.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

MONDAY, January 22nd, 1877.

DEAR COURIER—The three greatest features of Washington life now are, the Presidential question, the weather and the receptions, and on awakening every morning, the first question asked, has relation to one of these three. The weather has predominated for several days past, as being susceptible of more varying conditions than even the Presidential question. Its downward tendency has been frequently commented upon with a strange regard for truth not often exhibited in this locality. A little incident happened at a reception the other day, not usually in the line of a professional reporter which give some idea of the weather. At the palatial mansion of one of the members of the Cabinet, an elegant aquarium has lately been set up in the hall, and late in the day the new members of the House calling on the Secretary's family persisted in putting their hats therein, supposing it to be a table. The poor footman fished them out as well as he could after they were in the water. A gentleman coming out would slap the tile upon his fevered and stimulated intellect, and feeling the water trickling down would say:

"Wez snow; very wez snow."

Another solemnly lifted his unbrella and remarked:

"Hang me, if hit ain't rainin'."

The Hon. Mr. Conger, who has never been suspected of taking too much in the way of stimulants, seized on his very disreputable old hat that had undergone a Campbellite baptism of complete immersion, and as he clapped it on his solonistic skull, immediately a frog, a young alligator, and an infant devil fish fell out. Conger gazed stupefied at the creatures, and then, with a wild yell, he fell in the arms of the footman.

"Take me home; take me home," he cried, "I've got 'em—got 'em bad."

The most superficial observer of affairs about the Capitol, can see some little increase in the lobby force now present in the city, to further the various schemes to draw money from the treasury. The common belief that on account of political complications and depression in business affairs little or nothing can be done in that line, is an erroneous one. In fact, the contrary is the true state of the case. Hard times affect Congressmen just as they do other people; and between the needy ones who were defeated at the last election and therefore have little hope of future performent and those who were re-elected and are consequently somewhat independent of their constituents for nearly two years, it is thought that quite a formidable party can be organized, which would not be averse to seeing more money put in circulation under the guise of benefiting the public. Then again, the all-engrossing interest in public affairs is rather favorable than otherwise to the plans and hopes of the the third house. While the eyes and minds of the public are engaged on the Presidential question to the exclusion of almost all others, little bills for the benefit of corporations and private individuals, with the most innocent titles and whereases in the world, have a chance for getting through the two houses without attracting much notice or at least without much criticism. On the whole, the boys consider the prospect decidedly good for picking up a very few rich nuggets before the session closes.

RELIEF AT LAST.

At last relief has come. It may be only temporary, but it is a relief nevertheless. This has been brought about through the agreement of the Senate and House Committees upon a plan to count the electoral vote. Last Thursday the committee made their report, agreeing upon a commission of fifteen, to whom all questions connected with the presidency are to be referred. The report received the endorsment of every member of both committees, except Morton, and his objection rather induces me to feel that the plan is a good one. The effect of the report of the committee in both Houses was electrical. When it was known that there had been an agreement, and that a report would be made that day, the Senate galeries were full for the first time. It was read a second time to satisfy the curiosity of the members, and all listened attentively. It met with a similar reception in the House, and a great sigh of relief from those present. The plan recommended by the committee, provides for a commission consisting of five Senators and five Representatives to be elected respectively by a "viva voce" vote of each House. Then the four senior members of the Supreme Court are to select a fifth person, and these fifteen persons are to decide all questions referred to them on the Presidential question. Of course the Senate will appoint Republicans and the House Democrats, so that makes it even. Then two of the Judges of the Supreme Court oldest in in office are Republicans and two Democrats, which still leaves the thing even. So it practically reduces the matter down to one man who may be appointed by the four judges, so it is still impossible to tell which way the cat may jump.

It is easy to criticise and pick flaws in the plan for settling the electoral dispute, but it is not so easy to suggest a better plan, or one that will receive more general approbation from the American people. Partizans, of course, would prefer that their special view of the question should prevail, but, unfortunately, there are two parties holding diametrically opposed theories. Unless an agreement is reached as to the conduct of the count by the 14th of February, Congress will be launched on a sea of trouble, with almost an absolute certainty that, on the Fourth of March, there will be two claimants for the Presidency. We do not know how it is with the Rebublicans, but we can speak with confidence of the Democracy. We do not know a Democrat in this broad land—have not heard of one—who does not religiously hold to the faith that Tilden was legally and honestly chosen President, and should be inaugurated. Admit that the Republicans are as honest and sincere as to Governor Hayes. The last thing that Americans can be accused of, when once aroused, is a disinclination to break the earnest convictions with the heaviest sort of blows. Have we not here all the elements and the occasion for wide-spread turmoil, and possible armed conflicts? There is no use shutting one's eyes to the danger because the prospect is unpleasant. We presume there are hundreds of thousands of citizens, good friends to-day, who, to-morrow, if occasion required, would oppose each other with arms in their hands, to decide this Presidential dispute. And they would be honest and God-fearing in their convictions, and would maintain them as matter of duty. It is no pleasant addition to the picture to fancy the Camerons, and the Chandlers, and their camp followers, revelling in power and plunder, while better men are shooting each other down.

It seems to us that the Committees' plan approaches as near judicial impartiality and fairness as it is possible to devise. As Senator Edmunds said Saturday, "it is a measure in aid of Constitutional government; no one would have the right to say that under it anybody's views had been surrendered in any respect." Possibly one reason we so cheerfully accept it is that our convictions are so strong in the justice of Governor Tilden's claim on the Presidency, it seems to us impossible a commission impartially and fairly selected will ever recommend the acceptance of the Returning Board counts in Florida and Louisiana. Honest Republicans, it is true, have done so; but we do not believe any honest Republican, has done so who has thoroughly investigated the law and facts.

Will the bill pass, is the next question to agonize an anxious public. There will be some opposition to it on both sides, but a report made so decidedly by a committee of the best members can hardly fail to meet with success. With Edmunds, Conkling, Frelinghuysen, Thurman, Bayard and Ransom, in the Senate, and Payne, Hunton, Hewett Springer, Hoar, McCrary and Willard, in the House, united in favor of the adoption of this measure, it is not doubted here that it will command the support of a large majority in both branches of Congress. When the bill was introduced this morning the greatest eagerness was shown by members in the details of the various sections. Some faces on the Democratic side showed symptoms of dissatisfaction; others of gratification; others, still, of perplexity and indecision, while the Republican members who were not pleased, were unmistakably bitter in their hatred of the measure.

As for the Democrats, they express a great variety of views. The constitutional lawyers of the body, such as Tucker, Field and Hurd, seemed perplexed as to the constitutionality of the plan. But leaving that out of the consideration, in view of the unusual emergency which the forefathers did not contemplate, they are not sure the tribunal selected is the best possible one. None of them, however, seem able to suggest a more feasible solution, or the desire to insist on any technical objections. They accept the arrangement as the fairest the committe could reach, and intend to abide by their decision. There were also objections urged at first blush by several members on the ground that perhaps this plan did not confer upon the tribunal the full powers necessary to go into a searching examination of the alleged frauds in the disputed states, but after more careful inspection they threw aside this objection as not at all warranted by the spirit and letter of the bill. Among a large number of quiet members who do a great deal of voting but scarcely anything else, it was receive with favor. It grants us, they said, two things we have been fighting for. In the first place it disposes of the authority of the president of the Senate over the returns, and in the second place it concedes that Congress can go behind a governor's certificate. The very idea of a tribunal implies both these concessions, and hence we have nothing to fear.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine prescribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP for severe Coughs, Colds settled on the Breast, Consumption, or any disease of the Throat and Lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

THE SUN.

1877. NEW YORK. 1877.

The different editions of THE SUN during the next year will be the same as during the year that has just passed. The daily edition will on week days be a sheet of four pages, and on Sundays a sheet of eight pages, or 56 broad columns; while the weekly edition will be a sheet of eight pages of the same dimensions and character that are already familiar to our friends.

THE SUN will continue to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretence, imbecility, and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It will contend for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot-boxes and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It will endeavor to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete, and trustworthy accounts of current events, and will employ for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, will be full, accurate, and fearless; and it will doubtless continue to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it will endeavor to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.

The price of the daily SUN will be 55 cents a month or $6.50 a year, post paid, or with the Sunday edition $7.70 a year.

The SUNDAY edition alone, eight pages $1.20 a year, post paid.

The WEEKLY SUN, eight pages of 56 broad columns will be furnished during 1877 at the rate of $1.00 a year, post paid.

The benefit of this large reduction from the previous rate of the WEEKLY can be enjoyed by individual subscribers without the necessity of making up clubs. At the same time, if any of our friends chose to aid in extending our circulation, we shall be grateful to them, and every such person who sends us ten or more subscribers from one place will be entitled to one copy of the paper for himself free. At one dollar a year, postage paid; and considering the size of the sheet and the quality of its contents, we are confident the people will consider THE WEEKLY SUN the cheapest newspaper published in the world, and we trust also one of the very best.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

ILLUSTRATED.

Notices of the Press.

The Magazine has attained in its one quarter century and more of existence to that point where it may be said of it, in the words of Dr. Johnson, "It is vain to blame and useless to praise." The lustre of its long-ago attained reputation has increased as the years have passed, and its future seems as bright if not brighter than at any time since the golden hue of prosperity settled around its later and better years.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Harper's Monthly is marked by the same characteristics which gave it circulation from the first with the better class of readers. It combines reading matter with illustrations in a way to make clear and vivid the facts presented. Pictures merely designed to catch the eye of the ignorant are never inserted.—Chicago Journal.

Holloway's Pills.

"I had no appetite; Holloway's Pill gave me a hearty one."

"Your pills are marvelous."

"I send for another box, and keep them in the House."

"Dr. Holloway has cured my headache that was chronic."

"I gave one of your pills to my babe for cholera morbus. The dear little being got well in a day."

"My nausea of a morning is now cured."

"Your box of Holloway's Ointment cured me of noises in the head. I rubbed some of your ointment behind the ear, and the noise has left."

"Send me two boxes; I want one for a poor family."

"I enclose a dollar, your price is 25 cents but the medicine to me is worth a dollar."

"Send me five boxes of your pills."

"Let me have three boxes of your pills by return mail, for chills and fever."

I have over 200 such testimonials as these, but want of space compels me to conclude.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDER,

And all eruptions of the skin, this ointment is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Invariably cures the following diseases:

DISORDER OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel or with aches and pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys these pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER, no medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these pills; they remove all acidity occasioned by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasm—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and stomach.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the best known in the world for the following diseases: Ague, Asthma, Billious Complaints, Blotches on the skin, Bowels, Consumption, Debility, Dropsy, Dysentery, Erysipelas, Female Irregularities, Fevers of all kinds, Fits, Gout, Headache, Indigestion, Inflammation, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Lumbago, Piles, Rheumatism, Retention, Stone and Gravel, Tic-Douloureaux, Tumors, Ulcers, Worms of all kinds, Weakness from any cause, &c.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

None are genuine unless the signature of J. Haydock, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills, and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be suspicious.

*Sold at the manufactory of Prof. Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable druggists and dealers in medicines throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

Another small invoice of snow yesterday.

Read the story on the first page of this paper.

Communion services at the Presbyterian church next Sunday.

Masquerade Ball to-night in Angola. A fine time is expected.

We always thought Morton was mulish, and now we know it.

Small Pox in Allen county. No thanks we don't want any of it here.

Miss. Frank Stahl has accepted position in C. P. Housers Book store.

The boys don't seem to fraternize with "Buffalo Bill." Who is he?

Will Rickel is now sole proprietor of the Palace Dining Hall, Mr. Seward retiring.

The News says an effort is being made to organize an Odd Fellows Lodge at Garrett.

A special session of the Circuit Court opened yesterday, Judge Tousley presiding.

W. B. McConnell, of the Angola Herald, gave the COURIER office a call last week.

We have been told that if the racket continues the old gentlemen will get his house insured.

A number of the young people had an oyster supper with Ira Eaton and wife one evening last week.

They dish up a boss meal to guests at the Waverly House, Butler; we tried one last Friday and know.

Dr. Tritch has opened an office in Ensly's block second story, opposite Penfield & Moody's office.

We heard a farmer say the snow was over three feet deep in the woods, which makes it bad getting around.

Gov. Williams has appointed James P. Voorhees, son of Hon. D. W. Voorhees, as his private secretary.

Everybody seems well pleased with the new School house, and the heating apparatus works like a charm

We have received a new piece of music, "Are They Dreaming of Me." Bet ten cents the author owes somebody.

William George, an old resident of this county died last Sunday. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of people.

Mr. J. S. Otis and lady, and Will Leas and lady, of Waterloo, attended Presbyterian church last Sunday evening, in Auburn.

A. O. Miller and his daughter Estella, assisted the Angola Amatuers in the drama entitled, "Milky White" last Saturday night.

A friend says, he is glad there is a general revival in the churches here. He has been paid several debts by delinquents already.

The Angola Herald failed to reach us week before last, and last week it came to us in the form of a half sheet, what's the matter, Billy.

We have the finest lot of calling cards in this part of the county, which will be printed as neat and as cheap as can be had in the country.

Our friend Col. Dawson has a very rare silver coin which once bore the date of 1859, but the wear and tear of time has almost eraced the design and date.

Enterprise generally wins. At least so it has proved with Davenport in the splendid five cent cigar he now furnishes to a narcotic-loving public. Try them.

The editor returned Saturday night from Washington, and remined until yesterday. He reports lively times in National Capital, and great interest centered upon the Presidential question

The use of a pleasant perfume is indicative of taste and refinement. Davenport keeps a very fine assortment, among which the "Cloio Blossom" ranks very high and is much admired.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Turn or life:—Armed with this great antidote, the fiery ordeal is passed through and the sufferer once more restoed to the possession of unimpaired health. These Pills are equally efficacious in al all female complaints, and obstructions at the dawn of womanhood. Sold everywhere. 25 cents per box or pot. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

The grand stand and stalls of the Northern Indiana Agricultural Association at Fort Wayne, were sold at sheriff's sale last week. That society has gone where the woodbine twineth.

The Garrett News has the newspaper business reduced to a fine point. It says the business of a newspaper is to criticise and make the world better. Some, however, criticise and make it a develish sight worse.

Mr. Summers, Foreman of the Waterloo Press, and Miss Ella Chamberlain, of Waterloo, was in town last Friday night and spent a very pleasant evening with the young people at Mis Orpha Bodine's.

The Ladies Social connected with the M. E. Church will be entertained by Mrs. Pattee and Mrs. Benedict, on next Wednesday afternoon and evening at the residence of the former. All are invited. MRS. A. ROBBINS, Sec'y.

Our side walks have been in a terrible condition, from the snow and ice accumulated thereon. A little effort at the time of fall of the snow, would develop some love for you neighbor, if you have no regard for yourself.

The Beer Brewers of Fort Wayne are determined that the saloon keepers of of that place must patronize them as they will establish saloons and sell that article at three cents a glass. Every body can get drunk.

W. H. McIntosh, Esq., who has been absent in the State of New York, engaged in writing up a historical record of several of the prominent counties of that State, for several months past, returned last Monday to the bosom of his family, looking even handsomer than ever.

Within the last year, in Steuben county there has been killed by dogs, 317 sheep, for which damage to the amount of $670.78 has been paid by township trustees. They should begin to kill of the dogs, as they did a few years ago.

The Auburn COURIER was a weak brother last week in a local way.—Columbia City Post.

That was while it was under different management from what it is now, Bro. B. A change has been made, which we hope is for the better.

The Post, at Columbia City, wants to show up the young men and women of that berg, claiming that all is not gold which glitters in the society of that place. That's right, show them up. Something sensational would be relished by the readers of the Post.

Having used Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup in my practice for some time, I am prepared to say, that it is a superior remedy for all cases of Cougs, Colds and diseases of the Lungs and Chest.

Dr. F. WALTMAN, Springfield, Mich.
For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup speaks for itself. It seems everybody recommends it as the most reliable remedy for Coughs, Colds and pulmonary complaints. Price 25 cents, large bottles 50 cents. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

It was charged that a certain divine at or near Butler, said in one of his discourses, that no Democrat could reach heaven. Upon hearing this he took occasion soon after to say that some of the purest christians had come up from the Democratic party. And now peace reigns in the holy city.

Our Radical friends in stating that $8,000 was sent to Oregon by the Democratic committe, to back Mr. Cronin in his claim as an elector, before the courts, should also mention the fact that Watts, the aspirant on their side was backed the same way, and also that the above $8,000 was returned unexpended, showing conclusively that no one was bought.

"Wild Bill," whose surname is Britton, the roaring, rollicking teamster of Angola, has purchased the interest of Mr. Roth in the dray line, and will now make things live in more ways than one. Bill is a brick of the old school, is live, wide awake, and has a species of chin music that is perfectly irresistable.

We understand that our affable fellow-townsman, Major John Casbeer, has leased Brown's Hotel at Lagrange, and will take possession in a few days. No one is more competent, or possesses a combination of the requisite qualities for that business than our genial friend, he Major, and we wish him every success.

We see by the Press that there has been a change in the post office at Waterloo, Miss Ida Blair being succeeded by one Kimsey. We haven't the pleasure of Mr. Kinsey's acquaintance, but we doubt whether he will improve much over the efficiency and able discharge of the duties of that office by Miss Blair. The Press regards Miss Blair as an official of "uncertain political standing." For shame, you ungallant old bear, for thus speaking of a handsome, accomplished, intelligent young lady. We suggest that you suffer the infliction of a visit from Dr. Mary Walker.

Amusements.

We are authorized to say that our Dramatic Company will again appear in about two weeks in the splendid play of "Black Eyed Susan," one of the most charming dramas of the day. The laughable play of "Pocahontus" will conclude the entertainment. In these quiet inactive times, our citizens should take advantage of a little diversion of this kind, if only to break the monotony of dull times. The troup will endeavor to please and amuse, and are worthey of patronage.

We have of late received numerous propositions from different institutions wishing to make contracts for advertising, and take quantities of their old truck as payment, or by paying a sum of money and sending them a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement, they will send us such and such articles. In reply, we will say, our terms are cash in advance.

"A printer being asked to give his opinion of salvation, as expounded by Brother Moody, astonished his interlocutor by the reply that when a man became converted he was marked "alive" and palaced upon God's "standing-galley" for future use; but when a man died without knowing God he was "pied" thrown into the "hell-box," by the "devil" and melted over.—Ex

YOUNG MAN, lay your hand on your heart, lift your eyes and hope to heaven, and in the warning light of terrible experience swear that you will never, never touch a drop. The first man ever admitted from the streets, a reeling, besotted patient, into a Chicago inebriate asylum has become a Supreme Court judge. Heaven, in its boundless wisdom and omniscience, alone kows what the second one may come to. Congress, may be.

We have received a three column quarto paper published in New York with the following motto:

The largest and smallest Journal ever published. "Live Ideas in this Dead Age, from the most Sane man in this mad world." The paper is edited by Geo. Francis Train. There is only one fault to find, with the paper, and that is in its motto, we think it ought to have read, "Dead Ideas in this enlightened age by the most insane man in this mad world."

PETIT JURORS.—The County Clerk, Auditor, Treasurer and Recorder, selected the following named citizens of the county to act as petit jurors for the February term of the Circuit Court; Wm. H. McQueen, Franklin; Samuel Cornell, Jackson; William Richmond, Stafford; Stephen Masters, Richland; O. P. Learned, Franklin, Michael Wolf, Franklin; Noah Showalter, Wilmington; Bennett Hixon, Butler Peter Ditmars, Jackson; William Whetsel, Butler; Geo. W. Louis, Newville; John Lease, Smithfield.

The Baptist church, in this place has had an accession to its membership of about forty this winter. We are glad to see this as we believe it will have the effect of dispersing the bigotry and selfishness that seems to have hovered over and enveloped it for years past. Bro. Sanders is doing good work, and we admire his backbone. It is not a little singular that persons can be plunged in cold water in these frigid times, and not take cold. The glorious summer time is more suggestive to us, with the thermometer at 95.

The protracted meeting at the M. E. church closed temporarily last Sabbath evening. A little more active interest by the membership of that church might have made their meetings pan out better. Life, animation, energy and vim are as necessary in a religious movement to bring about success, as in a circus or a lager-beer picnic, and we believe the two latter institutions cannot be successfully conducted, unless the above elements are relied upon. We would as lief, not quite, see an immortal soul go to ruin in a wide awake, active manner, as to see a fellow loaf around a church without the least evidence that he has a breathing existence.

The Albion New Era speaks very flatteringly of the manner in which W. L. Penfield, of the law firm of Penfield & Moody, of this place, handled a case in the Noble county Circuit Court, and says:

We received a pleasant call from Mr. Penfield of the law firm of Penfield & Moody, of Auburn, on Friday. Mr. P. is a rising young lawyer of DeKalb county, and made a good impression here in his management of the plaintiff's cause in the case of Culbertson vs. The Baltimore, Pittsburg & Chicago railroad company.

We were startled with the announcement the other day that the School Board of Garrett had issued a pronunciaments that the lady teachers there should not hold sweet converse with, no, not even indulge in the glorious pastime of writing billedeaux, to any of the rougher sex, during the natural term of life—while teachers in that berg. Still worse! they must not even look at a man, one soft, sunny smile must not light up their countenances, if prompted by a thought of some jolly fellow, and man must be considered as an extinct race, or words to that effect. If, some one had the power to exterminate a few of the damphools there, Garrett might yet become an oasis in the great desert, a sort of lilly to beautify the center of a handsome bouquet.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

JUNCTION.

Mr. Jones, from Teagarden, Ind., has located in our midst. He occupies the Whittington property.

—No. 11 on the B. & O had six cars off the track east of Defiance on last Tuesday night. Caused by a broken breaker. No serious damage was done as the cars were all empty flats.

—Some of our boys are getting pretty loud in time of school There is a way of getting rid of such lads as these, and if it is not stopped at once, the proper officers will be notified.

Last Wednesday J. E. Anway, a baggage master on the B. & O. while passing this place, had his overcoat taken from his car, by a man who registered as Chas. Smith, Columbus, Ohio. The coat was found in Smith's possession, and he was immediately arrested. He stood his trial and got clear on the plea of taking it by mistake. Smith turned out to be a three card monte man, and tried to confidence some of the boys in the office, but was bounced out too quick and told to skip.

—Two young men from Auburn, with their sweathearts, were sleighriding through this place one night last week, when their horses became frightened at a passing train, and run to one side throwing out the occupants of the hind seat. The driver and his lady not knowing the fact, drove nearly to Auburn before they found it out; they then returned and found the couple groping their way home, dragging the buffalo robe after them. We were not able to learn the excuses the front couple had for not being more attentive, but think there was reasonable ones offered.

—Just as I excected, "Alponso" and "Don" have made so much noise that they woke up "Dell." Now there will be the dickens to pay, for Dell is a first-class reporter, and must be honored; but if there is any virtue in soothing syrup, we are safe. We saw some of his writings in a noted paper not long since where he disputed a debt he had contracted, and they were immense. We wonder who wrote it for him. He is good at guessing, he has discovered who Don Pedro is, (in a horn,) and thinks he is giving him fits to cool his [illegible] wrath. Go in Dell, I wish you success, and that you may in time become an able writer.

DON PEDRO.

LAOTTO.

—The Rev. Mr. Wack preache at the Chapel next Sunday morning and evening.

—John Miller's Bedstead Factory has resumed operations again, having been closed on account of the cold weather.

—Dr. Bender, of the firm of Sowers & Co., is again on the road, introducing their medicines.

—R. Taylor is putting up a large quantity of ice back of his mammoth dry goods store. Greenback party or no greenback party, Taylor is bound to keep cool. Ha, ha, ha, keep cool, Doc.

—George Sowers has got 'em, not the snakes, but that pair of boots that he won of Jack Smith on the election of Blue Jeans. Run for Jack.

Last Wednesday evening a sleighing party from Huntertown gave our fellow townsman, Mr. Thomas Smith, a pleasant surprise. Fish West and wife, Ira Westland wife and Dave Culver and wife were of the party, but did not learn the names of the others.

SPENCERVILLE.

—Frank Barney and Becks Erick have formed a co-partnership for the purchase and sale of blooded horses. They are handling some very fine "haninals." Bind and glass-eyed horses a specialty.

—A donation party met at the parsonage of the Luthern church last Thursday for the benefit of E. W. Erick. It was a success.

—Mrs. Henry Beams died last Friday. The funeral services were held at the Lutheran church on Saturday, a large and sympathizing congregation being in attendance.

—Our school, under the supervision of Mr. Herrick as professor, is doing a good work. Mrs. Herrick has charge of the intermediate, and Miss Katie Blake is trotting them through in the primary department.

GARRETT.

—We have a paper run in this town by one whom I consider an officious, sanctimonious ignoramus, who appears to take pleasure in illustrating and publishing personal articles about peaceable citizens. I have lived in Garrett some over a year and have tried to attend to my own business, but notwithstanding I could not escape Parker's criticisms. Now I want to illustrate this man Parker a little, in reply to one of his articles a few weeks ago. I made inquiry about certain articles, which were furnished the Garrett school house one year ago, to which Parker made no reply, but considered it a scurrilous article. Why did he not answer the questions? Why did he not tell us what he done with the desks and seats? Why did he not tell where the stove was? I understand that it was taken from the printing office to the school house. Can it be possible that his conscience checked him? If so, I hope the next time they reprove him, he will return my work bench which he borrowed from me last summer. I understand it was broken up, I suppose for kindling wood.

The moon changed last week, so Parker called for the Marshal to make a report in regard to the poll tax worked out here; "how many worked, how many did not work, and why they did not work." These are Parker's questions. My report, for Mr. Parker's satisfation, is this: Mr. Parker, Editor of the Garrett News, did not work his poll tax, or have it worked out, to which I am willing to be qualified, and I gave him due notice. The reason why I did not try to collect it off of him is because I was instructed not to put the corporation to expense where I thought nothing could be collected.

Mr. Parker thinks that entertainments and oyster suppers are very pleasant, "and add much to the enjoyment of one's existence." That is right, Parker, encourage such gatherings, you may get an invitation to another "gathering," where you may find some one who escaped working poll tax, and you who have something to put in your paper. Yes, such gatherings add much to one's enjoyment, and I think to your corporeal appearance the next day after being at one. You acknowledged in your paper that you was very languid the next week after thanksgiving, from the effects of the good dinner you was invited to partake of. Come Parker, acknowledge the truth, did you not gorge yourself? JAS. R. SKILLING, Marshal.

JULIUS ROLFF.

January 25, '77. 2w.

WE HAVE now entered on the second century of our existence as a nation, and have breathing space to regard the lately deceased centennial year and see what it has seen.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-six has has seen the investigations of an independent, fair-minded congressional body into the frauds of an administration whose corruption has been so unlimited and nauseous as to offend the nostrils of a disgusted world.

It has seen the downfall of Cabinet ministers of that administration, and has seen them succeed, by worthless [illegible] corrupt head.

It has seen honest officials removed for their honesty, because it was incompatible with the spirit of the administration under which they held their offices. It has seen incapable and corrupt men selected to fill their vacancies.

It has seen the Administration, boldly discarding and in disregard of the honorable precedents of one hundred years, link itself, with all its power for evil and fraud, with the moneys of the national treasury and the force of the national army, to one party in the presidential contest, and spend itself and strength in attempting to force the defeated candidate upon a free people.

It has seen the law and the Constitution trodden down by the rough-shod feet of the soldier and the liberties of the nation goaded by the brutal bayonet.

It has seen the consummation of a despotism such as Russia's czar would not venture to attempt—less than which cost an English king his life, and in later days a French sovereign his head.

It has seen, finally, the triumph of honest purpose over force; and the majesty of the people asserted in lieu of the tyranny of the individual; the victory of the ballot over the bayonet.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-seven will see the consummation of the people's victory and the people's will, in the inauguration of an administration characterized by integrity and wholesome with honest results.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1877.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A portion of the roof of the Grand Central depot, New York, was crushed by the weight of snow, and fell with a terrific crash, the other day. Fortunately there were no passenger trains in the depot at the time, and no loss of life attended the accident.

At a meeting of the International Society, in New York, the other day, resolutions were adopted applauding the Molly Maguires of Pennsylvania, and protesting against their execution on the ground that they were convicted by hired witnesses.... It seems to be pretty thoroughly settled that James Gordon Bennett has left the country temporarily. He sailed from New York for Liverpool in the steamer Richmond.

THE WEST.

Bob Burdette, the funny man of the Burlington Hawk-Eye, has made his debut on the lecture platform, and is pronounced a success.... Several bills have been introduced in the Illinois Legislature having for their object to make silver a legal-tender in the payment of all debts. A bill has also been introduced to make wolf scalps a legal tender at a valuation to be fixed by law.... The Chicago Tribune gives currency to a report that the Michigan Southern Railway is not disposed to make a settlement with those injured at Ashtabula, or with those who lost their baggage by the burning of the cars. The widows and children or other relatives of the dead are also, it is said, to be denied any compensation. The company, it is said, claim that the accident was "an act of God;" and, inasmuch as the railroad officials could not control the action of the frost on the bridge, they ought not to be held liable.

The project of tunneling the Detroit river is being warmly agitated by the people of Detroit. At a meeting of the citizens, a few days ago, a committee was created to invite plans, and to see whether it would be possible to raise the necessary funds for the work.

A Davenport grain merchant, who has been investigating the matter, finds that two-thirds of the corn crop of Iowa is still in the hands of the farmers.... The loss of property at Cincinnati by the recent break-up of ice in the Ohio river is estimated at between $300,000 and $400,000, which falls principally upon the coal dealers. About 80 loaded and 150 empty barges were sunk or carried away from the landings.

Chicago elevators contain 3,511,911 bushels of wheat; 1,666,888 bushels of corn; 641,060 bushels of oats; 216,661 bushels of rye, and 1,108,608 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 7,160,098 bushels, against 4,217,321 bushels at this period last year.... Five Sioux chiefs, bearing a flag of truce, were recently pounced upon by Crow scouts and murdered, within a few hundred yards of Tongue river cantonment. Gen. Miles was indignant beyond measure at the bloody tragedy.... The Michigan Legislature has re-elected Mr. Ferry to the United States Senate.

A bold attempt was made at Chicago, the other day, to rob the express car on the Chicago and Alton railroad. Three thieves boarded the car as the train was pulling out of the depot and compelled the messenger to give up the key of the safe. The robbers, as the result shows, were not experts, for in a very bungling manner they proceeded to unlock the safe. Having accomplished this, they made a hurried search through its contents. The treasure account was light, not exceeding $25,000, of which $19,000 was for the Paymaster of the Alton road at Bloomington. In the rapid scramble for wealth, the thieves snatched what was most prominent in sight, and in trying to fill their arms, dropped several packages. Among them was one containing $19,000 which was found on the platform. Another of $3,000 was picked up on the floor, after the robbers took their departure. All they succeeded in getting away with was the Springfield bag, which contained valuables to the extent of $137 and a lot of drafts for collection. The robbers escaped.... Three exceedingly well executed $1,000 counterfeit notes have been discovered in circulation in St. Louis.... Franklin Moore, one of the oldest and most prominent merchants of Detroit, is dead.

THE SOUTH.

Some idea of the severity of the late "cold snap" in the South may be gathered from the fact that the Mississippi river was gorged with ice at a point as far south as Ozark Island, nearly 100 miles below Helena, Ark. Only once before in the memory of that venerable chronologist, "the oldest inhabitant," has such a thing occurred, and that was in the exceptionally cold winter of 1838.

The secession of P. B. S. Pinchback and three other State Senators from the Republican Legislature, and the alliance of their fortunes with the Nicholls Government, produced something of a sensation in New Orleans. Pinchback made a personal explanation, in which, according to the Associated Press reports, "he said that the action of himself and these Senators was decided upon after mature deliberation. They intended to stand the hazard of the die. They had come there as Republicans because they believed in the interests of the State above party. He denounced the Republican party of Louisiana in unmeasured terms, and said Hayes, if inaugurated, could not afford to soil his administration with this blight upon the prosperity of the people. He accused ex-Gov. Kellogg of securing his election as Senator by corrupt means."

On the 15th inst. the President telegraphed to Gen. C. C. Augur, commanding the troops at New Orleans, as follows: "It has been the policy of the administration to take no part in the settlement of the question of right of government in the State of Louisiana—at least not until the Congressional committee now there have made their report. But it is not proper to sit quietly by and see the State Government gradually taken possession of by one of the claimants for gubernatorial honors by illegal means. The Supreme Court set up by Mr. Nicholls can receive no more recognition than any other equal number of lawyers convened on the call of any other citizen of the State. A returning board, existing in accordance with law, and having judicial as well as ministerial powers over the count of the votes and in declaring the result of the late election, has given certificates of election to the Legislature of the State. A legal quorum of each House holding such certificates met and declared Mr. Packard Governor. Should there be a necessity for the recognition of either, it must be Packard. You may furnish a copy of this to Packard and Nicholls." Packard, on the same day, published a proclamation characterizing the Nicholls government as "a lawless and treasonable conspiracy," and commanding its immediate dispersal.

Mrs. Minnie Blazer, of Dayton, Ky., arose from her bed the other night, and, without arousing her husband, dressed herself, took her ten-day-old infant, and, proceeding to the river, threw herself and babe into the stream and was drowned. Temporary insanity.

POLITICAL.

Secretary of the Interior Chandler, in response to a summons, appeared before the House committee on the privileges, power and Duties of Congress in counting the electoral vote, on Saturday, Jan. 13, and, in response to the interrogatory as to whether he had sent any dispatches to Florida since the November election in relation to money, replied that he had not. Being asked whether he had sent a dispatch to Florida stating that troops would probably be sent there to keep the peace, he answered he probably had. He was then asked whether he had sent it upon his own motion or upon some one's else, and he declined to answer this question, basing his refusal on the ground that he was a Cabinet officer. The committee decided that he must answer, and gave him until Wednesday, the 17th inst., to comply.

Hon. William A. Wheeler visited Washington last week, and, after spending a few days, returned home, where he will remain until the questions connected with the electoral count are decided. He says that both Gov. Hayes and himself are confident of their election.

The Democratic members of the Delaware Legislature met in caucus, the other day, and unanimously nominated Mr. Saulsbury for reelection to the United States Senate.

Messrs. Blaine, of Maine, Ferry, of Michigan, and [illegible], of Minnesota, have been re-elected to the United States Senate by the Legislatures of their respective States. In Arkansas, ex-Gov. Augustus H. Garland has been chosen to succeed Mr. Clayton in the Senate.

The Democrats of New Hampshire have nominated Daniel Marcy for Governor.... The Republicans of the First and Second New Hampshire Districts have nominated Gilman Marston and James Briggs for Congress.

WASHINGTON.

A nephew of Senator Morton, named Hart, committed suicide last week, by shooting himself. He was a clerk in the Treasury Department.... The President has appointed Stewart L. Woodford United States District Attorney for the Southern District of New York.... The investigation of the charges against W. J. Murtagh, lately bounced from the Presidency of the Washington Police Board, has caused something of a sensation. Sometime ago the Republican newspaper, of which he is editor, began a war on the police and detectives, charging them with blackmailing gamblers. The detectives retorted with a story that while the naval investigation was going on last winter Murtagh, in behalf of Robeson, endeavored to have them inveigle Mr. Whitthorne, Chairman of the committee making the investigation, into a bawdy house and then arrest him, with a view to have something to hold over Whitthorne's head, and modify his conduct of the investigation. The Chief of Police testifies that Murtagh, as President of the Police Board, instructed him to have such a plot carried out.

"In the event that Senator Ferry should resign the Presidency," telegraphs the Washington correspondent of a Western journal, "it is said that some of the leading Senators are seriously considering the plan of electing some person not a Senator as Vice President pro tempore. The authorities have been examined, and the best lawyers in the Senate are said to be in accord that there is nothing to prevent the Senate from electing to that office a person who is not a Senator."... The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill has been completed and reported to the House. It provides for a reduction of about 10 per cent. in the salaries of nearly all the civil officers throughout the country, and also for reducing the clerical force to about the number proposed by the House last year. ....D. M. Frost, the alleged ineligible elector from Missouri, testified last week before the Committee on Privileges and Elections that he was chosen elector and received the certificate. Did not attend the Electoral College, however, and his place was filled. Produced a pardon removing his political disabilities, issued by President Johnson Oct. 23, 1865, and his examination terminated.... The President has pardoned ex-District Attorney Fisher, convicted a few days ago of abstracting official papers from the office of the Clerk of the District Court.

Mr. Ferry authorizes a contradiction of the rumor that he contemplate resigning the Presidency of the Senate.

The tribunal for the decision of controverted questions growing out of the counting of the electoral votes, as proposed by the joint committees of the two houses of Congress, stripped of all ambiguity and stated in unadorned Saxon, is as follows: By agreement the meeting to count the vote will take place as usual in the hall of the House. Tellers will be appointed as in the last count. The Vice President will open the returns, and those not objected to will be counted. In case of objection upon any point, the question of law and fact is to be referred to a commission composed of five members of the Supreme Court (Miller, Strong, Field and Clifford are named as four of the Justices, and they are to select the fifth). Each house is to appoint five members in such a way as to give five Republican and five Democratic Congressmen on the joint commission. Of these the Senate appoints three Republicans and two Democrats, and the House three Democrats and two Republicans. The Board of Arbitration thus constituted is to consider all disputed points, and its decision is to stand unless both houses concur in rejecting it.... All the money appropriated to defray the expenses of the Senate investigating committee in Louisiana has been expended, in consequence of which the committee is compelled to suspend operations.

Gen. Anderson and ex-Gov. Wells, of the Louisiana Returning Board, arrived in Washington the other day, and were immediately arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives. An officer of the House left the same day for New Orleans to bring Kenner and Cassanave, the remaining members of the board, to the bar of the House.

GENERAL.

The sad news has reached Gloucester, Mass., that ten schooners of the fishing fleet from that port are missing, and have doubtless been lost. It is probable that the crews of eight of them have perished.

The true story of the Bennett-May duel has at last been given to the public by Mr. Leonard Jerome, of New York, an eye-witness of the affair. It agrees with the first reports, save that one shot only was fired, instead of three. As soon as the shot was fired Mr. Bennett declared his honor satisfied, and made apologies, moreover, to Mr. May for his past conduct. Of course Mr. May could do nothing but accept, and the parties quietly vacated the spot.

The shipping in the upper Ohio river has been the scene of one of the most disastrous calamities ever inflicted by the elements in that region. The immense field of ice, averaging fifteen inches in depth, that had covered the river for weeks above and below Pittsburgh, gave way on the morning of the 14th inst. The ice, piled into immense bergs, swept down the river, mangling and destroying all within its path. Steamboats, barges, and every species of craft were as playthings for the raging torrent of ice and water. For hundreds of miles they were swept from their moorings one after another, and, twirling in the vortex, were cracked like egg shells, and sunk out of sight. The stream, all along the route, was dotted here and there with the wrecks of boats and barges that had represented thousands of dollars. It is said that the grinding roar of the ice could be heard for miles along the country side, and thousands of people flocked in alarm to the banks of the river to ascertain the cause of the unearthly din. The number of lost river crafts it is estimated will reach into the thousands, and the loss is figured at between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000.

The East and West railway lines have made another advance in freight rates, to the great disgust of shippers.... The United States Supreme Court has decided that land-grant railroads are not bound to transport troops and property of the United States free of charge by reason of that fact; that they are only to allow the Government the free use of their tracks in return for grants; and that they are each entitled to compensation for all such transportation they have performed, except the carrying of the mails, subject to a fair deduction for the use of their several roads.

The revival labors of Messrs. Moody and Sankey have been brought to a close in Chicago, and the evangelists go thence to Boston, where a tabernacle has been provided for them. Records of the work performed in Chicago show that 1,238 converts professed religion directly under the ministrations of the evangelists, while the total accessions to the various churches in the city since the revival began number no less than 2,383.

At a meeting of the Grand Council of the Ottoman Empire, at Constantinople, on the 18th of January, the proposals of the conference were unanimously rejected amid shouts of "Death before dishonor!" There is no opening for counter proposals, or for a renewal of the negotiations in any form; the conference has announced its ultimatum, and the Porte will have none of it. Turkey has decided to defy all Europe, and it remains to be seen what all Europe, more particularly Russia, proposes to do about it.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Presidency Dispute—Debate in the Senate on the Louisiana Election.

Consideration was resumed of resolutions submitted by Mr. Wallace in regard to the count of the electoral vote, and Mr. Sherman spoke at length in regard to Louisiana, claiming that the evidence before the Returning Board in that State justified the board in throwing out the returns from certain polling-places, on account of the violence and intimidation which prevailed. Mr. Sherman said the electors of Louisiana had met and recorded their vote for Gov. Hayes for President and Mr. Wheeler for Vice President. Their vote was duly authenticated and delivered to the President of the Senate, and was entitled to credit. He argued that Hayes and Wheeler were legally entitled to the vote of Louisiana for President and Vice President. If Gov. Hayes had been returned as elected wrongfully he could gain no honor from such a high office as that of President. It was known that Gov. Hayes had not struggled for office, neither had he purchased it, yet if it had been conferred upon him in pursuance of the constitution he would exercise his power. He was not to be tricked out of office. He (Mr. Sherman) would accept any plan for a fair and honest count of the votes, and felt sure Gov. Hayes rightfully received the vote of that State. The law was perfectly clear that if these returning officers felt there had been intimidation sufficient to deter men from voting as they desired to, they were in duty bound to throw out the vote of the precincts where such intimidation was practiced. Crimes had been committed all over the State, but no one punished. The very moment this system of intimidation extended to other parts of the country, and poisoned elections in the Northern and Western States our Government would be at an end, because law-abiding men and property-holders would rather submit to a despotic government than have our elections controlled by the worst men in society. It was because such men controlled the election in Louisiana that he argued that the inauguration of Mr. Tilden would be the greatest misfortune which could befall the country.

Mr. Bogy said he had just heard the most painful and humiliating effort ever made upon the floor of the Senate of the United States. He was amazed at the speech of the Senator from Ohio (Sherman), a speech that was incomprehensible. If the facts related by the Senator from Ohio were true; if the social condition of Louisiana was as represented by him, then the country had retrograded back to the darkest ages of barbarism. If the people of Louisiana were murderers and assassins, it was not only a disgrace to the people of that State, but a disgrace to the whole nation. The testimony quoted by the Senator from Ohio consisted of affidavits taken in New Orleans long after election. They were affidavits made by villains and perjurers. He (Bogy) would not reply to the speech of Mr. Sherman to-day, because the testimony taken by the Democratic committee had just been printed, and he had not had time to examine it; but at some future time he would ask permission of the Senate to express his views. Most of the crimes in Louisiana could be explained. Many of them were brought about by the fact that a large number of colored people, recently emancipated from bondage, were not in condition to enjoy the privileges given them by the constitution. Packard, Kellogg, and such men, who had no interest in the State, were responsible for the bad condition of things in Louisiana to-day. The white people of that State were as peaceable and law-abiding as the people of any other State. If it be true that the Democratic party elected Tilden by the means detailed by the Senator from Ohio, of course he should not be inaugurated, but he was fairly and honestly elected. The effort made here was to wrench from the people of Louisiana the free vote which they gave for Tilden.

Mr. Boutwell inquired whether the Senator from Missouri (Bogy) denied the fact that crime existed as set forth by the Senator from Ohio, or whether he admitted the fact and claimed that the crimes were committed for other than political reasons.

Mr. Bogy replied that he would be able to give a more intelligent answer after he examined all the testimony. The crimes in many cases were committed by colored men themselves.

Mr. Boutwell said it was some relief to think that these crimes proceeded from political causes, because he should dislike to believe they existed as the normal condition of society. If that was the case there was little to be hoped for. Instead of being alarmed at the statement of the Senator from Ohio (Sherman) as to the crimes committed in Louisiana, he felt to some extent relieved, because a year ago there was a more alarming condition of affairs in Mississippi, and the fact that it was not so bad in Louisiana showed that there might be some improvement.

Mr. Bogy said he believed that the testimony taken in Mississippi a year ago, like that just taken in Louisiana, was greatly exaggerated. The worst men were brought forward as witnesses. All these stories were founded on falsehoods.

Mr. Boutwell said if the Senator had read the testimony of Capt. Wm. A. Montgomery taken by the committee in Mississippi he would have seen that he was mistaken entirely in the character of the witnesses. If the Indians upon the frontier had perpetrated such crimes upon the settlers as were perpetrated upon the blacks and Republicans in Mississippi the whole country would have rallied to their relief. It would be one of the marvels of history if the people of the North, who had sacrificed hundreds of thousands of lives and expended millions of treasure for the perpetuity of the Union and the freedom of the slaves, quietly looked on in the nineteenth century while all these acts of violence were being perpetrated in the South.

Mr. Bogy said it would be one of the marvels of history that in a free country an effort was made by a party, and for party purposes, to blacken and disgrace one-half of the people of the country. The Democrats in Mississippi and elsewhere were the peers of the Senator from Massachusetts. The people of the South had been compelled to take the law in their own hands to relieve themselves of the miserable governments sent there by the Senator from Massachusetts and his friends. The administration of Gov. Ames in Mississippi was a disgrace to the country. In Mississippi now there was peace and prosperity, and the black men, many of whom were worthy of respect, were treated with as much or more respect than black men were in Massachusetts. White men in the South had been forced to resort to violence, as the people of San Francisco had to some years ago. It was not lawful, but it was the great American law, the right of self-defense.

Mr. Boutwell said the Senator now admitted the fact that there was violence in the South.

Mr. Sherman said the Senator from Missouri (Bogy) had admitted that violence existed—a principle which, if carried out, would soon destroy the Union. The Democrats, by their platform, had promised that the colored people should have the right to enjoy the elective franchise. Mr. Sherman again referred to the scenes of violence in the South, and said they would not be attempted in the North. The people of New York city, when robbed of millions by Tweed and his associates, did not resort to violence.

Mr. Bogy said the whites in the Southern States had the right to rebel against a State Government forced upon them by the Federal Government and sustained by Federal bayonets. When a minority governed the majority, and did so at the point of the bayonet, the people had the right to rebel.

Regular Proceedings.

Friday, Jan. 12.—Senate.—Mr. Frelinghuysen presented a petition of persons representing the financial, commercial, manufacturing and business interests of Newark, N. J., asking that in counting the electoral vote all party considerations be laid aside, and that pure, unselfish patriotism guide the action of Congress. The petition was read, and, after a brief speech by Mr. Frelinghuysen, referred to the special committee of seven Senators appointed to consider the Presidential difficulties.... Mr. Booth called up a resolution submitted by him on the 8th inst. in regard to the counting of the electoral vote, and spoke at length in favor thereof. ....Mr. Gordon introduced a bill to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of Government bonds advanced to the Pacific railroad companies. Referred.... Mr. Chaffee introduced a bill to abolish the use of stoves for heating passenger railroad cars. Referred.

House.—Mr. Knott, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, reported in the case of Barnes, the recalcitrant manager of the New Orleans Western Union Telegraph office, that the House has the right to compel the production of telegrams by officers of telegraph companies. Mr. Barnes was brought before the House, and declared that he is not now in charge of the New Orleans office, but should he again be placed in charge of that office, and should telegrams demanded be there, he would willingly produce them. Mr. Knott then offered a resolution declaring that the response of witness was not sufficient, and remanding him to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms until he shall have produced telegrams or been discharged by order of the House. Adopted—yeas, 131; nays, 72.... Mr. Knott from the Committee to ascertain the privileges of the House in counting of the electoral vote, made a report from that committee recommending the adoption of the following resolutions: "Resolved, That the constitution of the United States does not confer on the President of the Senate power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States. Second. That the only power which the constitution confers on the President of the Senate in regard to the electoral votes for President and Vice President is to receive the sealed lists transmitted to him by the several electoral clerks, to keep the same safe, and to open all certificates, or those purporting to be such, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives. Third. That the constitution does confer on the Senate and House of Representatives the power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as electoral votes. Fourth. That in the execution of that power in respect to the counting of the electoral votes the House has at least equal power with the Senate. Fifth. That, in the counting of the electoral votes, no vote can be counted against the judgment and determination of the House of Representatives. Sixth. That the committee have leave to sit again, and report hereafter further matter for the consideration of the House." The report, together with the minority report submitted by Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, was ordered printed. Mr. Knott gave notice that he would call up the resolutions for action on Wednesday. Mr. Knott also asked that two additional members be appointed on the committee to ascertain the rights and privileges of the House of Representatives in counting the electoral vote. The Speaker appointed Messrs. Field and Lawrence as such additional members.

Monday, Jan. 15.—Senate.—A resolution was passed to print 65,000 extra copies of the testimony taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the late election in Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina, and the casting of the electoral vote.... Mr. Conkling presented resolutions of the New York Chamber of Commerce asking that measures be adopted for convening an international money congress to fix the relative value of gold and silver. Referred.... Mr. Jones, from the special committee appointed at the last session to inquire into changes which have taken place in the relative value of gold and silver, the cause thereof, etc., said the questions were broad in their scope, and should any legislation be had upon the report of the committee, it should not be until after the committee had fully investigated the subject. He submitted a concurrent resolution extending the time for the committee to submit its report from Jan. 15 to Feb. 15. Agreed to.... The Senate paid a high compliment to the integrity of Mr. Windom, of Minnesota, in voting unanimously against the adoption of a resolution, offered by Mr. Windom, calling for the investigation, by a committee composed of three Democrats, of certain charges of bribery preferred against him by one Chapman, a disappointed applicant for the office of Surveyor General of Washington Territory.

House.—William Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, was before the bar of the House, attended by counsel (Lowrey), to answer the charge of being in contempt of the House in not appearing before the Louisiana Investigating Committee and producing certain telegrams. Mr. Orton's answer pleaded illness as an excuse for his non-attendance. The answer and the whole matter was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and Mr. Orton was remanded to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms.... Mr. Cochrane moved to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire as to the propriety of revoking any concessions and privileges held by the Western Union Telegraph Company under the acts of Congress, in consequence of the contumacy of the company. The motion was defeated—yeas, 121; nays, 85—not the necessary two-thirds.... Mr. Hatch moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill for the relief of tobacco-growers. It provides that tobacco-growers shall have the right to sell leaf tobacco free from any tax, fine or other restriction. Defeated—yeas, 102; nays, 99—two-thirds not voting in the affirmative.... Mr. Caulfield moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill providing that it shall be unlawful for more than one regiment of infantry, one company of cavalry, and one battery of artillery to be stationed at the capital of the United States, and that no portion of that force shall be allowed within half a mile of the Capitol during the sessions of Congress. Defeated—yeas, 90; nays, 37—not two-thirds in the affirmative.

Tuesday, Jan. 16.—Senate.—Mr. Patterson presented a petition of D. H. Chamberlain and others, of South Carolina, setting forth that many of the statements of Wade Hampton and others, recently presented in the Senate, are untrue. Read and ordered printed.... Mr. Sherman, from the Finance Committee, reported the House bill known as Bland's Silver bill, without recommendation, and asked that it be placed upon the calendar. He also gave notice that he would, when it was taken up, offer a substitute from himself personally, and not originating in the committee. The substitute was ordered printed.... A resolution was adopted calling upon the President for information in regard to the revolt in the Turkish provinces.... Mr. Patterson submitted a resolution recognizing D. H. Chamberlain as the lawful Governor of South Carolina. Referred.... Mr. Withers called up the message of the President in regard to the occupation of Petersburg by the military on election day, and yielded the floor to his colleague, Mr. Johnston, who spoke at length on the subject. Mr. Withers also addressed the Senate upon the subject, and at the conclusion of his remarks submitted the following, which was agreed to: "Resolved, That the Committee on Judiciary be instructed to examine whether the construction of the laws touching the elective franchise promulgated by the Attorney General in general orders No. 96, of date Sept. 7, 1876, be correct, and that they report by bill or otherwise."

House.—The Senate joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a commission to attend the international convention to inquire into the relative value of gold and silver was laid on the table. Yeas, 125; nays, 104.... Mr. Lynde, from the Judiciary Committee, made a report relative to the refusal of Wells, Anderson, Cassanave and Kenner, members of the Louisiana Returning Board, to produce before the committee on election in Louisiana certain papers demanded by said committee. The report concludes with a resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody and bring before the bar of the House the above-mentioned gentlemen. A long and lively political discussion followed, participated in by Messrs. Frye, Luttrell, Cox, Kasson, Garfield, Wood, Lawrence, and others, at the conclusion of which the previous question was seconded and the resolution went over.... The Speaker laid before the House a communication from F. W. Barnes, the recusant witness, declaring that the answer which he made when last before the bar of the House was made in good faith, and that he was entirely willing to produce the messages demanded if it were in his power, and that he would make every effort to obtain said messages, and asking that he be permitted to make the attempt, promising that if he was unable to do so he would again place himself in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. The communication was referred to the Judiciary Committee.... Mr. Hunton, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a resolution permitting Wm. Orton, now in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to proceed under his charge to New York for the purpose of consulting his physician, and providing that he should return to Washington on Friday. Adopted.

Wednesday, Jan. 17.—Senate.—Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, stated that the money appropriated to carry on the investigations now being made by that committee had been expended. A bill appropriating $25,000 additional to defray the expenses of the committee had passed the Senate but was delayed in the House of Representatives.... Mr. Morton replied to the remarks of Messrs. Johnston and Withers, of Virginia, made yesterday, in regard to the occupation of Petersburg by the military on the day of the late election for President. He defended the action of the President, and argued that under the law the President had the right to send troops to any polls in any State for the purpose of keeping the peace. The debate was further continued by Messrs. Johnston, Sherman and Withers, after which the subject was laid aside.

House.—The House passed a resolution permitting Barnes, the contumacious witness, to return to New Orleans, in charge of a Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, to see whether he can procure the telegraphic dispatches called for by Mr. Morrison's committee. ....Bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Stone, of Missouri, to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahama; by Mr. Kidder, extending the time of the payment for public lands in cases where the crops have been destroyed by grasshoppers; also, establishing a land district in the Black Hills.... Mr. Wells, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Indian Appropriation bill.... Mr. Harris offered a resolution instructing the committee on privileges and duties of the House to report what number of electoral votes is necessary under the constitution to elect a President. Referred.... A discussion took place upon the resolution reported by the Judiciary Committee in relation to the refusal of members of the Louisiana Returning Board to produce certain papers before the Louisiana special committee. At the conclusion of the debate a vote was taken and the resolution for the arrest of the members of the Louisiana Returning Board and their production before the bar of the House to answer for contempt was adopted by a strict party vote—yeas, 158; nays, 81.

Thursday, Jan. 18.—Senate.—Mr. Edmunds, from the special committee appointed to devise means for counting the electoral vote, submitted a report in writing, accompanied by a bill. The report, he was happy to say, was signed by all the members of both committees, with one exception. The committee was of the opinion that the measure they recommended was not what could be called a compromise, but it was a measure of justice, and in aid of constitutional Government. No one would have the right to say that anybody's views had been surrendered in any respect.... Mr. Jones, of Florida, presented the petition of the four Democratic Presidential electors of Florida, claiming to have been legally elected, and asking that the electoral vote cast by them for President and Vice President be counted instead of that cast by the electors on the other side.

House.—Mr. Payne, chairman of the committee on counting the electoral votes, made a concurrent report of the two committees of the House and Senate, which report having been read it was, on motion of Mr. Payne, recommitted and ordered printed.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

Monday, Jan. 15.—Senate.—A resolution was presented resolving to meet with the House on Feb. 18, for the election of State Librarian. The question arising as to the number of prison directors to be elected, the resolution was referred.... Mr. Reed presented a resolution directing the Finance Committee to report upon the feasibility of each county becoming the custodian of its own school fund.... Mr. Dietz, the old gentleman that walked from New Albany to the Centennial in thirty days, presented, through a member, a petition for financial aid.... Mr. Streight presented a bill abolishing the Board of Trustees of the Soldiers' Home and Deaf, Blind and Insane asylums, and providing as a substitute a board of three, to be elected by the Legislature, and to be known as the Board of Commissioners of Benevolent Institutions. Upon this board will fall the lot of re-electing Superintendents of the institutions, and upon the Superintendents the duty of appointing employes. The same Senator has in preparation a bill putting the penal institutions of the State under a similar head.... Bills were introduced in regard to fees of Clerks of Circuit Courts; to make gold and silver coin of the United States legal tender in Indiana, and to repeal the act appropriating money to the State University at Bloomington.

House.—The House failed to have a quorum, and spent the afternoon in reading bills and joint resolutions on second reading.

Tuesday, Jan. 16.—Senate.—An elaborate petition and resolutions were offered to exempt from taxation amount of notes and mortgages on property.... A resolution was introduced by Mr. Fowler, of Owen, to inquire into the expediency of requiring County Superintendents to hold certificates of qualification from the State Board of Education.... Mr. Taylor, of Tipton, proposed to amend the constitution so as to allow of woman suffrage. ....The pay of Pages was fixed at $2 per day.... A bill by Mr. Johnson, of Parke, prohibits sales of liquor on Sundays, holidays, and election days.... Mr. Baxter introduced a bill looking to prison reform; Mr. Riley, of Decatur, against sheep-killing dogs; Mr. Grove, of Bartholomew, to create a State board of health; Mr. Gather, for statistics and survision of sanitary measures for the public benefit; Mr. Streight, of Marion, abolishing trustees, etc., of penal institutions, and transferring the management to three Commissioners; Mr. Fowler, of Owen, governing the transportation and handling of freight on railroads; Mr. Reed, of Martin, to secure safety of money and valuables belonging to railway passengers; Mr. Burrell of Jackson, requiring that impecunious violators of law fined by Peace Justices may work out fines and costs; Mr. Skinner, of Porter, making hotel-keepers liable for property of guests; Mr. Johnson, of Parke, repealing the existing liquor law; Mr. Moore, of Decatur, providing for procuring evidence by prosecuting attorneys to establish information; Mr. Harris, of Marion, providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the State by Township Trustees, referring specially to colored people; Mr. Truster, of Fayette, to protect wild game.

House.—The Ways and Means Committee killed the bill making a legal tender of United States silver dollars and fractional pieces. The committee reported favorably on the bill fixing the amount of property to be exempted from sale on execution at $500; also exempting from such sale working tools of mechanics. This bill was concurred in by a close majority, and ordered engrossed.... Bills were engrossed looking to the preservation of county records; also to cure defective titles.... The bill fixing a uniform rate of interest came up on the majority and minority report of the committee, and after a brief discussion the minority report in favor of a uniform rate was voted down. Ayes, 14; noes, 30.

Wednesday, Jan. 17.—Senate.—Resolutions were offered to amend the constitution so as to prohibit donations and subscriptions to aid the construction of railroads by counties, cities, and townships; to instruct Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for the equalization of soldiers' pensions.... Bills were offered to provide for the better security of depositors in saving banks; to amend the divorce law; to prevent the obstruction of highways by railroad trains; to establish an insurance department for Indiana; to abolish elections of teachers by citizens of school districts; to repeal interest acts; to amend the law in regard to sale and possession of lands for delinquent taxes; in relation to prosecutions in Justices' courts; in regard to change of venue; to regulate jurisdiction and pay of Judges in probate business at any time; to appropriate $500 annually to the Indiana Horticultural Society; to prohibit getting on and off moving trains by other than employes and passengers.... The bill extending the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace was discussed for several hours and killed by indefinite postponement.... Another bill, limiting appeal from Justices of the Peace, was also discussed at length and referred.

House.—Bills were introduced amending the law regulating divorces by stipulating that separations may be granted for adultery, impotency at time of marriage, abandonment, cruelty, failure to provide, and commission of crime; repealing all general laws in force for the incorporation of cities; giving the employes of corporations a lien for their work upon the corporate property of such corporations; exempting $500 of the insurance held in Masonic or Odd Fellows' mutual insurance companies for the benefit of wife and children; fixing the rate of toll on gravel and plank roads; for the uniform assessment of property; regulating the continuance of criminal cases on account of absence of evidence; amending the act regulating foreign insurance companies doing business in this State; establishing county courts and abolishing the offices of County Commissioners, and transferring probate business to such courts; [illegible] exemption of personal property sold for taxes; to amend the law governing the election of County Surveyors; authorizing County Commissioners to offer reward for the arrest of horse-thieves; authorizing the arrest and examination of suspected felons; preventing the [illegible] dion of members from $6 to $5; authorizing the examination of railways to prevent accident; compelling railroads with management outside the State to appoint an agent in each county who may be served in case of suits in courts; appropriating $92,886.91 for the relief of persons whose property was destroyed during the Morgan raid in this State.

Sending Portraits by Telegraph.

The Paris correspondent of the London Standard writes: "It has often been said that the science of telegraphy is as yet only in its infancy. What it will do when it reaches the age of maturity it would be difficult to say certainly, but some idea may be formed from an extraordinary telegraphic discovery just made in Paris. It appears that some inventor has found out the means of sending portraits by telegraph. The modus operandi has not yet been disclosed, but experiments have been made, and—if we are to believe the papers—with complete success. The trial was made by the police authorities of Paris and Lyons. The portrait of a Lyons official was forwarded from Paris by the new telegraphic apparatus, and at once recognized. In return the Lyons police telegraphed to Paris the portrait, accompanied with the usual description, of a clerk who had just absconded with his master's money, and the Paris police, thanks to the telegraphic portrait, were enabled to arrest the thief on his alighting from the train at the Lyons railway station. These facts are published on the best authority, and, incredible as they may seem, are no doubt authentic. So far, the ingenious discovery is only being employed for the detection of criminals, but it is evident that the police authorities will not be able to monopolize it, and that it will be turned to account by society at large under the various trying circumstances of life, and more especially in the cases of deserted wives and husbands, missing heirs, disconsolate lovers, and similar interesting beings."

Minnesota Tree-Planting.

The State Forestry Association awarded some 300 premiums for tree-planting last year. The awards include $800 in silver and copper medals, struck by dies and machinery manufactured here, subscriptions to newspapers, and for one family in each prairie county along its line a free pass for this year from the St. Paul and Pacific Railroad Company. Faribault is the banner county, 1,604,776 trees being planted in that county during the year. The Delano premium of $350 was awarded to George F. Pixley, of Martin county, who planted 79,200 trees, of which 52,755 are reported in healthy growth. The Hon. George L. Becker planted 60,000 on his farm in Stevens county. Returns received, being from fifty counties, show over 1,500,000 trees planted in the State on Arbor day, May 1, and over 10,000,000 during the season. One man alone set out 15,411 cuttings on Arbor day, of which over 13,000 survive. One lad of 14 years planted Arbor day 7,500 cuttings, and another of 11 years 5,280, of which last 2,937 are now growing healthily. Most of the trees planted are cottonwood and white willow, but large plantations have been started of maples, larch, white oak, walnut, etc.—St. Paul Pioneer.

THE LOUISIANA INFAMY.

A Plain, Unvarnished Statement of the Facts of the Case—Speech of Ex-Gov. Palmer, Delivered at the Springfield (Ill.) Convention.

* * * When I reached New Orleans I ascertained, from gentlemen of all parties, not only Democrats but Republicans, that the Returning Board of Louisiana, that anomaly in government, was expected to count out the Tilden electors. No one seemed to entertain a doubt about it. Although there was a majority reported of 8,954 in favor of the highest Tilden elector, yet no man seemed to have any doubt about the result. I had more faith than some of my friends. I believe constitutionally I belong to that class of men who are sometimes called optimists, and I believe the interpretation of that word is a man who, when he has a good breakfast, expects to have a good dinner. I started out to get acquainted with the Returning Board. I saw them and conversed with them. I say I had had hope, but after I conversed with the Returning Board whatever hope I had before perished. It isn't necessary to tell you who the board are. The law of the State required that the board should consist of five members, but the board itself resolved that four was enough, and God knows of such men they were more than enough. The law requires that it shall be composed of men of different political parties. They were all Republicans. Gov. Wells, it was said, had been a Union man, and it is said he had been an old slaveholder, and a hard and merciless master. Gen. Anderson had been a soldier in the Confederate army, and not a very good one, either. Mr. Casanave, by far the most honest, I think, of the crowd, was one of our fellow-citizens of African descent. I found him to be a stern and vindictive man, that had been taught that the Democratic party was the enemy of his race, and he had no more scruple in dealing with the Democratic party than a soldier has on the battle-field in dealing with a foe. Of the fourth member of the board I need not speak. They were all Republicans, and they were asked to fill up the vacancy on the board, and they exhibited their fairness by saying that they thought the Democrats had forfeited their place on the board, because two years ago a gentleman appointed in the interest of the Democratic party had resigned. These four men, in violation of the laws of the State, in violation of the spirit of even these bad laws, determined, of themselves, that they would make a count; and, more than that, they determined that no profane Democrat should see the original papers. Every man they appointed was not so much a Republican as a servant and tool of their own.

This delegation with which I was associated was made up of men that the country had been taught to regard at least as honest men. There was, first, and the most active and the most influential, Lyman Trumbull, of this State. There was Gov. Bigler, of Pennsylvania; George W. Julian, of Indiana; Mr. P. H. Watson, Assistant Secretary of War at one time under Stanton. I need not go over all the men who were there. On the other hand, Senator John Sherman and other gentlemen equally eminent had been sent there by the President. My fellow-citizens, when we reached New Orleans it was our desire to learn the truth of the case in Louisiana. I will assert, for my associates, that every one of them was eager to learn the very truth of the case, and if the truth had shown that the Hayes electors were chosen every one of them, in my judgment, would, without hesitation, have certified that fact to the country. But we were powerless in the face of this crowd of reckless partisans. We proposed to the commission appointed by the President and headed by Senator Sherman to unite with them, and together as citizens investigate the facts of the case, employing our joint influence to obtain access to papers and employing our joint influence to induce this Returning Board to do the right thing, that we might go home to the North and allay popular excitement and popular feeling by telling the people, behind both commissions, what the truth was. These gentlemen, appointed by the President, absolutely declined to confer with us at all, and in doing that insisted in substance that the forms of the law must be regarded. They told us, in substance, that they couldn't presume to interfere with the internal affairs of a State, and, while those gentlemen were so sensitive of State rights, you could see, lying off in the river, anchored head up stream, with their batteries directed on the city of New Orleans, a man-of-war and a monitor, and we found the Custom House a citadel filled with armed men, sent there by the President to protect that scoundrelly Returning Board in its functions. And yet they told us, with all the delicacy and modesty and hesitation of an old-time, double-distilled States-rights man, that they couldn't venture to interfere in the affairs of the State. They had no occasion to interfere. They knew that their work was done before they went there, and I say, that John Sherman and his associates went to New Orleans not to learn what the truth was, but to learn how to apologize for a fraud. That was their commission. This Returning Board was such as I have described, and these gentlemen sent by the President declined to co-operate with us, and I submit to you, my fellow-citizens, if to unite with them to learn the truth wasn't the rational, sensible, patriotic way of doing it? Well, after this was done, we were invited to attend the opening of the returns, and from that the citizens of Louisiana themselves, who were interested in the investigation, were excluded. We sat there and saw the papers opened. I sat there vigilant and watchful, but I shall never forget the appearance of a friend of mine who was present, and ordinarily thought as close and watchful and cautious as I was guileless and unsuspicious. He seemed to suspect something wrong, and took no pains to conceal the fact that he suspected. I recollect that one day he was intent, through his spectacles, examining some papers when these returns were received by the board, and that the date that was announced in connection with the return was the 18th of November. Said he, looking at the papers: "How is it that inside of this sealed packet of returns, received, you say, on the 18th of November, there are affidavits sworn to, dated on the 21st?" We were allowed to see that much, but very soon these papers were shuffled off into another room, and when these gentlemen that were interested, but who were not allowed to look at the papers themselves, asked that they might be represented on the clerical force, Gov. Wells said: "The clerks are all appointed." [A voice—"What did Sherman say to that?" It is hardly necessary to repeat what he said, but if you ask how he looked I will tell you. It was a detected fraud, and that detected fraud would have been followed by many others if so much pains had not been taken to prevent a careful supervision of these returns. We were allowed to see those returns which the Democratic committee of the State with great care had collected from the voting places in the State—returns from each parish, which in Louisiana is a division like our counties. A copy of these was placed in my hands, with an opportunity to compare the Democratic returns with the returns made by the election officers in every parish in Louisiana, and the actual honest result of the election, on a comparison made by me with the returns made by the returning officers, was that the highest Democratic elector had received 83,650 votes and the lowest elector on the Hayes ticket had received 74,902 votes. After this result, obtained by a careful examination of the returns made by the officers who conducted the election, there was still no less doubt that the Hayes and Wheeler electors would be counted in, and when it was all over Senator John Sherman addressed me a note, I being incidentally a representative of our friends. He says:

"It is our purpose to communicate to the President copies of the testimony of witnesses taken under the order of the board of returning officers before the commissioners, but we have no means of getting copies of the depositions taken on behalf of the Democratic candidates for electors. If you will secure copies of such depositions we will with pleasure transmit them with copies of the depositions taken by the Republican candidates, so that, if printed hereafter, the whole body of testimony may be read and considered together. No doubt a request by you to the gentlemen taking the depositions will enable you to comply with our request for a copy of them."

I returned the answer that we would unite with them; that we had concluded to file a protest and exhibits, and submit all the testimony for publication. You see there is no promise on his part that there will be a publication, and so we informed him finally that the people of the country should see the protest with the objections to the returns and the proof applicable to them; that we would file them, and let them go out to the country certified by both parties to this proposition. Mr. John Sherman refused to agree, but, on the contrary, sent to Washington a great mass of stuff gathered in Louisiana, where affidavits are as cheap as almost anything you can imagine; affidavits taken in the Custom House there, before unnamed and unknown persons, and signed by men who have no idea of their contents. These were sent to President Grant and by President Grant communicated to Congress, with the utmost appearance of sincerity and solemnity, and they have gone out to the country, and these gentlemen have indorsed Gov. Wells, and it is said that he is the son of the Hon. Levi Wells. It is said that Gen. Anderson is a Virginian and cousin of the Gen. Anderson of Fort Sumter notoriety, and Mr. Casanave and Mr. Kenner are spoken of as being gentlemen of the highest reputation. These men are all indorsed by Senator Sherman. You have seen the report, and you have seen what efforts were made to arrive at the truth, what efforts were made to collect the truth, and you have seen with what success their efforts met. They have reported that Louisiana has gone for electors pledged to vote for Hayes and Wheeler. Now I come to the most humiliating part of this whole story. John Sherman and the ex-Governor of Ohio are among the most respectable men in the country, and Senator Trumbull and Gov. Bigler and Mr. Watson and Mr. Julian and others, for whom I have no less respect than them, are equally eminent and held in equally high esteem by the country. These two delegations went to Louisiana, so far as I know, although I suspect more than I knew or dare assert, for I have no doubt that all these gentlemen had free access to all the papers of the Returning Board. These gentlemen, having equal claims, so far as I know, to the confidence of the country, equal means of arriving at the truth, have gone before the country—Mr. Sherman and his associates asserting that Louisiana had elected Hayes electors, Lyman Trumbull and his associates asserting as their belief that the Tilden electors were elected by the people of the State.

Why this conflict between delegations equally honest? I confess when I come before the people of the State of Illinois, with whom I have spent nearly all the years of my life, a people who have honored me to the utmost extent of my merit, when I come, too, with gentlemen who have been honored by the State, and who are worthy of all the honors they have received, and find that there is this irreconcilable difference of statement upon the same facts, I feel that some or all of us should be fairly objects of public execration and contempt. In this case somebody has lied, and we go before the people of the country upon this great issue, and they ask us what are we to think about it? I recollect that a gentleman, the editor of a Presbyterian paper in Tennessee, repeats the names of the delegates on both sides, and says: "When men like these differ so about the facts, what are the people to do?" The question must be decided, the question of who was elected President at the last election, and you have got to solve it, either by yourselves or by your representatives. Gentlemen tell us that the question is an alarming one. It is a question of law and facts that admits of a certain solution. We have supposed that the constitutional laws of the United States furnish the means of solving any disputes that might arise in regard to any political question. In some countries, where there has been a dispute about the succession, men have taken arms and followed the Red Rose and the White Rose, and millions of men have shed their lives upon the battle-field to determine who should be their master. There are no such people in this country. In this country the constitution is the sovereign and the laws. The President is a mere magistrate, with limited powers, and it is only within the last few years that we have been familiarizing ourselves with the idea that the President is our master. It is only when the people have tolerated the appearance of Federal troops at little election seats, where there is a controversy about who shall be the Governor, and all of a sudden there is a flash of bayonets. It is this circumstance, and only because the people of this country apprehend that this same President, who, I believe, is the only President who has said that he is the representative of a party, and whose Secretary of the Interior is the acknowledged head of a political party, and the only President who has taken hold of a party organization, is running the Republican party. Until that time, I say, no one would have anticipated the prospect of difficulty growing out of the settlement of this question. The only danger there is of strife as the result of this dispute is that the man in power will employ the army to operate against the people. I know that these Republican circles and Republican newspapers tell us that Grant is President now, and not Buchanan; they tell us that the President will inaugurate Gov. Hayes, and one of the greatest difficulties I have is to endure the taunts of power. They taunt us that they will employ power to solve this question, and in that lies our only danger. Let them keep their soldiers and themselves, and leave us to solve this question through the agency of the constitutional authorities of the country. There is no more danger in the solution of this question than there was in holding the election upon the 7th of November. I have spoken of these humiliating circumstances. Now the question is one which you must decide, and you must form an opinion. The question is an exceedingly simple one. In the State of Louisiana no man can vote unless he has been registered as a voter. You cannot, as you can in Illinois, supply the names of those who have been omitted by the registration; but every man, when he offers his vote, takes to the Commissioner of Election his certificate of registration, and every Commissioner of Election was appointed by William Pitt Kellogg himself, under a law that allows him to remove any Commissioner of Registration at his pleasure. Then of the 161,009 votes in Louisiana it is admitted by everybody that every man whose name was on the poll-list was a lawful voter. Then the elections were conducted by officers appointed by the Commissioners of Registration. No Democrat was allowed to register or receive the votes, or record a vote, or certify a vote, or open a poll or canvass a vote; everything was in the hands of William Pitt Kellogg, who was Governor, though not by the voice of the people, nor the grace of God, and who was a candidate for Presidential elector, and a candidate for the United States Senate, and who will no doubt be elected by his Legislature within the next week. I was about to say that this was a guarantee of fairness, and a guarantee that Democrats could not have acted lawlessly. These men who received and counted the vote certified to the Returning Board at New Orleans that the highest Democratic elector had received 8,954 votes more than the lowest Republican elector. Ordinarily this would furnish a pretty good guarantee that the Republicans had shown their best hand. I compared all these returns and know what the figures show. Then what was the prospect? These returns were laid before this Returning Board. I am going upon the ground that the Returning Board were honest, for which may God forgive me. They commenced this session upon the 20th of November, and they announced to us that they would get through by the 4th of December.

These contested parishes are some of them 400 miles from New Orleans, and, by the way, the law requires that the protests against intimidation and fraud and bribery shall be attached to the returns, and a copy of them shall be filed in the parish where the people live, and that some notice should be given that there would be a controversy about it. That was not done. The returns were sent to New Orleans, some of them by the mail and some were brought by the Supervisors themselves, and there, in the Custom House of New Orleans, that festering hole of iniquity, that public building built with your money and mine; that nest of unclean birds, there they were returned, doctored, and fixed up and handed over to the Returning Board. These men rejected everything, and simply looked into the question to see how many votes could be thrown out to give the party all it wanted. They threw out 13,250 Democratic votes. That was doing pretty well; but they also threw out 2,040 Republican votes. They told us they were going to throw out the bull-dosed parishes. There were five of them. We supposed that was all that would be done. That was all they claimed it was necessary to do. But after throwing out all the bull-dosed parishes there was still a Democratic majority of over 4,000. That would not do. The original plan was to throw out all the bull-dosed parishes. The final plan was to take wherever there was a Republican majority and retain it, and when there was a Democratic majority to throw it out; and they retained every parish where there was a Republican majority, and wherever there was a Democratic majority they threw it out. It is strange to you, my fellow-citizens. If there was a single Republican poll in the State thrown out, either for intimidation or anything else, I don't know it; but all the polls that were thrown out, every one of them, were polls where there was a Democratic majority, and in one case they threw out a whole parish because they would not hold the election.

These are the facts upon which Judge Trumbull and myself reported to the people of the North that Tilden and Hendricks had a majority. We thought that the returns made by the men who conducted the election were the best, especially as the members of the Returning Board had been denounced by leading Republicans, so much so that when Mr. Wheeler went down there he actually compelled certain members of the Legislature returned by the board to vacate their places and let Democrats take them. I see, however, that Mr. Vice President Expectant Wheeler says that, while he denounced their acts as illegal, he never meant to impeach their intentions. Gentlemen, these are the leading facts of the case. Now what are you going to do about it? What have you done from the foundation of the Government? We have simply discharged our duty as good citizens, and have relied with confidence upon the fact that everybody else would do the same thing. Gentlemen, our Republican friends, when they found that the thing had gone against them, wanted to turn the Vice President of the Senate into a returning board. They wanted the country to believe that—but my friend Gen. Farnsworth so riddled that idea this morning that it is hardly worth while for me to bother with it. They wanted to hold that the Vice President pro tem. was the equivalent of all the returning boards put together. I have heard that one woman had seven devils, but here they are loading upon this poor Vice President four that are much worse than the seven that troubled the woman. Well, that idea was found to be absurd that Vice President Ferry should settle a question that involves not necessarily the peace, but which involves the policy of this country for years to come. That has been abandoned by the Republican party, but the Vice President says that when the two houses meet in joint session he can make a certain decision from which there may be an appeal, but that the Senate may sustain him while the House may vote the other way, and that he shall decide between them. If our accidental Vice President, Thomas W. Ferry, of Michigan, entertains a belief that that thing will fool anybody, he had better go back into the saw-log business, in which he has been engaged. That question must be decided by Congress, and Congress is composed of two houses, the Senate and the House of Representatives, and if the two houses shall not agree upon this question the vote must be rejected. It has been done before, and why should the old rule be reversed now? [A voice—"To elect Hayes."] That may be a good enough reason for those that want that done. I don't. What then? Why, the Federal constitution has made provision for just that case. If there is no election by the electors, the Federal constitution declares that the House shall then proceed to elect. Now, who objects to that? Republican politicians. But will the Republican people? I tell you we haven't yet got to the point in this country when any knot of politicians shall be able to take hold of the people and make them indorse a palpable wrong and fraud. The Republican people and the Democratic people are alike. They have their political feelings and passions general in political contests, but do you believe that a majority of the State of Illinois will consent to be the tools and slaves of Zack Chandler and that class of men? No; they would scorn it. My fellow-citizens, we know our hope is on clinging to the constitution as the ark of our safety, and when these facts are discussed in proper temper by the people of this country, of both parties, I have no doubt about a proper solution of it.

Paucity of Silver Change.

From every part of the country, and especially the South, a scarcity of silver change is reported. In some of the Eastern cities the premium on change is 1 per cent., and even that is insufficient to attract an adequate supply. A contemporary says "there is some reason to believe that the people of the Southern States are responsible to some extent for the prevailing scarcity. A Southern paper states that silver is fast disappearing from circulation in that part of the country. Banks in the Southern cities have paid it out liberally, but still it does not appear in general use. The Nashville banks have paid out large quantities, and yet the change in that vicinity consists almost exclusively of fractionals. The explanation offered is that people hoard it as soon as they get it, so as to have a little stock of currency of a kind that cannot be repudiated. It may be assumed that much, if not all, of this hoarding is done by negroes. They, more than the whites, have a fancy for stowing away coin in old stockings."

Immediate Cause of Vanderbilt's Death.

By a post-mortem examination of the body of Commodore Vanderbilt, it was found that the immediate cause of death had been ulceration, resulting in a perforation of the colon, or large intestine. The perforation, the doctors concluded, could not have existed more than a day or two before his death, but the ulceration which caused it might have been going on for three weeks. Besides this, there was chronic inflammation of the bladder, which gave rise to the intense pains that the Commodore endured at intervals, and prolapsus ani. Both lungs, the heart, the kidneys, and liver were found to be more or less affected by disease or unhealthy action, but not sufficiently so to cause his death. The perforation of the intestine which caused the death of the Commodore seems to have been a somewhat unexpected development of his disease.

No SENTENCE of death has been executed in Belgium since 1863. Commutation to penal servitude for life, of which part may subsequently be remitted, has been the course invariably followed. A recent great increase in crimes of violence of the worst kind has given occasion for bringing the subject again before the Chamber. The Minister of Justice, however, made the declaration that he would rather resign his office than permit a single sentence of death to be executed. Murderers in Belgium have therefore still a good time before them.

RUSSIAN war vessels in the Caspian are hereafter to use petroleum instead of coal. Experiments with the new fuel have proved so satisfactory that within a few weeks the furnaces of seven vessels will have been altered to suit the material.

COUNTING THE VOTES.

The Joint Electoral Committee's Report to Congress—Text of the Bill Agreed Upon.

The following is the report of the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives appointed under the several resolutions of those bodies to prepare and report such a message as may be best calculated to accomplish the lawful counting of the electoral votes and the best disposition of all questions connected therewith, and the due declaration of the result. The committees say that they have considered the subject named in said resolutions, and have had full and free conference with each other thereon, and now report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage. The report continues as follows:

We have applied the utmost practicable study and deliberation to the subject, and believe that the bill now reported is the best attainable disposition of the different problems and disputed theories arising out of the late election. It must be obvious to every person conversant with the history of the country and with the formation and interpretation of the constitution, that diversity of views and opinions touching the subject, not wholly coincident with the bias or wishes of members of political parties, would naturally exist. We have in this state of affairs chosen, therefore, not to deal with abstract questions save so far as they are necessarily involved in the legislation proposed.

It is, of course, plain that the report of the bill implies that in our opinion legislation may be had on the subject in accordance with the constitution, but we think that the law proposed is inconsistent with a few of the principal theories upon the subject. The constitution requires that the electoral votes shall be counted upon a particular occasion. All will agree that the votes named in the constitution are constitutional votes of the States, and not other, and when they have been found and identified, there is nothing left to be disputed or decided. All the rest is mere clerical work of summing up numbers, which being done, the constitution itself declares the consequences. This bill, then, is only directed to ascertaining for the purpose and in aid of counting what are the constitutional votes of the respective States, and whatever jurisdiction exists for such purpose the bill only regulates the method of exercising it. The constitution, our great instrument and security for liberty and order, speaks in the amplest language for all such cases, in whatever aspect they may be presented. It declares that the Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by the constitution in the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof. The committee therefore think that the law proposed cannot be justly assailed as unconstitutional by any one, and for this reason we think it unnecessary, whatever may be our individual views, to discuss any of the theories referred to. Our fidelity to the constitution is observed when we find that the law we recommend is consistent with that instrument.

The matter then being a proper subject for legislation, the fitness of the means proposed becomes the next subject of consideration. Upon this we beg leave to submit a few brief observations. In all just governments both public and private rights must be defined and determined by the law. This is essential to the very idea of such a government, and is a characteristic distinction between free and despotic systems. However important it may be whether one citizen or another shall be Chief Magistrate for a period prescribed upon the just theories of civil institutions, it is of far greater moment that the will of the people lawfully expressed in the choice of that officer shall be ascertained and carried into effect in a lawful way. It is true that in every operation of a government of laws, from the most trivial to the most important, there will always be a possibility that the result reached will not be the true one. The executive officer may not wisely perform his duty, the courts may not truly declare the law, and the legislative body may not enact the best laws, but in either case to resist the act of the Executive, the courts, or the Legislature, acting constitutionally and lawfully within their sphere, would be to set up anarchy in place of government. We think, then, that to provide clear and lawful means of performing a great and necessary function of the Government in a time of much public dispute is of far greater importance than the particular advantage that any man or party may in the course of events possibly obtain. But we have still endeavored to provide such lawful agencies of decision in the present case as shall be the most fair and impartial possible under the circumstances. Each of the branches of the Legislature and the judiciary are represented in the tribunal in equal proportions. The composition of the judicial part of the commission looks to a selection from different parts of the republic, while it is thought to be free from any preponderance of supposable bias, and the addition of the necessary constituent part of the whole commission in order to obtain an uneven number is left to an agency the furthest removed from prejudice of any existing obtainable one. It would be difficult, if not impossible, we think, to establish a tribunal that could be less the subject of party criticisms than such a one. The principle of its constitution is so absolutely fair that we are unable to perceive how the most extreme partisan can assail it unless he prefers to embark his wishes upon the stormy sea of unregulated procedure, hot disputes, and dangerous results that can neither be measured nor defined, rather than upon the fixed and regular course of law that insures peace and the order of society, whatever party may be disappointed in its hopes. The unfortunate circumstance that no provision had been made on the subject before election has greatly added to the difficulties of the committees in dealing with it, inasmuch as many of the people of the country, members of the respective political parties, will, perhaps, look with jealousy upon any measure that seems to involve even the possibility of the defeat of their wishes, but it has also led the committees to feel that their members are bound by the highest duty in such a case to let no bias or party feeling stand in the way of a just, equal, and peaceful measure for extricating the question from the embarrassments that at present surround it.

In conclusion, we respectfully beg leave to impress upon Congress the necessity of speedy determination upon this subject. It is impossible to estimate the material loss the country daily sustains from the existing state of uncertainty. It directly and powerfully tends to unsettle and paralyze business, to weaken public and private credit, and to create apprehensions in the minds of the people that disturb the peaceful tenor of their ways and happiness. It does far more. It tends to bring republican institutions into discredit and to create doubts of the success of our form of government and of the perpetuity of the republic. All considerations of interest, of patriotism, and of justice unite in demanding of the law-making power a measure that will bring peace and prosperity to the country, and show that our republican institutions are equal to any emergency. And in this connection we cannot restrain from the expression of our satisfaction that your committees, composed of equal numbers of opposing parties, have fortunately been able to do what has been attempted in vain heretofore—almost unanimously agree upon the plan considered by them all to be just, wise, and efficient. We accordingly recommend the proposed act to the patriotic and just judgment of Congress.

FULL TEXT OF THE BILL.

The following is the full text of the bill agreed upon by the joint committee:

A BILL to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877.

Be it Enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress Assembled, That the Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock, post meridian, on the first Thursday in February, A. D. 1877, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in alphabetical order of the States, beginning with "A," and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two houses, shall make a list of votes as they shall appear from the said certificates, and the votes having been ascertained and counted, as in this act provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote and the names of the persons (if any) elected, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of persons elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the journals of the two houses. Upon such reading of any such certificate or paper, when there shall be only one return from a State, the President of the Senate shall call for objections, if any. Every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely and without argument the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one member of the House of Representatives. When all objections so made to any vote or paper from any State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall in like manner submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision, and no electoral vote or votes from any State from which but one return has been received shall be excepted to except by the affirmative vote of the two houses. When the two houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the question submitted.

SEC. 2. That if more than one return or paper purporting to be the return from any State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes given at the last preceding election for President and Vice President in such State, unless they shall be duplicates of the same return, all such returns and papers shall be opened by him in the presence of the two houses when met as aforesaid, and read by the tellers, and all such returns and papers shall thereupon be submitted to the judgment and decision, as to which is the true and lawful electoral vote of such State, of a commission constituted as follows, namely: During the session of each house on the Tuesday next preceding the first Thursday in February, 1877, each house shall, by viva voce vote, appoint five of its members, who, with five Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, to be ascertained as hereinafter provided, shall constitute a commission for the decision of all questions upon or in respect of such double returns named in this section. On Tuesday next preceding the first Thursday in February, A. D. 1877, or as soon thereafter as may be, the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, now assigned to the First, Third, Eighth and Ninth districts, shall select, in such manner as a majority of them shall deem fit, another of the Associate Justices of said court, which five persons shall be members of said commission, and the person longest in commission of the said Justices shall be President of said commission. The members of said commission shall respectively take and subscribe to the following oath: "I, ———, do solemnly swear, or affirm, as the case may be, that I will impartially examine and consider all questions submitted to the commission of which I am a member, and a true judgment give thereon, agreeable to the constitution and laws, so help me God," which oath shall be filed with the Secretary of the Senate. When the commission shall have been thus organized, it shall not be in the power of either house to dissolve the same or to withdraw any of its members, but if any such Senator or member shall die, or become physically unable to perform the duties required by this act, the fact of such death or physical inability shall be by said commission, before it shall proceed further, communicated to the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, which body shall immediately and without debate proceed by viva voce vote to fill the place so vacated, and the person so appointed shall take and subscribe to the oath hereinbefore prescribed, and shall become a member of said commission; and in like manner, if any of the said Justices of the Supreme Court shall die or become physically incapable of performing the duties required by this act, the others of said Justices, members of the said commission, shall immediately appoint another Justice of said court a member of said commission, and in such appointments regard shall be had to impartiality and freedom from bias sought by the original appointments to said commission, who shall thereupon immediately take and subscribe to the oath hereinbefore subscribed, and become a member of said commission to fill the vacancy so occasioned. All the certificates and papers purporting to be the certificates of the electoral votes of each State shall be opened in alphabetical order of the States, as provided in section 1 of this act, and when there shall be more than one such certificate or paper, as the certificates and papers from such States, they shall be so opened, and, excepting the duplicates of the same returning, they shall be read by the tellers, and thereupon the President of the Senate shall call for objections, if any. Every objection shall be made in writing and shall state clearly and concisely and without argument the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one member of the House of Representatives before the same shall be received. When all such objections so made to any certificate, vote, or paper from a State shall have been received and read, all such certificates, votes and papers so objected to, and all papers accompanying the same, together with such objections, shall be forthwith submitted to the said commission, which shall proceed to consider the same, with the same powers, if any, now possessed for that purpose by the two houses acting separately or together, and by a majority of votes decide whether any and what votes from such States are the votes provided for by the constitution of the United States, and how many and what persons were duly appointed electors in such State, and may therein take into view such petitions, depositions, and other papers, if any, as shall by the constitution and now-existing law be competent and pertinent in such consideration, which decision shall be made in writing, stating briefly the ground thereof, and signed by the members of said commission agreeing therein; whereupon the two houses shall again meet, and such decision shall be read and entered in the journal of each house, and the counting of the votes shall proceed in conformity therewith, unless, upon objection made thereto in writing by at least five Senators and five Members of the House of Representatives, the two houses shall separately concur in ordering otherwise, in which case such concurrent order shall govern. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from one State shall have been finally disposed of.

SEC. 3. That while the two Houses shall be in meeting as provided in this act, no debate shall be allowed, and no question shall be put by the presiding officer to either House except on a motion to withdraw, and he shall have power to preserve order.

SEC. 4. That when the two houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of the said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once, but after such debate shall have lasted two hours it shall be the duty of each house to put the main question without further debate.

SEC. 5. That at such joint meeting of the two houses seats shall be provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair; for the Speaker, immediately on his left; the Senators in the body of the hall, upon the right of the presiding officer; for the Representatives in the body of the hall not provided for the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, at the Clerk's desk; for other officers of the two houses, in front of the Clerk's desk and upon each side of the Speaker's platform. Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of the electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared, and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise, under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either house, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such house not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and while the question is being considered by said commission, either house may proceed with its legislative or other business.

SEC. 6. That nothing in this act shall be held to impair or affect any right now existing under the constitution and laws to question, by proceedings in the judicial courts of the United States, the right or title of the person who shall be declared elected, or who shall claim to be President or Vice President of the United States, if any such right exists.

SEC. 7. That said commission shall make its own rules, keep a record of its proceedings, and shall have power to employ such persons as may be necessary for the transaction of its business and the execution of its powers.

NOT far from Salzburg, Austria, is a great mountain which consists of nothing but beautiful marble. The stonemasons cut out blocks and columns of it, take them to the great city, and build palaces of them, while the chips are used to make playing marbles for the young folks.

STOP smoking. It is stated as a fact that a cigar contains acetic, formic, butyric, valeric, proprionic, prussic and carbolic acids, creosote, ammonia, sulphuretted hydrogen, pyridine, viridine, picoline, nicotine, rubidine, cabbagine, and several other things which are not healthy.

THE fur trade of Petersburg, Va., has lately grown into great proportions, and forms one of the most important branches of business. Beavers, foxes, muskrats, minks, coons, and rabbits furnish the largest quantity of pelts, and it is surprising to know how many of these animals are killed in the vicinity.

WHO says that the fires of patriotism are smoldering? A patriot in Rutland, Vt., did his whole duty on election day. He not only voted, but he traded horses nine times during the day, and at nightfall had the same horse with which he started at dawn. He also had $45 in cash, a watch worth $25, a double-barreled shot-gun, and four bushels of potatoes.

A FARMER measured the water consumed daily by a lot of cattle one hot summer. As it had to be pumped for them, the quantity used was easily ascertained. The result of his observations was that thirty-six head of cattle consumed daily about 900 gallons of water. According to this estimate the supply of water amounted to about twenty-five gallons per head.

LONDON is, at present, unusually afflicted with small-pox. The three hospitals at Hampstead, Homerton, and Stockwell, devoted to this disease are full, and contain in the aggregate 6,000 patients. In the fever hospital at Homerton, accommodating 800, has been devoted to the sick with small-pox, and others in Fulham and Deptford are now being built for the purpose.

THE city of Munich has hitherto had a bad reputation as regards healthiness, and its death rate has been exceptionally high. The Town Council have now resolved that if that state of things continue it shall, at all events, not be their fault, and improvements of every kind are being planned with this view. A new central slaughter-house is the first of these which has been accomplished.

DR. HARRY SENT, of the East India Company, speaking of the graceful carriage of Hindoo girls, believes that the exercise of carrying small vessels of water on the head without using the hands to balance might be introduced advantageously into boarding-schools and private families, and that it would entirely supersede the present machinery of dumb-bells, calisthenics, skipping-ropes, etc.

IT is an interesting fact that our word daughter, when traced back through the Greek thugater to its source in the Sanscrit duhitri, is found to be equivalent to milkmaid, showing that it was the duty of the Indian maidens to milk the cows. It was no doubt considered a highly honorable office, since the cow, the most valuable animal to a pastoral people, soon came to be endowed with supernatural attributes.

THE Boston Common Council have resolved to permit no more wrestling or boxing matches in that city. This action is the result of the death of a participant in a boxing exhibition.

THE INDIANAPOLIS

SENTINEL.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1877.

Every reader and thinking man in the state who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for at least one of the editions of the Sentinel. Farmers, Merchants and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL.

The Weekly Sentinel will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than Compare Favorably with any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be Newsy, Literary, and full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

TERMS.

Invariably cash in advance.

"Unquestionably the best sustained work of the kind in the World."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

ILLUSTRATED.

Notices of the Press.

The Magazine has attained in its one quarter century and more of existence to that point where it may be said of it, in the words of Dr. Johnson, "It is vain to blame and useless to praise." The lustre of its long-ago attained reputation has increased as the years have passed, and its future seems as bright if not brighter than at any time since the golden hue of prosperity settled around its later and better years.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Harper's Monthly is marked by the same characteristics which gave it circulation from the first with the better class of readers. It combines reading matter with illustrations in a way to make clear and vivid the facts presented. Pictures merely designed to catch the eye of the ignorant are never inserted.—Chicago Journal.

TERMS:

Postage free to all Subscribers in the United States.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, one year $4 00

$4.00 includes prepayment of U. S. postage by the publishers.

Subscriptions to Harper's Magazine, Weekly, and Bazar, to one address for one year, $7 00; postage free.

An Extra Copy of either the Magazine, Weekly, or Bazar will be supplied gratis for every Club of five subscribers at $4 00 each in one remittance; or six, Copies for $20 00, without extra copy; postage free.

Back numbers can be supplied at any time.

The Volumes of the Magazine commence with the Numbers of June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first number of the current volume, and back numbers will be sent accordingly.

A complete set of HARPER'S MAGAZINE, now comprising 53 volumes, in neat cloth binding, will be sent by express or freight at expense of purchaser, for $2.25 per volume. Single volumes by mail, post paid $3.00. Cloth cases for binding 58 cents, by mail post paid.

A complete analytical index to the first fifty volumes of HARPER'S MAGAZINE has just been published, rendering available for reference the vast and varied wealth of information which constitutes this periodical a perfect illustrated literary cyclopedia. 8vo, cloth $3.00; half calf $5.25. Sent postage paid.

The Iron Rail.

A spicy sketch descriptive of a trip over the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe Railroad and of the beauties, scenery and pleasure resorts of the Rocky Mountains, by "Nym Crinkle," the musical and dramatic critic of the New York World, sent free on application, together with the San Juan guide, maps and time table of this new and popular route from Kansas City and Atchison to Pueblo, Denver and all points in Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and the San Juan Mines. The finest line of Pullman Sleepers on the continent between the Missouri River and the Rocky Mountains without change.

Address,
T. J. ANDERSON,
Gen. Pass. Ag't.
Topeka, Kan

DURING the campaign a great deal was heard of Southern war claims, and the great ado made in the matter is said to have secured the republicans their small majority in Ohio. Among the bills referred to on the stump was one to pay Dr. J. Milton Best, of Paducah, Ky., for damages inflicted by the troops in demolishing his buildings to give free range to artillery. This bill was referred to as an instance of how the "rebels" wanted to make the nation pay for the battle-fields on which they were whipped. Now that the campaign is over, Mitchell, of Oregon, a republican senator, brings that identical bill up in the Senate.

"What have become of the singers?" asks the Montreal Gazette. Ah, yes; you can't see from where you are sitting; move up toward this end of the pew and we will show you. That is the soprano, the one nearest the end of choir, letting the young fellow with the camel's hair moustache and curling hair squeeze her hand. He is the tenor. There is the alto in the opposite corner, and the meek looking little man with the burnside whiskers, who is feeding her with gumdrops, and nervously looking out for his wife's eye (the big, high-complexioned woman near the third window on the right hand side of the church, with a wart on her check) is the baritone, and the burly-looking fellow, who looks like a Barbary cost pirate, and who has just stepped around behind the organ to take a drink with the blower, that is the basso. Oh, if you want to know what has become of the singers ask us.

Going to Grow up With the Country.

The other day, while I was seated in the Kennerd House, Cleveland, waiting for supper and train time, the omnibus backed to the door, the porter ran out and a boy about thirteen years old desended the vehicle with an air of considerable importance. He handed his old satchel to the porter and walked down to the office without looking to the right or left. His shoes were old and worn, his garments were coarse and ill-fitting, his hair was log and uneven and as he halted before the stove for a moment to warm his hands he pulled out a half-consumed cigar form his pocket and lighted it.

The porter came along at a slow pace a look of disgust on his face and as he reached the stove he droped the way-worn stachel at the boys feet.

'Here! you look out! that satchel contains wealth, and you'd better be a little harmonious in handling it. Is Kennard at home?'

The porter gasped for breath and pointed to the clerk behind the desk.

The boy walked up to the register, picked up a pen and laborously wrote: 'Jim rite, from New York.' Wiping off the pen on his elbow he remarked to the clerk:

'Supper for one is how much?'

'Seventy-five cents.'

'Whew! but that's hard pan, that is! After a fellow has been putting up at the Fifth Avenue for a year, these western prices knock him down. Only seventy-five cents, he? Can you change a dollar bill?'

The clerk handed him back two shillings, and the boy re-ighed his stub, walked back to where the porter had taken a seat, and in a tone of reproach observed:

"There's that there satchel right where you deoped it. You leave it there and let it get stolen if you want this house sued for $50,000 damage!"

The porter hesitated a little and finally took the satchel to the cloakroom and procured a check.

'That's more like bizz-te business. You probably thought I was some one horse member of the Legislature from some scrub town, but that's where you got left. Well, you find me one of the daily papers.'

Jim sat down near the stove, and the porter, laboring under a seeming magnetic influence, hunted up a paper and handed it to him.—Ex.

A Jewel of a Wife.

One of the Danbury druggists has a wife who is a jewel. She loses no opportunity to help her husband in his business, and does not hesitate to undertake any work which will be of assistance to him. The other day he prepared the ingredients for five hundred boxes of seidlitz powders. She offered to put them in the papers and boxes, but he thought she had enough else to do. She preisted, however, and he took the stuff home, and she went to work and worked as she always does when working for him—throwing her whole soul into the task. At night she had the powders done up and neatly boxed, and he was delighted. They were taken to the store next morning, when the druggist accidently discovered that the blue-paper mixture had been neatly folded in the white paper, and the white paper mixture had been as carefully enchained in the blue papers. It took the druggist some fifteen minutes to comprehend the full extent of the affair, as there was five hudred boxes in all. Then he took off his hat and deliberately jumped in to it. After which he felt so much better that he went home and went to bed. But it was full two hours later before she could learn from him what had happened, so profoundly was he affected.—Danbury News.

Nothing Lost by Christian Charity.

One of those toil-hardened, true-hearted chaps often read of in romance made his appearance on the Campus Martius yesterday, and his sympathies were at once aroused by the sight of three or four old men standing around with their buck-saws wating for work.

"I'll be hanged if it isn't tough," he replied, when they told him they hadn't had any work for a month. "How would you like some oysters?"

They smacked their lips by way of reply, and he gathered up a gang of eight, marched them to a restaurant and ordered oysters-stews for each one.

"It just does my soul good to see them eat!" he said to the ownes of the place as the eight got at work.

"Yes, it's a beautiful sight," was the reply.

"It makes me feel good in here," continued the stranger, laying his hand on his heart

"A good deed brings it own reward," was the soft answer of the restuturateur as he calculated his profits.

"I can't rest here. I must do further good," said the stranger, and he rushed out and brought in three negros, a chimney-sweep, two boys, and an old woman, and ordered more oysters.

The fifteen people went for oyster-soup in a manner to amaze, and their guardian nudged the restaurateur in the ribs and said:

"See the gentle lambs! Oh that I could feed the poor of all America.

"You are a good man, and Heaven will reward you," replied the proprietor as he filled the dishes up again.

The stranger said he wanted to bring in just five more, so as to say he had fed an even score, and he rushed out after them, while the restaurateur sent out after more oysters and crackers. He was last seen cimbing into a farmer's sleigh on state street, and guiding his team to the west. The fifteen in the restaurant licked their plates clean and departed in joyful procession, and the last one had passed out before the man who furnished the soup had got through waiting for the return of the big hearted stanger. There were oaths slang phrases, and watch words, and expressions delivered in the purest of English, but what mattered it to the fifteen soup-devourers, who drew up in line opposite, and "Resolved, That them oysters just touched the right spot."—Detroit Free Press.

THE ALLIES OF DEMOCRACY.

For long years the leaderless, impracticable, purposeless Democracy wandered in the wilderness—now they floundered in the Slough of Despond; now panted at the foot of the Hill of Difficulty, now shuddered before the Cave of Giant Despair. At last however, they seem to stand on solid ground and are permitted to feast their eyes on the Promised Land which, perhaps, they may not enter, but which to them never seemed so inviting; it is so near and yet so far. In this day of their rejoicing these wayworn pilgrims fail to comprehend the situation and render not honor to whom honor is due, if they hesitate to acknowledge that not to them, after all, but to their allies in the camp of the enemy, are they indebted for their present vantage ground. It is an open secret that the Republican leaders of the last eight years, many of them renegade Demcrats, are really responsible for the hopeful condition of the Democracy to-day. Seymour may have planted and Tilden watered, but Grant and the adventurers by whom he has been surrounded have given the increase. It is Grant and Morton and Logan and Chandler and Cameron who have made more than half of the States Democratic and given us assurance that a Democratic administration of the general government is not only possible, but probable.

The Republican party came out of the war with such prestige as no party ever had before. Democratic blundering and treason gave it the government in 1861, and it had leaders who were quick to take advantage of an enemy's weakness. It fought the anti-slavery battle, and won it. It fought the war for the Union, and saved the Union. It gave to our country the brightest names of soldiers and statesmen that adorn the pages of our history. The close of the war found the Republican party with the youth, the conscience and the sentiment of the nation in its ranks. The man who had freed the slaves and preserved the unity of the country were then its leaders. Lincoln still occpied the Presidential chair; Seward and Stanton were in the Cabinet; Sumner and and Schurz and Trumbull were in the Senate; Stevens, the great Commoner, was in the House, with a strong majority at his back. Andrew and Curtin and the other great war Governors were at home stimulating the loyalty of the people and upholding the hands of a Republican administration in every rightful undertaking. The whole country was alive with the enthusiasm born of success at war, and the Republican leaders had only to put in their sickle and the harvest fell before it in honors and emoluments. On the other hand the Democrats were disorganized, demoralized, discordant. With few exceptions, to be a Democrat was to be suspected of treason. There is too much truth in Colonel Ingersoll's pithy saying that "whenever you found a Democrat with arms in his hands you found a rebel, and wherever you found a rebel without arms you found a Democrat." It was a party without a platform and without leaders; its principles vanished in the smoke of battles and its able men could be counted on the fingers of one hand. Never was there more unequal combat than was joined in the first Presidential contest after the war.

How different the situation to-day! Some of the greatest men of the Republican party lived not longer after garnering the fruitage of the vineyard in which they toiled, but before they died were driven from the field which they had reclaimed. Others are now enlisted under a banner which once appeared to them as the symbol of all that was bad in politics and in conflict with loyalty. A large majority of these states have Democratic Governors and Democratic Legislatures; the Republican majority in the Senate has dwindled to a point so fine that soon it will be invisible; one Democratic House of Representatives sits in the Capitol and another is about to replace it; a straight Democratic presidential ticket has received a popular majority of nearly three hundred thousand, and a Democratic President is about to be inaugurated—and for all this, we have said, the Democrats may thank the men who have assumed the lordship of the Republican party. The discordance of the elements composing the rank and file of the Democratic party and the blundering of its leaders, which has become proverbial, would long ago have consigned it to the limbo of dead parties, but for crimes committed in the name of Republicanism. We repeat that Grant, with his nepotism, his cupidity, his subserviency to rings, and his low and crude ideas of governmental policy; Morton, with his gospel of hate and an ambition that would rather rule in hell than serve in heaven; Chandler, with a vision having no wider horizon than his own petty purposes, and Cameron, with his revolutionary ideal government, under which men shall be bought or bayoneted into campliance whith his wishes—these are the men who have breathed life into the dry bones of Democracy. Reinforcements have flocked into the Democratic camp, not becaused the recruits preferred to fight under the Democratic standard, but because this last resort was necessary to bring the Republican party to its senses. Republicanism will rally the masses again when its rogues who now lead it shall be ordered to the rear under arrest, and honest men shall come to the front, as of old. Meanwhile its worst enemies, the most effective allies of the Democratic leaders, are to be found in the high places of the nation where Republicans have placed and now keep them.

The use of a pleasant perfume is indicative of taste and refinement. Davenport keeps a very fine assortment, among which the "Clolo Blossom" ranks very high and is much admired.

The funeral services of the unidentified [illegible] that [illegible] week. [illegible] bodies were buried in one grave.... The [illegible] of Ashtabula, assisted by two Episcopal ministers from Cleveland, held joint services with the Masonic order at the grave. These bodies still remain in the vault in the hope that their friends may be able to identify them by pieces of clothing clinging to them.

The long drought in California has been succeeded by copious rains, and there are cheerful reports of the crop prospects from all parts of the State.... Chicago papers announce the failure of W. F. Keen, Cooke & Co., one of the oldest book firms in the city.... Charles Collins, Chief Engineer of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad, committed suicide at Cleveland, a few days ago. More or less blame for the Ashtabula disaster had been placed at his hands, and it is supposed that the weight of censure which he felt sure the public laid upon him led him to commit the tragic deed.

A report reaches Sioux City that a train coming out of the Black Hills was recently captured by Crazy Horse's band of Indians, and that twenty men who were with the train were massacred.

Chicago elevators, as per official returns, contain 3,556,733 bushels of wheat; 2,051,000 bushels of corn; 641,306 bushels of oats; 234,946 bushels of rye, and 1,060,496 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 7,545 471 bushels, against 4,551,427 bushels at this period last year.

Detective James Brooks, of the Government Secret Service, who has been for some time diligently pursuing the manufacturers and shovers of the queer in the West, has just made a rich haul in Cincinnati. Over 100 finely-executed plates were captured. Among them were plates for the manufacture of $10 notes on the banks at Richmond, Lafayette and Muncie, Ind. He also recovered 40.000 50-cent pieces. These pieces so closely resembled the genuine that none but experts could distinguish the difference between them.

The people of Chicago have become thoroughly alarmed at the dreadful ravages of scarlet fever and diphtheria in that city, and measures are to be taken to arrest, if possible, the further progress of these dangerous maladies.

THE SOUTH.

Hon. George Wells, for the past fifty years President of the Farmers' and Planters' Bank of Annapolis, Md., is a defaulter in the sum of $65,000.

The lower house of the Florida Legislature has passed an act to declare and establish the appointment by the State of Florida of electors for President and Vice President.... Three men were killed and several dangerously wounded, near Little Rock, Ark., a few days ago, by the explosion of a boiler in a shingle factory.

POLITICAL.

Alvin Saunders has been elected by the Nebraska Legislature to succeed Mr. Hitchcock in the United States Senate.

The Tennessee Legislature, on the 73d ballot, elected James G. Bailey to the vacancy in the United States Senate caused by the death of Andrew Johnson.... The Legislature of Massachusetts has chosen George F. Hoar as the successor of Mr. Boutwell in the Senate from that State.

It is said that the method of selecting the Supreme Court wing of the Presidential tribunal appears to have been one of the most difficult problems to solve satisfactorily with which the joint committee found themselves confronted. It was known or supposed, says a Washington correspondent, that Justices Clifford and Field had supported Tilden and Hendricks at the last election. It was also known and believed that the other Justices, with the exception of Davis, had supported Hayes and Wheeler. The position of Justice Davis, so far as political bias was concerned, was the subject of much discussion and doubt. The Republicans generally regarded him as a Democrat, and the Democrats considered him an independent Republican with Democratic proclivities. If the five senior Justices were taken the commission would consist of Clifford, Swayne, Miller, Davis and Field. It was claimed that, while this should be regarded as eminently fair, it did not suit the Republicans, who believe that what chances of bias there were were against them. Finally the geographical idea was suggested; and further, that it would hardly be fair to take Justices in the States in which the candidates resided. The Chief Justice and Justice Swayne reside in Ohio, and Justice Hunt in New York. It was then proposed that Justices Clifford and Swayne be taken, and that these should choose two others, and that the four thus chosen should select the fifth. This did not suit all around, and the proposition ensued that Justice Clifford, who is the senior Justice, and who resides in Maine, should be taken as one, Justice Strong, who resides in Philadelphia, and Justice Miller, who lives in Iowa, and Justice Field, of California, as the three others and these four should name the fifth member of the tribunal. This proposition was at last accepted, and it is regarded probable that the fifth member to be chosen will be Justice Swayne or Davis.

John R. McPherson, Democrat, has been elected to succeed Mr. Frelinghuysen in the United States Senate from New Jersey.

J. W. Laswell, one of the Oregon Democratic candidates for Presidential Electors at the late election, testified before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections last week. He went to the meeting of the Oregon Electoral Committee, because he understood the Republican electors were going to take the electoral certificates from Cronin by force. Witness understood Secretary of State Chadwick to say, as he handed the envelope containing the certificates of the electors to Cronin: "Gentlemen, here are your certificates." He heard the Republican electors ask Cronin for their certificates, and Cronin replied "I will see hell freeze over before I will give them up."

Mr. Eaton, of Connecticut, was the only Democratic Senator who voted against the Arbitration bill. The announcement of the fact in the Connecticut Legislature was received with hisses from the Democratic side.

WASHINGTON.

Charles Fisher, who was recently convicted of purloining papers from the office of the District Attorney, in the District of Columbia, and subsequently pardoned and conveyed by his friends to the lunatic asylum, has made his escape from that institution.

The breaking up of the ice in the Potomac, last week, did considerable damage. Several schooners and tugs were sunk and the wharves at Washington sustained serious injury.

A Washington dispatch says the President has expressed his intention of signing the bill providing for counting the electoral vote, in case it passes both houses of Congress.

The Washington Chronicle has suspended publication.... The State Department has received notice that the German Government has determined to abolish what are called the honorary Consulates in the United States, and to establish and maintain no consulates henceforth except those to which a fixed salary is attached.... Beverly Nash (colored) a Hayes elector in South Carolina at the recent election, testified before the Senate South Carolina Investigating Committee, the other day, that he was offered $20,000 by one Childs, a banker of Columbia, to cast his vote for Tilden in the electoral college. Childs denies the story, and says Nash manufactured it out of whole cloth.

The House Judiciary Committee have unanimously resolved that articles of impeachment ought to be preferred against George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy.... The House Sergeant-at-Arms arrived at Washington from New Orleans last week, having in charge Cassanave and Kenner, members of the Returning Board.

A Washington telegram of the 24th says: "President Grant gives neither aid nor [illegible] unable to make no final decision until all the evidence is before him, and until the reports of the Southern committees have been presented to and considered by Congress. He is weary of this eternal row."... Gen. Belknap, who has been waiting in Washington ten months for trial since his indictment, has addressed a letter to the District Attorney, informing him that he should apply directly to the Court for an immediate trial.... The House has practically decided to act unfavorably upon all bills which propose to repeal taxation. A bill providing for the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax on State banks, reported adversely from the Banking and Currency Committee, has been tabled.... Action was taken in the House the other day which will probably result in preventing the Texas Pacific Railroad bill from seeing daylight again during the present session. The bill was referred to the committee of the whole, and a two-thirds vote will be necessary to get it before the House again.

The Secretary of the Treasury to-day issued the thirty-eighth call for the redemption of $10,000,000 of 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November. The principal and interest will be paid on and after the 24th of April next, and interest will cease on that day. The following are the descriptions of the bonds: Coupon bonds, $100, Nos. 21,351 to 25,508, both inclusive; $500, Nos. 26,701 to 31,500, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 62,401 to 70,550, both inclusive; total, $2,000,000. Registered bonds, $50, Nos. 301 to 400, both inclusive; $100, Nos. 4,501 to 5,300, both inclusive; $500, Nos. 3,251 to 3,600, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 12,001 to 13,350, both inclusive; $5,000, Nos. 4,751 to 5,100, both inclusive; $10,000, Nos. 8,301 to 9,800; total, $8,000,000.

J. B. Denbery, telegraph operator at Tallahassee, Florida, was examined by the House Committee on Privileges last week, and, in reply to the question, "Do you remember any telegrams passing between Z. Chandler and Gov. Stearns between the 8th and 12th of November?" answered that the first telegram of which he knew was from Z. Chandler to Gov. Stearns, and was in substance as follows: "We are absolutely sure of so many electoral votes for Hayes—(witness, did not remember the number)—and we must have Louisiana, South Carolina and Florida, by fair means or otherwise"—he could not give the exact language of Chandler. Also telegraphed Gov. Stearns in substance: "Send courier to each county and secure returns—they must be made to show a majority for Hayes." Z. Chandler also telegraphed Gov. Stearns: "William E. Chandler leaves to-night for Philadelphia on important business." Between the 8th and 12th of November, Frank B. Sherman, engaged with Gov. Stearns, handed him a telegram for transmission, signed by the latter, and addressed to Z. Chandler, in which mention was made of a train containing courier sent out for returns being Ku-Kluxed, followed by the remark: "We cannot carry the State for Hayes unless we have troops and money immediately." These were not the exact words, but the substance. Secretary Chandler denies that he ever wrote the dispatches in question.

GENERAL.

The President has given his reasons for not upholding the Packard Government and dispersing the Nicholls Government in Louisiana. He referred to his experience in the prompt recognition of the Kellogg Government three years ago, and to the fact that he was not sustained by the Republican Senate or the Republican party at large, and said that this experience had suggested to him the propriety of proceeding with greater deliberation and caution in the present instance.

Recent commercial failures: Michigan Salt and Lumber Company, Saginaw, Mich.; Keystone Burial Case Company, Sterling, Ill., liabilities, $300,000; L. J. Bigger, packer, Kansas City, Mo., $500,000; J. A serious war has broken out in Pennsylvania between the Atlantic and Pacific and Western Union Telegraph Companies, and the employes of the latter corporation have been amusing themselves by cutting down the poles and destroying the wires of the Atlantic and Pacific.

Judge David Davis, whom the Illinois Legislature has selected as the successor of Mr. Logan in the United States Senate, was born in Maryland, in 1815, graduated at Kenyon College, studied law in Massachusetts, and in 1835 removed to Illinois, settled in Bloomington, and was admitted to practice there. In 1844 he was elected to the State Legislature, and in 1847 to the convention which framed the State constitution, which was the organic law of Illinois until the adoption of the constitution of 1871. In 1848 he was elected a Circuit Judge of the State, and filled the position by re-election until called to his present post, to which he was appointed in 1862 He was the intimate friend of Mr. Lincoln, rode the circuit with him for many years, and was a delegate at large to the Chicago Convention of 1860.... Gen. John McDonald, one of the leading members of the Missouri whisky ring, has been pardoned by President Grant.

A movement has been set on foot by a large number of bankers, merchants, and other citizens of New York, for arranging a settlement between the defaulting Southern States and their creditors. At a meeting held the other day, at which William Cullen Bryant presided, resolutions of sympathy and good will were adopted, and a committee of arbiters, consisting of five disinterested Bank Presidents of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, was appointed to confer with the authorities of the defaulting States and devise equitable terms of settlement.

FOREIGN.

The feeling in London seems to be that Turkey must paddle her own canoe henceforth, without relying upon England. The Times thinks the peace may be maintained, notwithstanding the failure of the conference.... Cuban advices state that two important engagements have recently been fought on the island, the patriots coming off victorious in both affairs.... The rinderpest has again broken out in Europe.

A Berlin dispatch says Russia is beginning to represent to the powers that, the demands of the conference having been rejected, it devolves upon Europe to take more forcible proceedings. Should Europe, as is certain, find it impossible to agree on joint action, Russia will be able to declare that the failure of the conference is the defeat of Europe, not of Russia.

After the formal dissolution of the conference at Constantinople, the Russian representative, Gen. Ignatieff, publicly declared that if Turkey should disregard the armistice or take any action hostile to Montenegro and Servia, or if the Christian inhabitants of Turkey should be subjected to any hardships, Europe would treat such proceedings as provocations, and would consider what course ought to be adopted.... Travel on the railway between Shanghai and Woosung, China, is stopped by native mobs, the rails obstructed and the workmen assaulted. The Chinese dislike to all material improvements is the cause of the disturbance.

Russia, according to a cable dispatch, is considering the feasibility of an internal loan of 200,000,000 roubles ($100,000,000). Russia is but little better off, financially, than Turkey, but on account of the extent and resources of the empire, and the faith of the people in their Czar and their hatred of the Turk, there will probably be no difficulty in raising the amount, even without the aid of foreign capitalists.... A cable dispatch reports that the Turkish Ambassador has given Austria assurances that the Porte intends to make peace with Servia and Montenegro.... A terrible colliery disaster has occurred in England, causing the death of fifteen or twenty miners.

Reports from Cuba assert that negotiations between the Spaniards and insurgents have led to an agreement which will restore peace to that long-distracted island. The accounts are lacking in specific details, but the salient point of the bargain appears to be that some system of self-government shall be established, at the head of which a Spanish Captain General shall remain for five years. After that the Cubans will be allowed to elect their own Governor.... The deposed Chief Justice of Mexico, and constitutionally Acting President, Iglesias, has arrived at San Francisco by Pacific Mail steamer.... A Berlin dispatch says: "It is understood that after Ignatieff has presented his report Russia will address a communication to the powers explaining her position and appealing to their sense of honor to resent the affront offered to all Europe by the Porte, either by collective action or by empowering Russia to act for them. If this effort fails, Russia will next appeal to the allied empires. Should they not make satisfactory response, then, it is affirmed, she will act alone."

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Debate in the House on the Resolution Ordering the Arrest of the Louisiana Returning Board.

Mr. Lynde, from the Judiciary Committee, made a report relative to the refusal of Wells, Anderson, Cassanave, and Kenner, members of the Louisiana Returning Board, to produce before the Committee on Elections in Louisiana certain papers demanded by said committee.

The report concludes with a resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody and bring before the bar of the House the above-named gentlemen.

Mr. Frye, a member of the Judiciary Committee, said when that report was agreed to in the committee there was no Republican member of the committee present. For his part he regarded the doctrine enunciated in it as a monstrous one. Under it there was no sovereignty anywhere in the country that was not subject to be called before a committee of the House and compelled to produce its original records. He held, on the contrary, that Congress had no more to do with the Returning Board of Louisiana than he as an individual had. It seemed that nothing was sacred from the Democratic investigating committees. Even to-day the committee of the House was committing the indecency of demanding from the National Republican Committee its whole manner of conducting a national campaign, its whole correspondence, all its telegrams, all its money, collections, etc. He was happy to say, as a member of that committee, that he had advised the putting in of everything, letters, telegrams, etc., for he knew perfectly well that there was nothing in them that would indicate fraud in Louisiana, Florida, or South Carolina. He knew that that committee believed the Republicans had carried these three States honestly and fairly, and that they would be counted for R. B. Hayes unless the Democrats of those States and of the United States should steal by fraud the votes of those States. He hoped that the galleries would not help the Democratic side of the House in this debate.

Mr. Luttrell—I do not think the gentleman has the right to charge the Democratic party with stealing when his Republican committees robbed the poor orphans and widows in the departments to carry on the campaign.

Mr. Frye—I did not know when I gave the gentleman from California liberty to ask a question that he wanted to interject a little demagogical stump speech that would meet the applause of the galleries on that side.

Mr. Luttrell—Do you deny that it is so? You were on the Republican National Committee and you know that the poor widows and orphans of the departments were made to pay for the campaign.

Mr. Frye—There is a committee of members of the House—intelligent members of the House—which is investigating that very subject. The committee will find out and answer the gentleman shortly.

Mr. Luttrell attempted to make another remark, but was informed by the Speaker that the gentleman from Maine was entitled to the floor.

"Well, sir," said Mr. Luttrell, "he bulldosed them."

Mr. Frye declared that the Republican Committee had never assessed, demanded, or asked contributions from such people as Mr. Luttrell had described. On the contrary, it had sent out a very polite request to the gentlemen who were commissioned by the President and confirmed by the Senate to help to run the campaign.

Mr. Luttrell—Was it not understood that every one who declined to pay an assessment should be discharged?

Mr. Frye—It was not so understood and there never was a man asked twice for a contribution.

Mr. Luttrell—Because if he refused he was discharged.

Mr. Frye—And there never was a suggestion that anybody should be punished for refusing to make a contribution, and there never was any contribution whatever to the Republican National Committee from the department clerks.

Mr. Cox, of New York, said that he would not follow the argument of the gentleman from Maine, which had been sufficiently answered by the badinage of the gentleman from California and by the ironical cheers of the galleries. The point before the House was simply whether the authority of the House should be disregarded by the Returning Board of Louisiana.

Mr. Kasson argued against the resolution because it would establish a precedent that a committee of the House could summon the Governor of a State to bring before it the papers of his office, and could bring that high official before the bar of the House, degrading him by asking him to stand at the bar and answer for contempt.

Mr. Hooker said that he would not follow the example of the gentleman from Maine (Frye) in seeking to avoid and evade the plain, simple proposition submitted by the report of the Judiciary Committee by stating with the emphasis which that gentleman did that he believed that for a series of years a great body of citizens of Louisiana had determined to deny the right of suffrage to a certain class which was entitled to it. What was there that surrounded the Returning Board of Louisiana with a sanctity which prevented it from giving to the committee of the House information as to whether there had been an honest vote in that State? Should it be said that the Returning Board had power to cast out votes from this or that parish and that there was no power which could investigate whether it had legally done so?

Mr. Garfield argued that the provisions of the constitution in regard to the Presidential election were imperative, and left no time or authority for a contest, and he challenged the naming of any statesman who had ever claimed that Congress had the power (within the five limitations mentioned by him) to go inside of a State to look at the vote. If the votes of one State were examined the votes of all States might be, and thus an election of President might be at any time rendered impossible. He appealed to the Democratic side of the House to pause before it committed this act of assault and destruction on whatever there was of sovereignty in the thirty-eight States of the Union.

Mr. Davis, of North Carolina, asked Mr. Garfield why it was that partisan committees had been sent to three Southern States by President Grant.

Mr. Garfield—If the galleries will stop their chatter I will answer. The gentlemen who went to Louisiana at the request of the President went there only as invited witnesses, and on our arrival we were asked by a Democratic committee to join them in helping to secure a count of all the votes actually cast. We answered that we were not there to secure anything, but [illegible] laws of that State. That was their business, not ours.

Mr. Davis—By what authority did the President invite them there?

Mr. Garfield—If the gentleman needs to know by what authority an American citizen travels anywhere in the United States, he will learn the authority by which I for one, went to Louisiana.

Mr. Davis—Why was it that four years ago your party threw out the electoral votes of several States?

Mr. Wood, of New York, regretted that the gentleman from Ohio (Garfield) had seen fit to close an otherwise admirable argument by a mere partisan allusion which was entirely unnecessary to the discussion of the present matter. He wanted no partisan influence or reflection to enter into the discussion; and wanted the question determined on principles higher than party principles. He held that the States had not the sole power to appoint electors. They had power to appoint them under certain restrictions, and it necessarily followed that it devolved on Congress to ascertain whether that power had been executed in accordance with law. The constitution placed certain limits on the States, not on Congress, as the gentleman from Ohio (Garfield) maintained.

Mr. Lawrence proceeded to argue against the resolution, and in the course of the discussion he was met with suggestions about the interference with the State authorities in the Oregon case. In response to these suggestions Mr. Garfield expressed his hope that if there was no right to inquire into that fraud without violating the constitution of Oregon, Mr. Tilden would be counted in.

The previous question was then seconded, and the resolution went over.

Regular Proceedings.

Friday, Jan. 19.—Senate.—Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, presented resolutions adopted by the Legislature of his State declaring that the certificates of electors from the various States are constitutional evidence of votes cast for President and Vice President, and must be counted.... The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was passed.... Louisiana was the theme of another long and lively debate in the Senate, in which Messrs. Bogy, of Missouri, and Sherman, of Ohio, were the chief participants. The former, in the course of his remarks, bitterly assailed the present State Government of Louisiana, and was loudly cheered by the galleries, whereupon, on motion of Mr. Edmunds, the gentlemen's gallery was cleared of spectators.

House.—Mr. Hunter, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a resolution discharging William Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Adopted without division.... J. Madison Wells and Thomas C. Anderson were brought before the bar of the House to answer for contempt of the privileges of the House. Having answered to the question propounded by the Speaker, that they would prefer to postpone their further answer until the remaining members of the Louisiana Returning Board should arrive in Washington, the matter was referred to the Judiciary Committee.... This was a gala day for the female suffragists in the House. By a preconcerted arrangement twenty-five petitions were presented by members from as many different States in behalf of a sixteenth amendment to the constitution guaranteeing that the franchise shall not be denied in any State on account of sex.

Saturday, Jan. 20.—Senate.—On motion of Mr. Edmunds, the bill reported by the special committee in regard to the count of the electoral vote was taken up. Mr. Edmunds proceeded to address the Senate at length, in advocacy of the measure. The following are some of the points made by him in favor of the bill: The purpose of the commission is to decide what is the electoral vote of a State. The election of the Congressional part of the commission by a viva voce vote renders intrigue impossible. The commission is large enough to prevent the possibility of corrupting influences. The Judges named are chosen according to geographical locality. To guard against any caviling, the oath makes partisanship impossible. The commission is not to decide a policy or determine a future. It is to pass on the irrevocable past. The commission is to discover what is the paper, if any, which speaks the constitutional views of a State, and how many and what persons were elected electors. The plan, he claimed, holds the scale of justice in absolute equality and gives nothing to either party. The commission is to determine whether the electoral vote was cast according to law. Mr. Edmunds neither affirmed nor denied that the commission had power to go behind the returns. He only said that, if Congress had the right to do this, the commission had, or would have, and that was one of the questions submitted to it. Mr. Edmunds affirmed that the constitutionality of the bill was without a doubt. He maintained the President of the Senate had not the right to count the votes. He insisted that by no legal interpretation could it be held that the opening of the vote implied the right to count. Nor was the Vice President a Judge. If that theory is admitted, the monstrous proposition must be conceded that the Vice President can try and determine the case and finally declare himself President of the United States. He argued that the constitution had been so framed that there is but one provision in it which executes itself. That related to the capture of slave property. Every other provision is only executed by Congressional regulations. The President is Commander-in-Chief, but every act is regulated by law. The functions of the judiciary are prescribed by the constitution, yet their procedure is entirely controlled by law. The constitution, which was adapted to all time, was framed so that Congressional legislation could adapt it to the varied emergencies of different generations. He denied the fact emphatically that the precedents show that the President of the Senate has counted the votes. On the contrary, Mr. Edmunds affirmed that, as an arithmetical proposition, he had never even counted one vote. The tellers were always appointed, and that from John Langdon to Schuyler Colfax the two houses dictated to the presiding officer of the Senate the course he should pursue.

House.—The House, in committee of the whole, devoted the day to debate, the speeches taking a wide political range.

Monday, Jan. 22.—Senate.—Mr. Morton addressed the Senate in opposition to the Compromise bill in regard to counting the electoral vote. He bitterly assailed the measure, characterizing it as "the product of the Mississippi plan," declaring that "the shadow of intimidation had been seen in the Senate chamber." He believed Gov. Hayes had been elected under the forms of law, and that should he be counted in there would no revolution. He argued in favor of the right of the President of the Senate to count the electoral votes. The President of the Senate did count the vote for seventy-two years; tellers were mere facilities for making calculations and keeping accounts. They counted what the President handed them down to count, and handing them down the certificates to count was the declaration of the vote. It continued from 1789 to 1861. Whether the electors were eligible was a matter left with the States under the injunctions of the constitution. The handing down of the certificate by the President of the Senate was a declaration of the vote contained in it. Very few Republicans respect the bill. It will be taken by Republicans, if taken at all, as a dose of castor oil. Senator Edmunds burned his ships behind him when he denied the power of the President of the Senate to count the votes in the absence of legislation. He thus seemed to make it a necessity to accept this bill. Mr. Morton's chief objection to the bill was that it gave the commission power to go behind the returns, and ascertain almost what electors were duly appointed, which he held to be unconstitutional, and regarded, besides, as a change of the existing status in favor of the Democrats. Mr. Frelinghuysen followed Mr. Morton in a written speech in favor of the bill. He argued in favor of the constitutionality of the measure, and denied that it gave the commission power to go back on the papers submitted to see how returning boards performed their duties. After Mr. Frelinghuysen took his seat nobody rose to speak. Mr. Edmunds wanted to push the bill to a third reading, as no amendments were offered. Mr. Sherman pleaded for delay. Mr. Mitchell moved to adjourn, and it was voted down. Mr. Edmunds explained the necessity of prompt decision for or against the bill. Mr. Sherman wanted the members of the committee to give their views upon it. Mr. Thurman explained that they had done so in their report, and its opponents should now make themselves heard. Mr. Cameron made a brief speech against the bill, denouncing it as a Democratic affair, gotten up by three or four Republicans to gratify their political opponents. Mr. Edmunds finally consented to let the bill go over.

House.—Mr. Frye introduced a bill for the trial of contested elections for the offices of President and Vice President. It provides that an election may be contested by any eligible person who has received the vote for President, and that the court for the trial of such contested election shall consist of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and six Judges of the Circuit or District Courts, to be selected by the Chief Justice. Bills were also introduced by Mr. Caulfield to regulate the distribution of troops in the District of Columbia, and by Mr. Taylor to reform the civil service.

Tuesday, Jan. 23.—Senate.—The Senate resumed consideration of the bill in regard to counting the electoral vote, and Mr. Sherman spoke in opposition to it. He said it was painful for him to dissent from the views of men whom he esteemed so highly, [illegible] the brief examination he had given the measure he thought it was his duty to oppose it. The bill was to make a court to decide a case already made up, and there were [illegible] with the constitution. Such a law as this was an evil example, and it could not be sustained under the constitution. Mr. Sherman argued that the bill was unconstitutional, and he particularly opposed the clause providing for the selection of five Judges of the Supreme Court as members of the commission. He also opposed the measure because it undertook to delegate powers conferred upon Congress to a commission. He argued that the bill was intended to apply to a case past, ended and concluded, which was therefore unconstitutional. Another feature of the bill which violated the spirit of the constitution was that authorizing the appointment of a committee of five members of each house as members of a commission, not to take depositions and report as other committees, but to be beyond the control of the two houses after being organized. He approved of only one feature of the bill, and that was that neither house had the right to reject the electoral vote of a State. Mr. Sherman was followed by Mr. Conkling in a two hours' speech in favor of the bill. Mr. Conkling contended that it was the right and duty of Congress to ascertain and verify the electoral votes, and declare the true result of Presidential elections, or else, by an assertion of the law-making power, to declare how those acts should be done. He denied that the power to count the votes was vested in the President of the Senate, and said if the constitution gave all the power to one man, it was not easy to see how Congress could witness or verify the act. To open certificates was purely a ministerial act, but to count the votes was something more. The good certificates must be assorted from the bad ones. Mr. Conkling spoke at some length as to the constitutionality of the bill, and asked, did not reason and fitness of things inform the Senate that our fathers intended that the power to vitiate, on the allegation of fraud or irregularity, the electoral vote of a State, and thus turn an election, should not be reposed in one man? They knew it would be safer reposed in the American Congress. It was not designed to commit this vast power to one man, especially as that man might be the sole judge in his own case. Mr. Conkling was unable, on account of illness, to conclude his remarks, and further consideration of the bill was postponed one day.

House.—The President sent to the House a message explaining his reasons for sending troops to the South just before the recent Presidential election. It was done in response to a resolution adopted in December last.... The resolutions reported by the Select Committee on Privileges, declaring that the President of the Senate has not, and that Congress has, the right to count and declare the electoral votes, were taken up. Prof. Seelye secured the floor and delivered a strong speech in support of the Compromise bill. He denounced the report of the Committee on Privileges, and warned the House not to indorse a doctrine which, he claimed, would result in making the President the creature and the tool of the House. As to the methods of the last election and the testimony taken by both parties in the Southern committees, Prof. Seelye said that the only thing that is established beyond dispute is, that both parties acted as wrongfully as they could, restrained by no conscience, by no sense of honor or rectitude. Mr. Williams, of Wisconsin, argued in favor of the counting of the electoral vote by the President of the Senate. He was followed by Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, in a three hours' speech in favor of the Compromise bill.... Mr. Butlz was admitted as a member from South Carolina, and took the iron-clad oath.

Wednesday, Jan. 24.—Senate.—Consideration of the bill in regard to the electoral count was resumed. Mr. Conkling, who was entitled to the floor, not being present, Mr. Sargent took the floor and spoke in opposition to the bill. He said he did not believe the measure would accomplish the result aimed at. There were suspicions of unfairness about it; it gave improper powers to the tribunal which it created. He argued that the framers of the constitution never intended to delegate to Congress the power to count the electoral vote or discriminate between the returns; that function, he claimed, was lodged in the President of the Senate. Mr. Sargent further opposed the bill because, as he claimed, it depraved the Supreme Court by bringing the judges down into the muddy pool of politics, and compelled them to wade through it. At the conclusion of Mr. Sargent's speech, Mr. Conkling took the floor and resumed his remarks. He argued that in no instance had the President of the Senate attempted to do anything in presiding over the joint convention to count the electoral vote except by command of the two houses, and cited numerous precedents and authorities to sustain his position. Referring to Mr. Morton's assertion that the bill was a political contrivance, he said if there ever was a "contrivance" it was the bill which passed at the last session; it was "a political Hell-gate, paved and honeycombed with dynamite." Mr. Conkling said he believed Gov. Hayes had been elected, but he asked him to take a title to the great office which no one could question. If this bill was a compromise of truth, of law, or of right, he was against it; but he denied that it was any compromise, and, above all, it did not compromise right, principle or constitution. To contest a claim was not to compromise it. To insist upon an honest, fair counting of the electoral vote was not a compromise. A Presidential election had occurred, and unless there was a tie somebody had been chosen. To establish that fact was no compromise. Mr. Conkling was followed by Mr. Morton in a vigorous speech in opposition to the bill. Messrs. Bayard, Christiancy, Thurman, Stevenson and Morrill all spoke in favor of the measure, and Mr. Morton again secured the floor, and, at 1 o'clock a. m., began his third speech against the bill. At the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Blaine secured the recognition of the presiding officer, and spoke in opposition to the bill. He did not believe Congress possessed the powers which it was proposed to transfer to the commission, and therefore opposed it on constitutional grounds. In conclusion he urged upon Congress to prepare at the present session and submit to an expectant people a constitutional amendment which would relieve the country in future from similar difficulties. Mr. Howe succeeded Mr. Blaine at 1:35 o'clock in the morning (the Senate, by a large majority, having repeatedly voted down motions to adjourn), and began by denouncing Mr. Morton's intemperate aspersions. He expressed the hope that the measure would receive a unanimous vote from the Republican party in the two houses.

House.—Consideration was resumed of the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges, and Mr. McDill, of Iowa, took the floor, and spoke in favor of the resolutions submitted by the minority of the committee. He said if the proposition of the majority was true, that no vote could be counted without the consent of the House, it would give the House a practical veto power over every election by the people. He was followed by Mr. Bright, who took the opposite ground. He maintained that the constitution gave Congress control of the whole subject, and that no Returning Board could oust Congress of its jurisdiction.... Mr. Payne, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill to amend existing laws in regard to National gold banks.... Mr. Lamar, from the Pacific railroad committee, reported back favorably the Senate bill extending for eight years the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad.... Mr. Lamar also, from the same committee, reported supplementary to and amendatory of the Texas Pacific Railroad bill of March 3, 1871. Mr. Kasson made a minority report and Mr. Landers offered a substitute. All were ordered printed and referred to the committee of the whole on the state of the Union.... The message of the President in regard to the use of troops in the South at the late election, was, after a spirited partisan debate, referred to a select committee of eleven to inquire whether there had been an exercise of authority not warranted by the constitution and laws in the use of troops for which the President is justly responsible, with power to send for persons and parties.

Thursday, Jan. 25.—Senate.—The debate in the Senate on the bill reported by the select committee in regard to counting the electoral vote was continued all night. Mr. Morton continued his speech in opposition to the bill. He claimed that the bill was flagrantly unconstitutional, that the commission could not carry out its provisions without going behind the returns, said the bill was sprinkled all over with very white, pretty meal, but the Democratic cat was reposing beneath it, and earnestly urged Republican Senators to vote against it. Mr. Blaine followed Mr. Morton, and opposed the measure on constitutional grounds. He had desired earnestly to support the bill, if he could do it consistently. The arguments adduced in its favor had persuaded him of its unconstitutionality, and he felt himself compelled, however reluctant he differed from certain Senators to record his vote against the measure. Mr. Howe, of Wisconsin, made an earnest speech in advocacy of the bill. He characterized it as the proudest tribute to American statesmanship that had been prepared since the convention which framed the constitution [illegible]. He would have been glad if it had received the unanimous approval of the committee, then he would have felt like one greater than himself felt when looking upon the infant Savior. He would have felt that he had seen the salvation of his people and of his country. Mr. Thurman spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Whyte, of Maryland, had doubts as to its constitutionality, but would vote for it as a temporary remedy. Mr. Eaton, of Connecticut, the only Democrat opposing the bill, denounced it as unconstitutional, said the power to count the electoral votes was vested in the two houses of Congress, and that "this bill, this contrivance, should sink into the earth." Mr. Burnside expressed the hope that the bill would pass. Mr. Edmunds closed the debate with an earnest appeal in behalf of the bill, at the conclusion of which a vote was taken, and resulted as follows: Yeas—Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, [illegible], Johnson, Jones (Fla.), Jones (Nev.), Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Price, Randolph, Ransom, [illegible], Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, Withers, Wright—47. Nays—Blaine, Bruce, Cameron (Pa.), Cameron (Wis.), Clayton, [illegible], Dorsey, [illegible], Hamilton, Hamlin, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman—17.

House.—The House took up the Electoral Tribunal bill, and Mr. McCrary, of Iowa, a member of the joint committee, opened the debate. He said the country was in the presence of a very great and very dangerous emergency. The present was a crisis in national affairs which the fathers of the republic had foreseen in 1800, and which at various periods in the nation's history great statesmen had foreseen and had dreaded. The country was confronted, not only with great and widespread difference of opinion on the merits of the question, but it was confronted with what was a thousand-fold more perilous, with the fact that the American people, American statesmen, American lawyers and jurists were almost equally divided, not only as to the merits of the question, but as to authorities to be cited. He submitted that that statesman was false to his duty that man did not come up to the exigencies of the occasion, who would stop short in the most earnest endeavors to provide some lawful mode for the decision of this question by a tribunal whose authority nobody could question, and in whose decision all men would acquiesce. Mr. Hunton, of Virginia, also a member of the committee advocated the measure. He held that just as the tellers provided for in the twenty-second joint rule were but the organs of the two houses, so the commission provided for in the bill was but their organ to do for them what they themselves might do. He also held that as the two houses had the right to count the votes, so they had the right of concurrent action to agree to any mode of counting that might seem best to them. Mr. Hoar spoke in favor of the bill. Nothing, he said, could be more injurious to the republic than that a man should be put in the Presidential office whom at least one-half of the American people would regard as a usurper. He could not conceive that the framers of the constitution ever thought of yielding to the President of the Senate the vast power of counting the electoral votes. That power was in the two houses of Congress just as the English Parliament had for centuries regulated all questions affecting the succession to the crown. In conclusion Mr. Hoar said: "The act which we are about to do will—in my judgment be one of the very bravest in human history. Our annals have been crowded with great achievements in war, in peace, in arts, in literature, in commerce; but other countries have equaled us in those particulars, but in this great act we stand without a rival and without an example. For a thousand years our children with tears of joy and pride, will read that while in fierce strife for executive power the sun of other republics after a short but brilliant day has gone down in darkness and in blood, in their own country, too, the same great strife has arisen; that their sky has been darkened by the same cloud; that their ship, with its costly freight of love and hope, encountered the same storm, and was driven near the same rocks, but that, in the midst of the storm and darkness and conflict, the august and awful figure of the law rose over the face of the waters, uttering its divine controlling mandate, 'Peace, be still.'" Mr. Hale, of Maine, spoke in opposition to the bill. He said the measure startled him by the bold assumption of the power of Congress to regulate and control the election of President, which power, in his judgment, had never been lodged in the two houses by the framers of the constitution. Whatever the popular impulse might be now, this bill would not be sustained by the American people when they should have time to measure and contemplate its consequences. It struck a blow at the Electoral College, which stood as high in the constitution as the Presidency itself, and shattered it from turret to foundation stone, and it substituted for it the power of Congress, which might at any time thwart the will of the people and render nugatory its deliberate and expressed judgment. The debate was continued till 11 o'clock p. m. Hewitt, of New York, Caldwell, of Tennessee, Springer, of Illinois, and Willard, of Michigan, speaking in favor of the bill, and Monroe, of Ohio, Smith, of Pennsylvania, and Garfield, of Ohio in opposition.

Water-Proof Blacking.

If ever one needs a good, water-proof blacking for boots and shoes, it is at this season of sleet, hail and snow. The following recipe for making a water-proof blacking comes to us highly recommended: Dissolve an ounce of borax in water, and in this dissolve gum shellac until it is the consistency of thin paste; add lampblack to color. This makes a cheap and excellent blacking for boots, giving them the polish of new leather. The shellac makes the boots or shoes almost entirely water-proof. Camphor dissolved in alcohol, added to the blacking, makes the leather more pliable and keeps it from cracking. This is sold at 50 cents for a small bottle. By making it yourself, $1 will buy materials for a gallon.—Rural New Yorker.

THE LOUISIANA OUTRAGE.

Speech of Hon. George W. Julian, of Indiana, Delivered at Indianapolis.

THE DISPUTE IN LOUISIANA.

Soon after the late Presidential election, when Democratic rejoicing was exchanged for the chilling apprehension of defeat and disaster through the action of the Louisiana Returning Board, the Chairman of the National Democratic Committee requested sundry gentlemen of the Northern States to repair to the city of New Orleans in the interest of "peace and a fair and honest return" of the votes cast in that State. The President of the United States ordered the presence of an imposing military force "to preserve peace and good order, and to see that the proper and legal Boards of Canvassers are unmolested in the performance of their duties." He declared, in this military order, that "should there be any ground of suspicion of a fraudulent count on either side, it should be reported and denounced at once," and that "no man worthy of the office of President should be willing to hold it, if counted in or placed there by fraud." He also appointed a number of prominent public characters and representative men in the party with which he is associated to visit the State of Louisiana, "to see that the Board of Canvassers make a fair count of the vote actually cast," and expressed the hope that "fair men of both parties" would attend to this duty. The Returning Board itself so far recognized the gravity of the situation and the wide-spread distrust of its integrity, that an official invitation was extended to the visitors from distant States of the Union to attend its session, while canvassing the returns and ascertaining the result of the Presidential election in Louisiana.

THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR THESE TROUBLES.

These are very remarkable proceedings. They have no precedent in the history of American politics, and they bear witness to the fearful decay of public virtue, and the alarming drift of public affairs toward abnormal and revolutionary methods. At whose door lies the just responsibility? Who is to blame for the atmosphere of suspicion which now covers the land, and the feeling of national peril which recalls so painfully the opening of the year 1861? The answer to these questions is not unknown to the people. The present government of the State of Louisiana was founded on flagrant usurpation and barefaced fraud. It was conceived in the illegal order of a drunken and corrupt Federal Judge, and midwifed by the political knaves and traders who controlled the National Administration four years, as they control it to-day. While the people of Louisiana have been prostrate and helpless under the heel of Federal tyranny, the Returning Board has been the vile instrument of that tyranny in the furtherance of its baleful purposes, which it has sought to drape over under the forms of law. It is the creature of the same organized political rapacity which has trampled down law and insulted decency in the States of the South during the past eight years. Under the act creating this board, its members hold their places for life, with power to appoint their successors. There is no appeal from their decision, whatever it may be, according to the ruling of the Supreme Court of the State, and no accountability to the people for their acts. Although they are a tribunal of special and limited jurisdiction, and their acts, whether ministerial or judicial, are to be construed strictly, and are absolutely void if not authorized by the law from which they derive all their power, yet, according to the authority cited, there is no redress against their rulings, however defiantly they may transcend their jurisdiction or trample justice under their feet. For any reason or for no reason at all, they may count in or count out the vote of any parish or precinct in the State, and thus arbitrarily determine the character of the Government under which her people are to live, contrary to their choice, and the character of the National Administration for four years, should it depend on the vote of the State. While the guilt of the board in an act so heaven-daring would be multiplied by the millions whose voices it would stifle, these millions would be utterly without remedy, even in the Congress of the nation, according to the leaders of the Republican party.

THE RETURNING BOARD.

And who are the men constituting this autocratic if not omnipotent institution of the Republican party in Louisiana, concocted in the worst days of carpet-bag government, and for the most nefarious purposes? Two of them are white men and two colored. They are the same men who sat upon the board in 1874, and after the election in that year took the majority of votes away from one side and gave it to the other by "unjust, arbitrary, and illegal action," as admitted by a Republican Congressional committee, of which one William A. Wheeler was a member. They are all members of the Republican party, and one of them holds a custom-house office under the spoils-hunting system of the present administration. J. Madison Wells, the President of the board, who was elected Governor of Louisiana under the reconstruction policy of President Johnson, was summarily ejected from that office in 1867 by Gen. Sheridan, for violating an act of the Legislature respecting the repair of her levees, and seeking to prostitute the funds of the State to partisan purposes. Gen. Sheridan branded him as a "political trickster and a dishonored man," and charged him with "subterfuge and political chicanery." He declared that "his conduct had been as sinuous as the mark left in the dust by the movement of a snake," and that "he had not one friend who is an honest man." After a stay in New Orleans of over three weeks, and mingling freely with the people when not engaged in watching the action of the Returning Board, I have no hesitation in indorsing the statement of Gen. Sheridan as true. Gov. Wells is not only a journeyman and expert in rascality, through long years of training and experience, but he is a scoundrel aboriginally; and in saying this I believe I simply give expression to the general sentiment of the State. Anderson, the other white man on the board, is not quite so vicious. The element of humanity is not so fatally left out of his composition. He is not so coldblooded. If placed in command of a pirate ship he might falter in some emergency which his more intrepid and satanic companion on board would enjoy as a luxury. But he is not wanting the qualities which have made the Returning Board famous, for he is a thoroughly accomplished knave and swindler. He counts well, and is, in a word, the fit companion and associate in office of the President of the body. Cassanave, one of the colored members of the board, is an undertaker by occupation, and was a slaveholder before the war. He is a man of limited education and intelligence, and not at all qualified by capacity or training for the position he occupies. He is a very strong partisan, but is regarded as a kindly, well-disposed sort of man, whose worst misfortune is that the thoroughly unprincipled men on the board use him as their tool. This must be regarded as certain, in the absence of any proof that he has ever opposed the confessed illegality and fraud of his associates. Kenner, the other colored man, and junior member of the board, is a very small, light mulatto, quick and sprightly in his movements, but altogether unfitted by talents, education, or experience, for so responsible a position. He is a gambler and grog-seller, a very low fellow, and a few years ago was kicked out of a saloon in New Orleans for stealing the money of his employer.

A CONFERENCE PROPOSED AND REJECTED—THE REASONS.

Representative men of both political parties had reached the theater of trouble, as the avowed missionaries of peace and fair dealing. The men who represented the Democratic side of the controversy, fully appreciating the seriousness of the situation, addressed a brief letter to Stanley Matthews, John Sherman, and other representative Republicans who had been deputed by the President, proposing a joint conference "in order that such influence as they possessed might be exerted in behalf of such a canvass of the votes as by its fairness and impartiality should command the respect and acquiescence of the American people of all parties." I submit to all just and reasonable men that this was a fair and manly proposition. I am sure it was made in good faith, and that not a man who joined in it would have been willing to see Tilden and Hendricks counted in by fraud. We simply asked for a fair count, and the supervision of the canvass by a conference representing both sides of the disputed question. It might not have accomplished any valuable result, but in so threatening an aspect of public affairs the effort was certainly to be commended, and could not honorably be declined. What was the answer to our proposition by the deputies of the President and leaders of the Republican party? They say in the outset that they "know of no reason to doubt that a perfectly honest and just declaration of the results of the recent election in Louisiana by its lawfully constituted authorities will be made." Gentlemen, would any of you have believed it morally possible for Stanley Matthews, John Sherman, and their Republican co-laborers in Louisiana to face the American people with a statement so shockingly incredible? And yet they were equal to the extraordinary feat, and they are "all honorable men." I will not be so ungenerous and impolite as to call in question their veracity, but it can only be defended by an impeachment of their intelligence, almost as disgraceful as lying. No reason to doubt that a perfectly honest and just declaration of the vote in Louisiana would be made by the infamous Returning Board! Then they had mingled freely with the people of New Orleans without ever having heard of the notoriously bad character of three of the four members of that board? William A. Wheeler, two years ago, pronounced it a "disgrace to civilization!" They had never heard that it was proved before a Congressional committee of Republicans, about the same time, that the President of this board perjured himself in the testimony he gave respecting the election of 1874? They had never heard of the perfectly well-known fact that in that year this board illegally and unjustly took the majority of votes honestly and fairly given to the Democratic ticket, and counted them on the other side, as admitted by the Congressional committee referred to, which was composed of the political friends of these surprisingly innocent and ignorant politicians, and of the members of the board itself? They had never heard that Gen. Sheridan had summarily turned the President of the board out of his Gubernatorial office in 1867, on account of his shameless rascality and disregard of law! Who would have supposed that our country was afflicted with so rare an assemblage of political Rip Van Winkles as that which reported for duty in New Orleans under the lead of Sherman, Garfield and Kelly?

FURTHER REASONS—"THE INNOCENTS ABROAD."

But these Republican patriots declined our proposal for a joint conference for the further reason that they were present as mere "witnesses, without power or legal influence" over the action of the board. They said they were "strangers without official functions," and that "it would be a manifest interference with State rights and local self-government for persons like ourselves, without official rights, to attempt to interfere with or control" the actions of such a tribunal. Will wonders never cease? John Sherman and his confederate Republicans preaching the gospel of State rights and local self-government in Louisiana. The chief apostles of Federal usurpation and the Christianity of the bayonet striving to hide the villainies of a Republican returning board under the mantel of Thomas Jefferson. The sanctities of law invoked by the assassins of a State! Could anything be more sublimely impudent or more charmingly satanic? These emissaries of the President knew that the men who proposed a joint conference were not such idiots as to suppose it would possess any official power over the legal functions of the board. When Senator Sherman pretended not to know this, the man was forgotten in the pettifogger. What we hoped from the presence and co-operative action of leading Republicans and Democrats was the exercise of such a moral influence over this suspected tribunal as would secure publicity, impartiality and fairness in its methods of canvassing the votes and ascertaining the result. Our purpose was unmistakable, and it accorded perfectly with the declared wish of the President, that "representative and fair men of both parties" would visit Louisiana "to see that the Board of Canvassers make a fair count of the vote actually cast." The presence of these Republican leaders in New Orleans in response to the invitation of their chief, was a clear recognition of the very power which they afterward disclaimed by styling themselves "strangers," with no right to "control or influence any of the officers of the board as to the manner in which they shall perform ministerial or political duties." Fellow-citizens, can any of you divine what brought these gentlemen to New Orleans? They recoil from the very thought of exercising any influence, legal or moral, over the action of the board, or the method of its proceedings. They say they know of no reason to doubt that it would make a perfectly honest and just declaration of the result of the election. And yet here were twenty-six "eminent citizens" and "Christian statesmen" simultaneously leaving their homes for Louisiana at the call of the President and attending the sessions of the Returning Board in successive squads till its work was done. What is the meaning of all this? They say they went as "witnesses," but why go so far to witness a performance that would undoubtedly be conducted with perfect honesty and fairness? Why make a long journey for the mere purpose of becoming spectators of a proceeding over which they could exercise neither legal control nor moral influence? These provoking questions are rendered all the more so by the singular fact that this formidable body of "witnesses" which the President detailed for duty at New Orleans disobeyed their orders. The private citizens and strangers, whose innocent and useless mission was that of simple spectators of the doings of the board failed even in that duty. They were in the court room in which the board sat while canvassing the returns and examining the papers, but with rare and very slight exceptions they gave no more attention to what was going on, and manifested no more interest in the proceedings than if the whole affair had related exclusively to the denizens of another planet. Their confidence in the board seemed to be so gushing and unreserved that they peacefully resigned themselves to their correspondence, their newspapers and their cigars, while the presence of a formidable military force in this city to "see that the members of the board were unmolested in the performance of their duties," was probably felt as a superadded solace to their souls. They may have been "witnesses" to some of the acts of the board, but if so, it must have been at night, in some appointed gathering of the politically-elect, into which no friend of Tilden and Hendricks could be admitted. Gentlemen, I desire to do injustice to no man. Unfounded suspicion is mean and cowardly; but in the light of the facts I have stated I again ask the question, why did this remarkable troupe of political partisans visit the State of Louisiana? Did they go to see the orange groves and sugar mills of the State, or the jetties of the Mississippi? Was it a trip of mere pleasure, or private business, accidentally happening at the time the Returning Board was in session? Was the invitation of the President utterly without meaning? If their mission was political, do you believe they went as an embassy of peace, putting party under their feet in the overmastering desire to tranquilize the public mind and enforce justice and law in counting the votes of the State? Or did they go as the backers and accomplices of the Returning Board, in the conspiracy to count out the lawfully elected President of the United States, by wrenching from the people of Louisiana for the third time the precious right of self-government? Answer these questions for yourselves, after you have followed me in the further development of my subject.

THE VACANCY IN THE RETURNING BOARD—PETTIFOGGING.

The board entered on its regular duties on the 20th of November. Was it legally constituted? The law creating it declares that it shall consist of five members, and that all the political parties of the State shall be represented. But there were but four members, and these all Republicans; and yet Senator Sherman, in the Senate the other day, said "the board was legally constituted." What does he mean by so reckless a statement? It is not denied that the action of four members would be as legal as that of the whole, so far as numbers are concerned; but here is a positive requirement that all political parties shall be represented on the board. This is just as binding as the provision fixing the number of the body. A board consisting of two members could not act, because it would lack the numerical qualification prescribed by law, just as a board composed exclusively of members of one political party lacks the political qualification prescribed by the same law. The first duty of the board, therefore, without which I think it was powerless to perform any other, was to fill the vacancy, which the law expressly authorized and required it to do. The counsel for the Democratic candidates formally asked for the performance of this obvious and imperative duty, suggesting the name of a most worthy and well-qualified man for the position; but the board refused. It defiantly trampled under foot the two-fold command of the law to fill the vacancy, and to supply the political element which was wanting. President Wells, "the plain man," who seems to be a great favorite of Senator Sherman, said the Democrats had lost their right to a member of the board by the resignation of Mr. Arroyo, which I think took place a year and a half ago. He further said that the board had failed to agree as to the appointment of the gentleman suggested, as if no other man could be found among the more than 80,000 Democrats and Conservatives of the State. He made the further pitiful plea that when this Returning Board was first created there was no such organization as the Democratic-Conservative party in the State, as if that fact could furnish the slightest excuse for violating the law to-day. This miserable drivel, by the side of which the worst forms of pettifogging become respectable, is paraded in the Senate of the United States by Mr. Sherman as a vindication of the board; while in a recent debate in the House of Representatives, Mr. Hale, of Maine, sought to extricate Gov. Wells from his despicable dilemma by saying that at its late session the board had offered the vacancy to as many as six Democrats, who successively declined it. This statement is absolutely untrue. Not a Democrat was offered the position, although the board was urged, morning after morning during its sessions, to fill it. Why did it refuse? For the perfectly manifest reason that a Democratic member would be an unmanageable obstacle to the work to be done. He would have a right to take part in the oral examination of witnesses. He would have a share in the work of canvassing the returns. He would have a right to be present in the secret conferences of the board, during its protracted public sessions. And he would be present at the final cooking of the returns by which the State was to be cheated, and would be the witness of the transaction. These are exactly the reasons why the board stubbornly and brazenly refused to fill the vacancy; and I believe no man will deny it who is acquainted with its history, except the innocent and childlike Senator Sherman, and the guileless political babes who played their part as "witnesses" so inoffensively at New Orleans. Gentlemen, the defense of such lawlessness by honorable men in either branch of Congress would be a melancholy fact, even if this Board had been able to point to a record of unimpeachable good behavior in the past. But its character was bad in the judgment of all political parties. It had thwarted the will of the people of Louisiana two years before, by making the ballot the football of knavery and fraud. Its integrity was suspected by intelligent men throughout the entire land, and its action in thus violating the principle that no man shall be a judge in his own case, was as shameless as would be that of a Judge of one of your own courts who should claim the right to occupy the bench and charge the jury on the trial of an indictment against himself, after a former conviction for the same offense. Its audacity in clutching at party machinery and scouting the virtues of honesty, impartiality, and fairness, while proceeding to decide the grave issues of a State and national election, is enough to provoke the laughter and amazement of devils. Senator Sherman defends it. He thinks Gov. Wells "the peer of any man in the Senate," and he sees nothing wrong in the further fact that the clerical force of the board was also packed with Republicans. He says there was no law requiring a political division of the clerks, and that Democrats, when they have the offices, do not divide with the Republicans. But this is a very transparent dodge. The point here involved is not one of law, but decency. The Returning Board is covered with public suspicion. Its character is stained by fraud. If bent upon further rascalities it would, of course, want a body of faithful clerical scullions, skilled in the work of falsely and fraudulently canvassing and tabulating the votes, and all acting harmoniously in the service of their master. This, of course, would be seriously interfered with by the presence of Democrats, while no harm would be done if honor and fair play were to be the governing principles. All this is as palpable as the moral blindness which hinders very distinguished and honorable gentlemen from seeing it.

SECRECY AND SKULKING.

But the board not only signalized the beginning of its work by openly violating the law affecting its organization and functions, but it still further confirmed the popular distrust of its integrity by excluding the public from its sessions. Judge Spofford, one of the counsel for the Democratic candidates, made a very earnest and eloquent appeal for publicity. He reminded the board that forty millions of people were watching its proceedings, and quoted the language of the President, that "should there be any grounds of suspicion of a fraudulent counting on the other side, it should be reported and denounced at once." In the name of the American people he asked that no part of the work should "be done in a corner," and declared that there was "no call for privacy in applying the rules of arithmetic." But the board refused to listen to this demand on the flimsy pretext that if it was surrounded by a multitude of people it would be disturbed and delayed in its proceedings. What the country wanted was, not only an honest count of the vote, but that the proceedings should be conducted with such evident fairness as to make this unquestionable to the people of all parties. If at all possible, suspicion should have been entirely disarmed by invoking the full light of day upon a transaction so pregnant with interest, both to the State and the nation. But "men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." The people of Louisiana were not allowed to witness the canvass of their own votes. The press reporters, representing the leading newspapers of the country, were excluded from the court-room on their petition to be admitted. The Supervisors of Registration and Elections who desired to witness the canvass of the votes were not allowed to be present, either in person or by their counsel. The Democratic candidates and their attorneys were also excluded, except on the hearing of contested cases, although their presence was exceedingly important during the entire proceedings, owing to their familiarity with the different parishes and voting precincts, and their ability to detect any indications of fraud on the opening of the returns, which the visiting committee present would necessarily fail to discover. The board, it is true, so far yielded to the pressure from without as to permit the presence of two political committees, with a reporter for each, but this was an exceedingly frail barrier against secret manipulation and fraud in the returns. These committees were composed of strangers from distant States, wholly unfamiliar with the practical roguery of Louisiana officials, while the exclusion of the general press reporters, the people of the State, the Supervisors and Registrars of Elections, and the candidates for office, was wholly indefensible, and utterly irreconcilable with an honest purpose to serve the interests of truth. It perfectly accorded, however, with the action of the board in other respects. It had openly violated the law as to its organization. It had excluded from any share in its deliberations every element that would not yield unhesitating obedience to its base purposes. It had usurped the right to sit as final judge of its own flagitious acts. It had fully recorded its purpose to re-enact the foul game of 1874. It was entirely natural, therefore, that it should wrap itself in the mantle of darkness when entering upon the final chapter of its unhallowed conspiracy to cheat the people of the United States.

THE LAWLESS ACTS OF THE BOARD.

But let us follow the board in its work. The counsel for the Democratic candidates, at the outset, protested against the right of the board to canvass the electoral vote at all, but the protest was summarily overruled and no opportunity allowed for argument. With characteristic one-sidedness the board ruled in favor of its own jurisdiction; and Senator Sherman, in his late letter to the President, declares that its action is "independent of State and national laws other than those of Louisiana" and "finally and substantially conclusive as to the votes cast and candidates elected." In support of this position he cites a decision of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, well knowing at the time that Chief Justice Ludeling, who pronounced that decision, had been branded with "fraud and breach of trust" by the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case which brought his character in question. But conceding that there is no appeal from the decision of this board, their finality certainly could not be admitted as to questions beyond its jurisdiction. It has no right to wander away from its appointed work, and pass upon questions not cognizable by it, under the law from which it derives its authority. Judge Trumbull and his associates, in their late Louisiana report, have conclusively shown that the law of 1872 creating this tribunal, and under which it acted, makes no provision as to the manner of appointing electors for President and Vice President, while it seems to repeal all other laws on the subject of elections. They show that if the previous act of 1870 respecting the appointment of Presidential electors is repealed, there is no law of the State on the subject, and the board is consequently without authority to canvass the votes for such offices; but that if the act of 1870 is not repealed, the canvass of the votes for electors must be made by the Governor in the presence of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, a Judge in the district in which the seat of government may be established, or any two of them, as required by that act. The public has been made acquainted with this argument, and I need not repeat it at length, and although Mr. Sherman refers to it as "an array of technicalities," its soundness has been indorsed by some of the ablest lawyers of the country, and has not been successfully impeached in any quarter.

But even if the board had the right to canvass the electoral vote, it clearly transcended its legal authority in throwing out votes on account of intimidation and violence. Its simple duty was to canvass and compile the returns and proclaim the result, unless the Commissioners of Election or the Supervisors of Registration imposed upon it a further duty by laying a legal foundation for it as provided for in sections 26 and 43 of the State Election law. That foundation must consist of the affidavit of the Supervisor of Registration or Commissioners of Elections, supported by the affidavits of three or more citizens, setting forth the facts of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free and peaceable election, and showing the number of qualified electors deterred by such proceedings from voting or registering. This statement must be made out within 24 hours after the receipt of all the returns for the different polling-places, and shall be forwarded in duplicate to the Supervisors of Registration of the parishes. If this foundation is not laid, the board has no jurisdiction whatever except to count the votes returned. It has no right to attack the returns from any poll, ward or parish in the State, for any of the causes specified. If the decision of the board is final, it is because its proceedings have tracked the law, and are therefore backed by its authority. The board has no ex-officio power to institute complaints against any poll. The special provisions of the law have an unmistakable meaning. Their purpose is that all the Supervisors shall be engaged simultaneously in their several parishes in completing their returns and statements on the spot where the election was held, without communication with each other or with persons beyond the parish, and before they can obtain information of what has been done in other parishes, or any clear knowledge of the result. The design is to exclude from the consideration of the Returning Board all ex post facto complaints which might be trumped up at the last moment for dishonest purposes. And this was the declared opinion of Messrs. Hoar, Wheeler and Frye, in their famous report of February, 1875, in which they say: "We are clearly of opinion that the Returning Board has no right to do anything except to canvass and compile the returns which were lawfully made to them by local officers, except in cases where they were accompanied by the certificates of the Supervisor or Commissioner provided in the third section." I believe no such foundation for the jurisdiction of the board as the law requires was laid in any parish of the State, and certainly not in any of the five which have been the chief theater of alleged intimidation and violence. The action of the board, therefore, in seeking to defeat the will of the people of Louisiana, by disfranchising more than 13,000 Democratic voters, was not only a flagrant usurpation of authority, but a most unpardonable sin against "the habit of obedience to the forms of law," which the visiting committee of Republicans at New Orleans lately solemnly warned us "should be sedulously inculcated," and that "the resort to extra-constitutional modes of redress for even actual grievances should be avoided and condemned as revolutionary, disorganizing, and tending to disorder and anarchy."

Wisconsin.

Wisconsin is one of the fortunate few States in the Union that have a small debt. Its debt is only $2,252,057—little more than one year's receipts of revenue. The receipts into the State treasury last year were $1,976,074, including a balance of $277,781, and the disbursements were $1,660,000, leaving a balance Sept. 30, 1876, of $315,866. The general fund, amounting to $1,148,748, supplies the money to pay the expenses of government, and of the benevolent and other public institutions. Of the whole amount $657,000 was derived from State taxes, and $395,000 from railroads—from which it would appear that the railroads in Wisconsin pay about one-fourth the cost of the government. The charitable and penal institutions of the State cost last year $433,542. The various trust funds for the benefit of common schools and colleges amount to $4,050,000. The estimated receipts for the present year are $1,300,000, of which $400,000 will come from the railroads. The estimated expenditures are $975,000. The total amount of taxes collected for all purposes in 1875 was $8,000,000, of which $795,000 was for State purposes $1,572,000 for county purposes, $1,700,000 for schools, and $2,980,000 for town purposes. The number of convicts in the penitentiary is 300—about one-fourth the number we have in Missouri.—St. Louis Republican.

Uncle Sam in Luck.

Some months ago an eccentric man named Charles Fox died in New York city leaving a will in which he provided liberally for all his living relatives, giving each a stated sum, and bequeathing the balance of his property, amounting, it is supposed, to between $100,000 and $150,000, to the United States Government, to be applied toward the payment of the public debt. Senator Booth has introduced a bill in Congress providing for the appointment of a trustee to look after the interest of the Government and the settlement of the estate.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

THURSDAY, Jan. 18.—SENATE.—Mr. Baxter introduced his temperance bill, which provides for a State Commissioner, to be appointed by the Governor, who shall have sole control of liquor sales in the State. In each city and town there shall be an agent for the sale of liquors, he to receive them from the State Superintendent and sell only for medicinal and mechanical purposes. The saloon-keeper selling in violation of the laws is held responsible with the drunkard for any damages. The drunkard is empowered to testify against the seller, and a woman can collect damages from a seller by first giving him warning not to sell to her man.... Mr. Donham, of Vigo, followed Mr. Baxter with a bill permitting every man, woman, and child, to eat, drink, and wear what they pleased, if not inconvenient.... Bills were offered to fix the pay of commissioners of the reform schools at $800; to give school directors full control of schools in each district; to fix interest at 8 per cent.; to repeal all laws enabling counties, towns, cities, and townships to vote taxes in aid of railways; to prohibit drawing warrants on public funds when the Auditor knows there is no such fund; to repeal clauses of the [illegible] and provide for a Commissioner of Insane, who shall [illegible].... The bill giving a Judge discretion in change of venue cases came up for a second reading, and the discussion exhausted the day.

HOUSE.—The House consumed the day in committee reports on unimportant bills.

FRIDAY, Jan. 19.—SENATE.—Bills were introduced to create a bureau of statistics in the State Secretary's office, to collect statistics on population and the industrial and material interests of the State; regulating the indebtedness of cities of over 10,000 voting population, and limiting the taxation rate; suppressing the sale of obscene literature; providing for voluntary assignments of property for the benefits of creditors; regulating freight charges, that rates shall not be advanced after freights are offered and before goods are hauled; that the shipper shall have the right to choose the route for his freight when there is more than one route; companies shall not charge more than the regular rates for what they claim to be the overloading of cars.

HOUSE.—A resolution was passed to investigate the expenditures of the late Supreme Court ... Mr. Oglesby introduced a joint resolution requesting Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for the bill pending before that body for the counting of the Presidential vote. Referred ... Bills were introduced discouraging the useless and sheep-killing dogs; legalizing dissection of human bodies for surgical and anatomical purposes; fixing interest at 6 per cent. unless stipulated in writing; relieving the temporary poor; providing for drainage of wet lands; amending the liquor law so as to fine a plain drunk from $3 to $10; preventing candidates for office buying votes, either by free drinks or money, such purchase to constitute the buyer ineligible for office; and preventing minors from playing billiards.

SATURDAY, Jan. 20.—SENATE.—The session was brief and the proceedings meager.... Mr. Branham, of Jefferson, was reported dangerously ill.... Mr. Johnson asked compensation in the amount of $1,200 for guards employed to protect the jail at New Albany, and the prisoners from mob violence in the late Jones-Tolliver troubles in Orange county.... A bill was presented creating a local option provision in the liquor law.... Mr. Dykeman presented a voluminous railway code, embracing 200 sections and 100 pages legal cap.

HOUSE.—A resolution indorsing the bill proposed by Congress for the counting of the electoral vote, and instructing the Chairman of the Senate and House Committees on Federal Relations to so inform Representatives in Congress, was referred without debate.... A bill was introduced requiring children from 8 to 14 years of age to attend school or be instructed at home at least fourteen weeks in each year.... A bill was also introduced fixing the per diem of members of the General Assembly at $5 per day, with $5 mileage for every twenty-five miles they may travel. The pay of the officers for sessions of sixty-one days is: Secretary of the Senate, $2,500; assistant, $1,500; doorkeeper, $1,400; Clerk of the House, $2,500; assistant, $2,100; doorkeeper, $1,500. The pay of sub-employes is included in the above.

MONDAY, Jan. 22.—Senate.—The Senate passed a bill forbidding change of text-books in public schools oftener than once in six months, unless by unanimous consent of the School Board; further, that only the Presidents of Town Boards of Trustees shall be members of the County School Board.... The Governor sent in the nomination of A. P. McFarland, of Carroll, as manager of the Indiana Reformatory for Women and Girls, vice Franklin G. Armstrong. The confirmation of the appointment was postponed.

HOUSE.—A bill was introduced providing for a Board of Aldermen in cities of over 16 000 population; also amending the divorce law, by fixing the alimony in bulk instead of annual payments; creating a bureau of statistics in the State Secretary's office; enabling boards of underwriters to maintain fire patrols, and prohibiting traffic in obscene literature. The penalty in the last-mentioned act is severe.

TUESDAY, Jan. 23.—SENATE.—A bill was introduced providing for a new State Capitol building, placing the construction in the hands of the Governor, Auditor, and State Secretary, and two to be elected by the Legislature; limiting expenditures to $3,000,000, and levying a tax of 1-12 of a mill for 1878, ⅛ for 1879, ¼ for 1880-81, ⅓ for 1882, and ½ for 1883, to be known as the State Capitol Building fund.... A resolution was introduced petitioning Congress to make White river navigable from the east and west fork to the mouth.... A bill came up on committee report giving camp-meeting associations power to appoint courts and try offenders, and it was discovered to be a fac simile of an act vetoed by the Governor two years ago.... A bill was introduced requiring agents of insurance companies to have certificates from the State Auditor and own at least $200,000 capital stock; also giving them power to invest in State and county bonds.

HOUSE.—Mr. Oglesby introduced a bill providing that at the next assessment of property, in April, 1877, there shall be listed for the purpose of taxation all church property, both personal and real also the real and personal property of secret societies, of all private denominational schools, and any and all property not belonging to the common schools, cities, towns, county, State or the United States.... A resolution, setting forth that the denial of the right of suffrage to women is an usurpation of the constitution, and wrong, and contrary to the genius of republican institutions, was referred.... Bills were introduced to prevent extortionate charges for transportation of freight and passengers; against keeping bawdy houses; changing the election of State Librarian, etc., to the fourth Thursday in January.... A resolution prevailed that it was the sense of the House to pass no measures looking to the increase of taxes on the people in all cases where the objects of taxation might be avoided, and that the strictest economy is the demand of the hour.... The afternoon was absorbed in discussing the bill giving married women the right to hold separate property, sue and be sued, etc.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 24.—SENATE.—Bills passed: Preventing change of text-books in the public schools oftener than once in six years, unless by unanimous consent of the School Board; abolishing the criminal courts of Floyd and Clark counties, and empowering Town Trustees to grant liquor licenses.... A joint resolution was passed asking Congress to extend the time for pension application until January, 1880.... The bill giving Judges discretion in granting a change of venue in civil cases failed of a constitutional majority.

HOUSE.—The bill to take the sense of the people regarding a constitutional convention was made the special consideration for Wednesday, Jan. 31. ... The bill making gold and silver legal tender within the State was tabled, and the suggestion to absorb one-half of the liquor license revenue in establishing a State Inebriate Asylum was referred.... After a protracted discussion the joint resolution, petitioning Congress to repeal the Bankrupt act, was passed—80 to 9.

THURSDAY, Jan. 25.—SENATE.—The series of resolutions against the reduction of the school tax, the passage of the conspiracy act, etc., as adopted by the Indiana workingmen, were presented and referred.... A resolution passed for the Insurance Committee to draft a bill with a provision that life insurance companies shall place upon their policies a table showing the yearly value of policy.... An investigation was ordered of the claims filed by the insane asylum superintendent against counties for clothing furnished to insane, also whether he or his subordinates have received from friends compensation for keeping incurably insane people beyond the time allowed by law.... A lengthy report from Dr. Jameson, President of the Board of Trustees, reported no employe nor friends nor perquisites in the deaf and dumb asylum beyond what the law permitted.... Mr. Winterbotham offered a bill empowering assessments on certain property at Michigan City for the improvement of the harbor; Mr. Donham, a bill establishing an additional election board, consisting of a judge, two inspectors and two clerks, who shall conduct the count by ballot during the progress of the vote; Mr. Reed, requiring railways to fence their tracks; Mr. Given, to prevent extortionate charges by railways for transportation of freight.

HOUSE.—A resolution passed abolishing the office of Swamp Land Commissioner; also one instructing Congressmen to vote a pension of $8 per month to Mexican war survivors.... The bill was engrossed making it unlawful to kill quails within five years; so also the bill providing for a record of marks on fence rails.... By a vote of 60 to 1 the [illegible] making silver a legal t[illegible] those otherwise provid[illegible] ney General reported in [illegible] non, State Agent in 187[illegible] claim of $10,000, for two [illegible] .... The bill for the re[illegible] Perry county, who was [illegible] lars, was voted down.

AUSTRALIA.

Some Interesting Facts Regarding the Largest Island in the World.

[From the New York Times.]

In view of the inter-colonial exhibition to be held in Sydney, April 10 next, the following facts, culled from the most trustworthy official authorities on Australia, may be found interesting. That largest island on the globe is about one-fifth smaller than Europe, and more than three times as large as India, its dimensions being 2,400 by 1,900 miles, with 8,000 miles of coast line. It extends over 28½ deg. of latitude and 40 deg. of longitude. Laid with its northern extremity touching this city, it would reach southward to South America, eastward to the further end of Nova Scotia, and westward to the further edge of Nebraska. Including the near-by island of Tasmania, or Van Dieman's Land, its area is about 3,000,000 square miles, about the same as that of the belt across this continent from ocean to ocean constituting the United States, excluding Alaska.

Settlement has merely skirted the eastern and southern coasts. A company of nine started to cross from east to west, thirty years ago, but disappeared, and repeated search failed to trace their route; since then explorations have been successfully pushed across in both directions, and the colony of South Australia, having then but 180,000 population, undertook and accomplished, in the two years ending Aug. 22, 1872, the daring feat of constructing a telegraph across the island from south to north, nearly 2,000 miles, importing and carrying by teams all the materials used, in order to get a direct communication with England. Yet the interior is still nearly unknown, and some portions vie with inner Africa in interest and romance. Rivers, bays, and lakes are few, although the existence of a great inland lake is conjectured, and the hot winds blowing outward from the north and west indicate that the interior is a desert plain. But if a strip along the coast 250 miles wide, omitting the northern side, is taken as the habitable portion, this strip contains 785,000 square miles, and nearly equals the area covered by the twenty-six States of this Union lying east of the Mississippi; hence there is room enough, even if the interior, like some spots on the American belt, is found to be "bad land."

It so happened that the Australian gold discoveries and the consequent rush thither were almost exactly parallel in time with the similar occurrences in California. Up to 1875 the quantity exported was $1,131,965,105, against $905,356,572 in California during the thirteen years, 1848 to 1860. The following table contains sundry important details:

Area in square miles	[illegible],319,829
Population	1,885,278
Acres under tillage, 1874	3,253,236
Number of sheep	47,030,812
Number of horned cattle	3,355,043
Wool exported in 1874, pounds	235,294,715
Public debt in 1874	$162,520,696
Revenue in 1874	21,287,745
Imports in 1874	183,385,200
Exports in 1874	159,795,083

Australia has 1,000 miles of railroad and 19,000 miles of telegraph. The land under tillage is 3,253,236 acres, less than one-third that of the State of Ohio alone, twenty-five years ago; but Australia is eminently a pastoral country, having 47,000,000 sheep, against 27,000,000 in the United States. Her public debt, incurred mainly for railroads and public works, is $86 per head, against $52 per head in the United States. The revenue is $28 per head, against $7 in the United States. The imports and exports are $100 each per head, against $14 each in the United States, approximately. A population considerably less than one-half that of the State of New York, occupying a territory as large as the United States, much of it never trodden by white men, have a commerce nearly one-third as great as that of our 40,000,000 people; measured per capita, the inhabitants of that extraordinary island pay four times as much to public revenue, and consume seven times as much of imported goods, as do the people of this country.

The commerce of Australia is mainly with Great Britain and with the other Australian colonies. The imports from Great Britain are about $75,000,000, and the exports about $88,000,000, the former consisting mainly of textile manufactures and iron.

Phenomenal Weather in England.

The London correspondent of the New York Herald says, under date Jan. 16: "The season of unexampled severity which we are now passing through has been marked by a series of disasters such as has not been recorded for a long period of years. Deluging rains have saturated the country districts and swelled the rivers with destructive floods and overspread the low valley lands with inundations. Gales have swept the coasts and strewn them with wrecks. The utmost anxiety prevails in the agricultural districts regarding the planting of crops, for if the season continues bad to its end the consequences to the farming interests will be very serious.

"It is gravely suggested that if the present phenomenal conditions continue to prevail England will soon become as uninhabitable as Labrador or Nova Zembla. In this event a compulsory and wholesale migration of the great English nation to America must occur. The idea of an abandonment of the 'tight little island' on account of bad weather must awaken the gloomiest feelings in the breasts of her people, but I don't think there is any immediate danger that such a movement will be necessary. The 'Mistress of the Seas' should not be afraid of a little extra supply of rain water."

Woman Suffrage.

The constitution of the new State of Colorado provides for an election on the question of woman suffrage next October. It is understood that while in Washington next month the sisterhood will arrange for a heavy pressure to be brought upon the gallant and susceptible masculine minds and hearts of the Miner State. Utah and Wyoming are at present the Western exponents of the equal right of the fair sex.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY BLISS has commenced suit in the District Court of New York for $150,000 against ex-Gov. Tilden, for alleged non-payment of income tax.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY opened their revival services in the Boston Tabernacle, on Sunday last.

THE WEST.

THE funeral services of the unidentified victims of the Ashtabula disaster occurred in that place last week. Nineteen bodies were buried in one grave....The bishop of Ashtabula, assisted by two Episcopal ministers from Cleveland, held joint services with the Masonic order at the grave. These bodies still remain in the vault in the hope that their friends may be able to identify them by pieces of clothing belonging to them.

THE long drought in California has been succeeded by copious rains, and there are cheerful reports of the crop prospects from all parts of the State....Chicago papers announce the failure of W. B. Keen, Cooke & Co., one of the oldest book firms in the city....Charles Collins, Chief Engineer of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad, committed suicide at Cleveland, a few days ago. More or less blame for the Ashtabula disaster had been placed at his hands, and it is supposed that the weight of censure which he felt sure the public laid upon him led him to commit the tragic deed.

A RUMOR reaches Sioux City that a train coming out of the Black Hills was recently captured by Crazy Horse's band of Indians, and that twenty men who were with the train were massacred.

CHICAGO elevators, as per official returns, contain 3,556,733 bushels of wheat; 2,051,900 bushels of corn; 641,306 bushels of oats; 234,846 bushels of rye, and 1,060,496 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 7,545 471 bushels, against 4,551,127 bushels at this period last year.

DETECTIVE JAMES BROOKS, of the Government Secret Service, who has been for some time diligently pursuing the manufacturers and shovers of the queer in the West, has just made a rich haul in Cincinnati. Over 100 finely-executed plates were captured. Among them were plates for the manufacture of $10 notes on the banks at Richmond, Lafayette and Muncie, Ind. He also recovered 40,000 50-cent pieces. These pieces so closely resembled the genuine that none but experts could distinguish the difference between them.

THE people of Chicago have become thoroughly alarmed at the dreadful ravages of scarlet fever and diphtheria in that city, and measures are to be taken to arrest, if possible, the further progress of these dangerous maladies.

HON. GEORGE WELLS, for the past fifty years President of the Farmers' and Planters' Bank of Annapolis, Md., is a defaulter in the sum of $65,000.

THE lower house of the Florida Legislature has passed an act to declare and establish the appointment by the State of Florida of electors for President and Vice President.... Three men were killed and several dangerously wounded, near Little Rock, Ark., a few days ago, by the explosion of a boiler in a shingle factory.

POLITICAL.

ALVIN SAUNDERS has been elected by the Nebraska Legislature to succeed Mr. Hitchcock in the United States Senate.

THE Tennessee Legislature, on the 73d ballot, elected James G. Bailey to the vacancy in the United States Senate caused by the death of Andrew Johnson....The Legislature of Massachusetts has chosen George F. Hoar as the successor of Mr. Boutwell in the Senate from that State.

IT is said that the method of selecting the Supreme Court wing of the Presidential tribunal appears to have been one of the most difficult problems to solve satisfactorily with which the joint committees found themselves confronted. It was known or supposed, says a Washington correspondent, that Justices Clifford and Field had supported Tilden and Hendricks at the last election. It was also known and believed that the other Justices, with the exception of Davis, had supported Hayes and Wheeler. The position of Justice Davis, so far as political bias was concerned, was the subject of much discussion and doubt. The Republicans generally regarded him as a Democrat, and the Democrats considered him an independent Republican with Democratic proclivities. If the five senior Justices were taken the commission would consist of Clifford, Swayne, Miller, Davis and Field. It was claimed that, while this should be regarded as eminently fair, it did not suit the Republicans, who believe that what chances of bias there were were against them. Finally the geographical idea was suggested; and further, that it would hardly be fair to take Justices in the States in which the candidates resided. The Chief Justice and Justice Swayne reside in Ohio, and Justice Hunt in New York. It was then proposed that Justices Clifford and Swayne be taken, and that these should choose two others, and that the four thus chosen should select the fifth. This did not suit all around, and the proposition ensued that Justice Clifford, who is the senior Justice, and who resides in Maine, should be taken as one, Justice Strong, who resides in Philadelphia, and Justice Miller, who lives in Iowa and Justice Field, of California, as the three others and these four should name the fifth member of the tribunal. This proposition was at last accepted, and it is regarded probable that the fifth member to be chosen will be Justice Swayne or Davis.

JOHN R. MCPHERSON, Democrat, has been elected to succeed Mr. Frelinghuysen in the United States Senate from New Jersey.

J. W. LAXWELL, one of the Oregon Democratic candidates for Presidential Electors at the late election, testified before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections last week. He went to the meeting of the Oregon Electoral Committee, because he understood the Republican electors were going to take the electoral certificates from Cronin by force. Witness understood Secretary of State Chadwick to say, as he handed the envelope containing the certificates of the electors to Cronin: "Gentlemen, here are your certificates." He heard the Republican electors ask Cronin for their certificates, and Cronin replied "I will see hell freeze over before I will give them up."

MR. EATON, of Connecticut, was the only Democratic Senator who voted against the Arbitration bill. The announcement of the fact in the Connecticut Legislature was received with hisses from the Democratic side.

WASHINGTON.

CHARLES FISHER, who was recently convicted of purloining papers from the office of the District Attorney, in the District of Columbia, and subsequently pardoned and conveyed by his friends to the lunatic asylum, has made his escape from that institution.

THE breaking up of the ice in the Potomac, last week, did considerable damage. Several schooners and tugs were sunk and the wharves at Washington sustained serious injury.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says the President has expressed his intention of signing the bill providing for counting the electoral vote, in case it passes both houses of Congress.

THE Washington Chronicle has suspended publication....The State Department has received notice that the German Government has determined to abolish what are called the Honorary Consulates in the United States, and to establish and maintain no consulates henceforth except those to which a fixed salary is attached.... Beverly Nash (colored) Hayes elector in South Carolina, [illegible] recent session, testified before the Senate South Carolina Investigating Committee, the other day, that he was offered $30,000 by one Childs, a banker of Columbia, to cast his vote for Tilden in the electoral college. Childs denies the story, and says Nash manufactured it out of whole cloth.

THE House Judiciary Committee have unanimously resolved that articles of impeachment ought to be preferred against George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy....The House Sergeant-at-Arms arrived at Washington from New Orleans last week, having in charge Cassanave and Kenner, members of the Returning Board.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 24th says: "President Grant gives neither aid nor comfort in Louisiana. He again declares that he intends to make no final decision until all the evidence is before him, and until the reports of the Southern committees have been submitted to and considered by Congress. He is weary of the eternal row."....Gen. Belknap, who has been waiting in Washington ten months for trial since his indictment, has addressed a letter to the District Attorney, imploring him that he should apply directly to the Court for an immediate trial.... The House has practically decided to act unfavorably upon all bills which propose to repeal taxation. A bill providing for the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax on State banks, reported adversely from the Banking and Currency Committee, has been tabled....Action was taken in the House the other day which will probably result in preventing the Texas Pacific Railroad bill from seeing daylight again during the present session. The bill was referred to the committee of the whole, and a two-thirds vote will be necessary to get it before the House again.

THE Secretary of the Treasury to-day issued the thirty-eighth call for the redemption of $10,000,000 of 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November. The principal and interest will be paid on and after the 24th of April next, and interest will cease on that day. The following are the descriptions of the bonds: Coupon bonds, $100, Nos. 21,351 to 25,508, both inclusive; $500, Nos. 26,701 to 31,800, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 62,401 to 70,550, both inclusive; total, $2,000,000. Registered bonds, $50, Nos. 301 to 400, both inclusive; $100, Nos. 4,501 to 5,300, both inclusive; $500, Nos. 3,251 to 3,600, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 12,001 to 13,350, both inclusive; $5,000, Nos. 4,751 to 5,100, both inclusive; $10,000, Nos. 8,201 to 9,300; total, $8,000,000.

J. B. DENEERY, telegraph operator at Tallahassee, Florida, was examined by the House Committee on Privileges last week, and, in reply to the question, "Do you remember any telegrams passing between Z. Chandler and Gov. Stearns between the 8th and 12th of November?" answered that the first telegram of which he knew was from Z. Chandler to Gov. Stearns, and was in substance as follows: "We are absolutely sure of so many electoral votes for Hayes—(witness did not remember the number)—and we must have Louisiana, South Carolina and Florida, by fair means or otherwise"—he could not give the exact language of Chandler. Also telegraphed Gov. Stearns in substance: "Send couriers to each county and secure returns—they must be made to show a majority for Hayes." Z. Chandler also telegraphed Gov. Stearns: "William E. Chandler leaves to-night for Philadelphia on important business." Between the 8th and 12th of November, Frank B. Sherman, engaged with Gov. Stearns, handed him a telegram for transmission, signed by the latter, and addressed to Z. Chandler, in which mention was made of a train containing courier sent out for returns being Ku-Kluxed, followed by the remark: "We cannot carry the State for Hayes unless we have troops and money immediately." These were not the exact words, but the substance. Secretary Chandler denies that he ever wrote the dispatches in question.

GENERAL.

THE President has given his reasons for not upholding the Packard Government and disparaging the Nicholls Government in Louisiana. He referred to his experience in the prompt recognition of the Kellogg Government three years ago, and to the fact that he was not sustained by the Republican Senate or the Republican party at large, and said that this experience had suggested to him the propriety of proceeding with greater deliberation and caution in the present instance.

RECENT commercial failures: Michigan Salt and Lumber Company, Saginaw, Mich.; Keystone Burial Case Company, Sterling, Ill., liabilities, $300,000; L. J. Bigger, packer, Kansas City, Mo., $500,000; J. B. Caya & Co., Montreal, boots and shoes, $80,000; Warren Manufacturing Company, Warren, Me., woolens, $150,000....A serious war has broken out in Pennsylvania between the Atlantic and Pacific and Western Union Telegraph Companies, and the employes of the latter corporation have been amusing themselves by cutting down the poles and destroying the wires of the Atlantic and Pacific.

JUDGE DAVID DAVIS, whom the Illinois Legislature has selected as the successor of Mr. Logan in the United States Senate, was born in Maryland, in 1815, graduated at Kenyon College, studied law in Massachusetts, and in 1835 removed to Illinois, settled in Bloomington, and was admitted to practice there. In 1844 he was elected to the State Legislature, and in 1847 to the convention which framed the State constitution, which was the organic law of Illinois until the adoption of the constitution of 1871. In 1848 he was elected a Circuit Judge of the State, and filled the position by re-election until called to his present post, to which he was appointed in 1862. He was the intimate friend of Mr. Lincoln, rode the circuit with him for many years, and was a delegate at large to the Chicago Convention of 1860.... Gen. John McDonald, one of the leading members of the Missouri whisky ring, has been pardoned by President Grant.

A MOVEMENT has been set on foot by a large number of bankers, merchants, and other citizens of New York, for arranging a settlement between the defaulting Southern States and their creditors. At a meeting held the other day, at which William Cullen Bryant presided, resolutions of sympathy and good will were adopted, and a committee of arbiters, consisting of five disinterested Bank Presidents of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, was appointed to confer with the authorities of the defaulting States and devise equitable terms of settlement.

FOREIGN.

THE feeling in London seems to be that Turkey must paddle her own canoe henceforth, without relying upon England. The Times thinks the peace may be maintained, notwithstanding the failure of the conference.... Cuban advices state that two important engagements have recently been fought on the island, the patriots coming off victorious in both affairs....The rinderpest has again broken out in Europe.

A BERLIN dispatch says Russia is beginning to represent to the powers that, the demands of the conference having been rejected, it devolves upon Europe to take more forcible proceedings. Should Europe, as is certain, find it impossible to agree on joint action, Russia will be able to declare that the failure of the conference is the defeat of Europe, not of Russia.

AFTER the formal dissolution of the conference at Constantinople, the Russian representative, Gen. Ignatieff, publicly declared that if Turkey should disregard the armistice or take any action hostile to Montenegro and Servia, or if the Christian inhabitants of Turkey should be subjected to any hardships, Europe would treat such proceedings as provocations, and would consider what course ought to be adopted....Travel on the railway between Shanghai and Woosung, China, is stopped by native mobs, the rails obstructed and the workmen assaulted. The Chinese dislike to all material improvements is the cause of the disturbance.

RUSSIA, according to a cable dispatch, is considering the feasibility of an internal loan of 300,000,000 roubles ($180,000,000). Russia is but little better off, financially, than Turkey, but on account of the extent and resources of the empire, and the faith of the people in their Czar and their hatred of the Turk, there will probably be no difficulty in raising the amount, even without the aid of foreign capitalists.... A cable dispatch reports that the Turkish Ambassador has given Austria assurances that the Porte is disposed to make peace with Servia and Montenegro....Another colliery disaster has occurred in England, causing the death of fifteen or twenty miners.

AUSTRIA declines the Porte's request to mediate between Turkey and Servia and Montenegro, because she is averse to taking singly such a step, but advises the Porte to treat directly with the principalities....Advices from San Domingo [illegible] conciliatory measures, [illegible] imprisoning of [illegible] political [illegible]....The Sultan of Turkey proposes to import a lot of financiers from England, and intrust to them the business of reconstructing the demoralized fiscal affairs of his empire....The policy of Servia is still undecided. The ultra peace party demand an immediate settlement with Turkey. Their opponents urge delay.

REPORTS from Cuba assert that negotiations between the Spaniards and insurgents have led to an agreement which will restore peace to that long-distracted island. The accounts are lacking in specific details, but the salient point of the bargain appears to be that some system of self-government shall be established, at the head of which a Spanish Captain General shall remain for five years. After that the Cubans will be allowed to elect their own Governor....The deposed Chief Justice of Mexico, and constitutionally Acting President, Iglesias, has arrived at San Francisco by Pacific Mail steamer.... A Berlin dispatch says: "It is understood that after Ignatieff has presented his report Russia will address a communication to the powers explaining her position and appealing to their sense of honor to resent the affront offered to all Europe by the Porte, either by collective action or by empowering Russia to act for them. If this effort fails, Russia will next appeal to the allied empires. Should they not make satisfactory response, then, it is affirmed, she will act alone."

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Debate in the House on the Resolution Ordering the Arrest of the Louisiana Returning Board.

Mr. Lynde, from the Judiciary Committee, made a report relative to the refusal of Wells, Anderson, Cassanave, and Kenner, members of the Louisiana Returning Board, to [illegible] before the Committee on Elections in Louisiana certain papers demanded by said committee.

The report concludes with a resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody and bring before the bar of the House the above-named gentlemen.

Mr. Frye, a member of the Judiciary Committee, said when that report was agreed to in the committee there was no Republican member of the committee present. For his part he regarded the doctrine enunciated in it as a monstrous one. Under it there was no sovereignty anywhere in the country that was not subject to be called before a committee of the House and compelled to produce its original records. He held, on the contrary, that Congress had no more to do with the Returning Board of Louisiana than he as an individual had. It seemed that nothing was sacred from the Democratic investigating committees. Even to-day the committee of the House was committing the indecency of demanding from the National Republican Committee its whole manner of conducting a national campaign, its whole correspondence, all its telegrams, all its money, collections, etc. He was happy to say, as a member of that committee, that he had advised the putting in of everything, letters, telegrams, etc., for he knew perfectly well that there was nothing in them that would indicate fraud in Louisiana, Florida, or South Carolina. He knew that that committee believed the Republicans had carried these three States honestly and fairly, and that they would be counted for R. B. Hayes unless the Democrats of those States and of the United States should steal by fraud the votes of those States. He hoped that the galleries would not help the Democratic side of the House in this debate.

Mr. Luttrell—I do not think the gentleman has the right to charge the Democratic party with stealing when his Republican committees robbed the poor orphans and widows in the departments to carry on the campaign.

Mr. Frye—I did not know when I gave the gentleman from California liberty to ask a question that he wanted to interject a little demagogical stump speech that would meet the applause of the galleries on that side.

Mr. Luttrell—Do you deny that it is so? You were on the Republican National Committee and you know that the poor widows and orphans of the departments were made to pay for the campaign.

Mr. Frye—There is a committee of members of the House—intelligent members of the House—which is investigating that very subject. The committee will find out and answer the gentleman shortly.

Mr. Luttrell attempted to make another remark, but was informed by the Speaker that the gentleman from Maine was entitled to the floor.

"Well, sir," said Mr. Luttrell, "he bulldozed them."

Mr. Frye declared that the Republican Committee had never assessed, demanded, or asked contributions from such people as Mr. Luttrell had described. On the contrary, it had sent out a very polite request to the gentlemen who were commissioned by the President and confirmed by the Senate to help to run the campaign.

Mr. Luttrell—Was it not understood that every one who declined to pay an assessment should be discharged?

Mr. Frye—It was not so understood and there never was a man asked twice for a contribution.

Mr. Luttrell—Because if he refused he was discharged.

Mr. Frye—And there never was a suggestion that anybody should be punished for refusing to make a contribution, and there never was any contribution whatever to the Republican National Committee from the department clerks.

Mr. Cox, of New York, said that he would not follow the argument of the gentleman from Maine, which had been sufficiently answered by the badinage of the gentleman from California and by the ironical cheers of the galleries. The point before the House was simply whether the authority of the House should be disregarded by the Returning Board of Louisiana.

Mr. Kasson argued against the resolution because it would establish a precedent that a committee of the House could summon the Governor of a State to bring before it the papers of his office, and could bring that high official before the bar of the House, degrading him by asking him to stand at the bar and answer for contempt.

Mr. Hooker said that he would not follow the example of the gentleman from Maine (Frye) in seeking to avoid and evade the plain, simple proposition submitted by the report of the Judiciary Committee by stating with the emphasis which that gentleman did that he believed that for a series of years a great body of citizens of Louisiana had determined to deny the right of suffrage to a certain class which was entitled to it. What was there that surrounded the Returning Board of Louisiana with a sanctity which prevented it from giving to the committee of the House information as to whether there had been an honest vote in that State? Should it be said that the Returning Board had power to cast out votes from this or that parish and that there was no power which could investigate whether it had legally done so?

Mr. Garfield argued that the provisions of the constitution in regard to the Presidential election were imperative, and left no time or authority for a contest, and he challenged the naming of any statesman who had ever claimed for Congress the power (within the five limitations mentioned by him) to go inside of a State to look at the vote. If the votes of one State were examined the votes of all States might be, and thus an election of President might at any time be rendered impossible. He appealed to the Democratic side of the House to pause before it committed this act of assault and destruction on whatever there was of sovereignty in the thirty-eight States of the Union.

Mr. Davis, of North Carolina, asked Mr. Garfield why it was that partisan committees had been sent to three Southern States by President Grant.

Mr. Garfield—If the galleries will stop their chatter I will answer. The gentlemen who went to Louisiana at the request of the President went there only as invited witnesses, and on our arrival we were asked by a Democratic committee to join them in helping to secure a count of all the votes actually cast. We answered that we were not there to secure anything, but least of all were we there to direct any body in Louisiana to violate the laws of that State. That was their business, not ours.

Mr. Davis—By what authority did the President invite them there?

Mr. Garfield—If the gentleman needs to know by what authority an American citizen travels anywhere in the United States, he will learn the authority by which I for one, went to Louisiana.

Mr. Davis—Why was it that four years ago your party threw out the electoral votes of several States?

Mr. Wood, of New York, regretted that the gentleman from Ohio (Garfield) had seen fit to close an otherwise admirable argument by a mere partisan allusion which was entirely unnecessary to the discussion of the present matter. He wanted no partisan influence or reflection to enter into the discussion; and wanted the question determined on principles higher than party principles. He held that the States had not the sole power to appoint electors. They had power to appoint them under certain restrictions, and it necessarily followed that it devolved on Congress to ascertain whether that power had been executed in accordance with law. The constitution placed certain limits on the States, not on Congress, as the gentleman from Ohio (Garfield) maintained.

Mr. Lawrence proceeded to argue against the resolution, and in the course of the discussion he was met with suggestions about the interference with the State authorities in the Oregon case. In response to these suggestions Mr. Garfield expressed his hope that if there was no right to inquire into that fraud without violating the constitution of Oregon, Mr. Tilden would be counted in.

The previous question was then seconded, and the resolution went over.

Regular Proceedings.

FRIDAY, Jan. 19.—Senate.—Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, presented resolutions adopted by the Legislature of that State declaring that the certificates of electors from the various States are constitutional evidence of votes cast for President and Vice President, and must be counted.....The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was passed.. Louisiana was the theme of another long and lively debate in the Senate, in which Messrs. Bogy, of Missouri, and Sherman, of Ohio, were the chief participants. The former, in the course of his remarks, bitterly assailed the present State Government of Louisiana, and was loudly cheered by the galleries, whereupon, on motion of Mr. Edmunds, the gentlemen's gallery was cleared of spectators.

House.—Mr. Hunter, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a resolution discharging William Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Adopted without division... J. Madison Wells and Thomas C. Anderson were brought before the bar of the House to answer for contempt of the privileges of the House. Having answered to the question propounded by the Speaker, that they would prefer to postpone their further answer until the remaining members of the Louisiana Returning Board shall arrive in Washington, the matter was referred to the Judiciary Committee.... This was a gala day for the female suffragists in the House. By a preconcerted arrangement twenty-five petitions were presented by members from as many different States in behalf of a sixteenth amendment to the constitution guaranteeing that the franchise shall not be denied in any State on account of sex.

SATURDAY, Jan. 20.—Senate.—On motion of Mr. Edmunds, the bill reported by the special committee in regard to the count of the electoral vote was taken up. Mr. Edmunds proceeded to address the Senate at length, in advocacy of the measure. The following are some of the points made by him in favor of the bill: The purpose of the commission is to decide what is the electoral vote of a State. The election of the Congressional part of the commission by a viva voce vote renders intrigue impossible. The commission is large enough to prevent the possibility of corrupting influences. The Judges named are chosen according to geographical locality. To guard against any cavilling, the oath makes partisanship impossible. The commission is not to decide a policy or determine a future. It is to pass on the irrevocable past. The commission is to discover what is the paper, if any, which speaks the constitutional views of a State, and how many and what persons were elected electors. The plan, he claimed, holds the scale of justice in absolute equality and gives nothing to either party. The commission is to determine whether the electoral vote was cast according to law. Mr. Edmunds neither affirmed nor denied that the commission had power to go behind the returns. He only said that, if Congress had the right to do this, the commission had, or would have, and that was one of the questions submitted to it. Mr. Edmunds affirmed that the constitutionality of the bill was without a doubt. He maintained the President of the Senate has not the right to count the votes. He insisted that by no legal interpretation could it be held that the opening of the vote implied the right to count. Nor was the Vice President a Judge. If that theory is admitted, the monstrous proposition must be conceded that the Vice President can try and determine the case and finally declare himself President of the United States. He argued that the constitution had been so framed that there is but one provision in it which executes itself. That related to the capture of slave property. Every other provision is only executed by Congressional regulations. The President is Commander-in-Chief, but every act is regulated by law. The functions of the judiciary are prescribed by the constitution, yet their procedure is entirely controlled by law. The constitution, which was adapted to all time, was framed so that Congressional legislation could adapt it to the varied emergencies of different generations. He denied the fact emphatically that the precedents show that the President of the Senate has counted the votes. On the contrary, Mr. Edmunds affirmed that, as an arithmetical proposition, he had never even counted one vote. The tellers were always appointed, and that from John Langdon to Schuyler Colfax the two houses dictated to the presiding officer of the Senate the course he should pursue.

House.—The House, in committee of the whole, devoted the day to debate, the speeches taking a wide political range.

MONDAY, Jan. 22.—Senate.—Mr. Morton addressed the Senate in opposition to the Compromise bill in regard to counting the electoral vote. He bitterly assailed the measure, characterizing it as "the product of the Mississippi plan," declaring that "the shadow of intimidation had been seen in the Senate chamber." He believed Gov. Hayes had been elected under the forms of law, and that should he be counted in there would be no revolution. He argued in favor of the right of the President of the Senate to count the electoral votes. The President of the Senate did count the vote for seventy-two years; tellers were mere facilities for making calculations and keeping accounts. They counted what the President handed them down to count, and handing them down the certificates to count was the declaration of the vote. It continued from 1789 to 1861. Whether the electors were eligible was a matter left with the States under the injunctions of the constitution. The handing down of the certificate by the President of the Senate was a declaration of the vote contained in it. Very few Republicans respect the bill. It will be taken by Republicans, if taken at all, as a dose of castor oil. Senator Edmunds burned his ships behind him when he denied the power of the President of the Senate to count the votes in the absence of legislation. He thus seemed to make it a necessity to accept this bill. Mr. Morton's chief objection to the bill was that it gave the commission power to go behind the returns, and ascertain alone what electors were duly appointed, which he held to be unconstitutional, and regarded, besides, as a change of the existing status in favor of the Democrats. Mr. Frelinghuysen followed Mr. Morton in a written speech in favor of the bill. He argued in favor of the constitutionality of the measure, and denied that it gave the commission power to go back on the papers submitted to see how returning boards performed their duties. After Mr. Frelinghuysen took his seat nobody rose to speak. Mr. Edmunds wanted to push the bill to a third reading, as no amendments were offered. Mr. Sherman pleaded for delay. Mr. Mitchell moved to adjourn, and it was voted down. Mr. Edmunds explained the necessity of prompt decision for or against the bill. Mr. Sherman wanted the members of the committee to give their views upon it. Mr. Thurman explained that they had done so in their report, and its opponents should now make themselves heard. Mr. Cameron made a brief speech against the bill, denouncing it as a Democratic affair, gotten up by three or four Republicans to gratify their political opponents. Mr. Edmunds finally consented to let the bill go over.

House.—Mr. Frye introduced a bill for the trial of contested elections for the offices of President and Vice President. It provides that an election may be contested by any eligible person who has received the vote for President, and that the court for the trial of such contested election shall consist of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and six Judges of the Circuit or District Courts, to be selected by the Chief Justice. Bills were also introduced by Mr. Caulfield to regulate the distribution [illegible] in the District of Columbia, and by Mr. [illegible] to reform the civil service.

TUESDAY, Jan. 23.—Senate.—The Senate resumed consideration of the bill in regard to counting the electoral vote, and Mr. Sherman spoke in opposition to it. He said it was painful for him to dissent from the views of men whom he esteemed so highly, but after a brief examination he had given the measure he thought it was his duty to oppose it. The bill was to make a court to decide a [illegible] and there were provisions in it incompatible with the constitution. Such a law as this was an evil example, and it could not be sustained under the constitution. Mr. Sherman argued that the bill was unconstitutional, and he particularly opposed the clause providing for the selection of five Judges of the Supreme Court as members of the commission. He also opposed the measure because it undertook to delegate powers conferred upon Congress to a commission. He argued that the bill was intended to apply to a case past, ended and concluded, which was therefore unconstitutional. Another feature of the bill which violated the spirit of the constitution was that authorizing the appointment of a committee of five members of each house as members of a commission, not to take depositions and report as other committees, but to be beyond the control of the two houses after being organized. He approved of only one feature of the bill, and that was that neither house had the right to reject the electoral vote of a State. Mr. Sherman was followed by Mr. Conkling in a two hours' speech in favor of the bill. Mr. Conkling contended that it was the right and duty of Congress to ascertain and verify the electoral votes, and declare the true result of Presidential elections, or else, by an assertion of the law-making power, to declare how those acts should be done. He denied that the power to count the votes was vested in the President of the Senate, and said if the constitution gave all the power to one man, it was not easy to see how Congress could witness or verify the act. To open certificates was purely a ministerial act, but to count the votes was something more. The good certificates must be assorted from the bad ones. Mr. Conkling spoke at some length as to the constitutionality of the bill, and asked, did not reason and fitness of things inform the Senate that our fathers intended that the power to vitiate, on the allegation of fraud or irregularity, the electoral vote of a State, and thus turn an election, should not be reposed in one man? They knew it would be safer reposed in the American Congress. It was not designed to commit this vast power to one man, especially as that man might be the sole judge in his own case. Mr. Conkling was unable, on account of illness, to conclude his remarks, and further consideration of the bill was postponed one day.

House.—The President sent to the House a message explaining his reasons for sending troops to the South just before the recent Presidential election. It was done in response to a resolution adopted in December last.... The resolutions reported by the Select Committee on Privileges, declaring that the President of the Senate has not, and that Congress has, the right to count and declare the electoral votes, were taken up. Prof. Seelye secured the floor and delivered a strong speech in support of the Compromise bill. He denounced the report of the Committee on Privileges, and warned the House not to indorse a doctrine which, he claimed, would result in making the President the creature and the tool of the House. As to the methods of the last election and the testimony taken by both parties in the Southern committees, Prof. Seelye said that the only thing that is established beyond dispute is, that both parties acted as wrongfully as they could, restrained by no conscience, by no sense of honor or rectitude. Mr. Williams, of Wisconsin, argued in favor of the counting of the electoral vote by the President of the Senate. He was followed by Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, in a three hours' speech in favor of the Compromise bill....Mr. Butts was admitted as a member from South Carolina, and took the iron-clad oath.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 24.—Senate.—Consideration of the bill in regard to the electoral count was resumed. Mr. Conkling, who was entitled to the floor, not being present, Mr. Sargent took the floor and spoke in opposition to the bill. He said he did not believe the measure would accomplish the result aimed at. There were suspicions of unfairness about it; it gave improper powers to the tribunal which it created. He argued that the framers of the constitution never intended to delegate to Congress the power to count the electoral vote or discriminate between the returns; that function, he claimed, was lodged in the President of the Senate. Mr. Sargent further opposed the bill because, as he claimed, it depraved the Supreme Court by bringing the judges down into the muddy pool of politics, and compelled them to wade through it. At the conclusion of Mr. Sargent's speech, Mr. Conkling took the floor and resumed his remarks. He argued that in no instance had the President of the Senate attempted to do anything in presiding over the joint convention to count the electoral vote except by command of the two houses, and cited numerous precedents and authorities to sustain his position. Referring to Mr. Morton's assertion that the bill was a political contrivance, he said if there ever was a 'contrivance' it was the bill which passed at the last session; it was "a political Hell-gate, paved and honeycombed with dynamite." Mr. Conkling said he believed Gov. Hayes had been elected, but he asked him to take a title to the great office which no one could question. If this bill was a compromise of truth, of law, or of right, he was against it; but he denied that it was any compromise, and, above all, it did not compromise right, principle or constitution. To contest a claim was not to compromise it. To insist upon an honest, fair counting of the electoral vote was not a compromise. A Presidential election had occurred, and unless there was a tie somebody had been chosen. To establish that fact was no compromise. Mr. Conkling was followed by Mr. Morton in a vigorous speech in opposition to the bill. Messrs. Bayard, Christiancy, Thurman, Stevenson and Morrill all spoke in favor of the measure, and Mr. Morton again secured the floor, and, at 1 o'clock a. m., began his third speech against the bill. At the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Blaine secured the recognition of the presiding officer, and spoke in opposition to the bill. He did not believe Congress possessed the powers which it was proposed to transfer to the commission, and therefore opposed it on constitutional grounds. In conclusion he urged upon Congress to prepare at the present session and submit to an expectant people a constitutional amendment which would relieve the country in future from similar difficulties. Mr. Howe succeeded Mr. Blaine at 2:05 o'clock in the morning (the Senate, by a large majority, having repeatedly voted down motions to adjourn), and began by denouncing Mr. Morton's intemperate aspersions. He expressed the hope that the measure would receive a unanimous vote from the Republican party in the two houses.

House.—Consideration was resumed of the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges, and Mr. McDill, of Iowa, took the floor, and spoke in favor of the resolutions submitted by the minority of the committee. He said if the proposition of the majority was true, that no vote could be counted without the consent of the House, it would give the House a practical veto power over every election by the people. He was followed by Mr. Bright, who took the opposite ground. He maintained that the constitution gave Congress control of the whole subject, and that no Returning Board could oust Congress of its jurisdiction.... Mr. Payne, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill to amend existing laws in regard to National gold banks....Mr. Lamar, from the Pacific railroad committee, reported back favorably the Senate bill extending for eight years the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad.. Mr. Lamar also, from the same committee, reported supplementary to and amendatory of the Texas Pacific Railroad bill of March 3, 1871. Mr. Kasson made a minority report and Mr. Landers offered a substitute. All were ordered printed and referred to the committee of the whole on the state of the Union....The message of the President in regard to the use of troops in the South at the late election, was, after a spirited partisan debate, referred to a select committee of eleven to inquire whether there had been an exercise of authority not warranted by the constitution and laws in the use of troops for which the President is justly responsible, with power to send for persons and papers.

THURSDAY, Jan. 25.—Senate.—The debate in the Senate on the bill reported by the select committee in regard to counting the electoral vote was continued all night. Mr. Morton continued his speech in opposition to the bill. He claimed that the bill was flagrantly unconstitutional, that the commission could not carry out its provisions without going behind the returns, and the bill was sprinkled all over with very white, pretty meal, but the Democratic cat was reposing beneath it, and earnestly urged Republican Senators to vote against it. Mr. Blaine followed Mr. Morton, and opposed the measure on constitutional grounds. He had desired earnestly to support the bill, if he could do it consistently. The arguments adduced in its favor had persuaded him of its unconstitutionality, and he felt himself compelled, however reluctantly he differed from certain Senators, to record his vote against the measure. Mr. Howe, of Wisconsin, made an earnest speech in advocacy of the bill. He characterized it as the proudest tribute to American statesmanship that had been prepared since the convention which framed the constitution adjourned. He would have been glad if it had received the unanimous approval of the [illegible]—then he would have felt like one greater than himself felt when looking upon the infant Saviour. He would have felt that he had seen the salvation of his people and of his country. Mr. Thurman spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Whyte, of Maryland, had doubts as to its constitutionality, but would vote for it as a temporary remedy. Mr. Eaton, of Connecticut, the only Democrat opposing the bill, denounced it as unconstitutional, said the power to count the electoral votes was vested in the two houses of Congress, and that "this bill, this contrivance, should sink into the earth." Mr. Burnside expressed the hope that the bill would pass. Mr. Edmunds closed the debate with an earnest appeal in behalf of the bill, at the conclusion of which a vote was taken, and resulted as follows: Yeas—Messrs. Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Howe, Johnson, Jones (Fla.), Jones (Nev.), Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Price, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, Withers, Wright—47. Nays—Blaine, Bruce, Cameron (Pa.), Cameron (Wis.), [illegible] Hamilton, Hamlin, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman, [illegible]

House.—The House took up the Electoral Tribunal bill, and Mr. McCrary, of Iowa, a member of the joint committee, opened the debate. He said the country was in the presence of a very great and very dangerous emergency. The present was a crisis in national affairs which the fathers of the republic had foreseen in 1800, and which at various periods in the nation's history great statesmen had foreseen and had dreaded. The country was confronted, not only with great and widespread difference of opinion on the merits of the question, but it was confronted with what was a thousand-fold more perilous, with the fact that the American people, American statesmen, American lawyers and jurists were almost equally divided, not only as to the merits of the question, but as to authorities to be cited. He submitted that that statesman was false to his duty; that that man did not come up to the exigencies of the occasion, who would stop short in the most earnest endeavors to provide some lawful mode for the decision of this question by a tribunal whose authority nobody could question, and in whose decision all men would acquiesce. Mr. Hunton, of Virginia, also a member of the committee advocated the measure. He held that just as the tellers provided for in the twenty-second joint rule were but the organs of the two houses, so, the commission provided for in the bill was but their organ to do for them what they themselves might do. He also held that as the two houses had the right to count the votes, so they had the right of concurrent action to agree to any mode of counting that might seem best to them. Mr. Hoar spoke in favor of the bill. Nothing, he said, could be more injurious to the republic than that a man should be put in the Presidential office whom at least one-half of the American people would regard as a usurper. He could not conceive that the framers of the constitution ever thought of yielding to the President of the Senate the vast power of counting the electoral votes. That power was in the two houses of Congress just as the English Parliament had for centuries regulated all questions affecting the succession to the crown. In conclusion Mr. Hoar said: "The act which we are about to do will in my judgment be one of the very bravest in human history. Our annals have been crowded with great achievements in war, in peace, in arts, in literature, in commerce; but other countries have equaled us in those particulars, but in this great act we stand without a rival and without an example. For a thousand years our children, [illegible] pride, will read that while in fierce strife for executive power the sun of other republics after a short but brilliant day has gone down in darkness and in blood, in their own country, too, the same great strife has arisen; that their sky has been darkened by the same cloud; that their ship, with its costly freight of love and hope, encountered the same storm, and was driven near the same rocks, but that, in the midst of the storm and darkness and conflict, the august and awful figure of the law rose over the face of the waters, uttering its divine, controlling mandate, 'Peace, be still.'" Mr. Hale, of Maine, spoke in opposition to the bill. He said the measure startled him by the bold assumption of the power of Congress to regulate and control the election of President, which power, in his judgment, had never been lodged in the two houses by the framers of the constitution. Whatever the popular impulse might be now, this bill would not be sustained by the American people when they should have time to measure and contemplate its consequences. It struck a blow at the Electoral College, which stood as high in the constitution as the Presidency itself, and shattered it from turret to foundation stone, and it substituted for it the power of Congress, which might at any time thwart the will of the people and render nugatory its deliberate and expressed judgment. The debate was continued till 11 o'clock p. m., Hewitt, of New York, Caldwell, of Tennessee, Springer, of Illinois, and Willard, of Michigan, speaking in favor of the bill, and Monroe, of Ohio, Smith, of Pennsylvania, and Garfield, of Ohio, in opposition.

Water-Proof Blacking.

If ever one needs a good, water-proof blacking for boots and shoes, it is at this season of sleet, hail and snow. The following recipe for making a water-proof blacking comes to us highly recommended: Dissolve an ounce of borax in water, and in this dissolve gum shellac until it is the consistency of thin paste; add lampblack to color. This makes a cheap and excellent blacking for boots, giving them the polish of new leather. The shellac makes the boots or shoes almost entirely water-proof. Camphor dissolved in alcohol, added to the blacking, makes the leather more pliable and keeps it from cracking. This is sold at 50 cents for a small bottle. By making it yourself, $1 will buy materials for a gallon.—Rural New Yorker.

THE LOUISIANA OUTRAGE.

Speech of Hon. George W. Julian, of Indiana, Delivered at Indianapolis.

THE DISPUTE IN LOUISIANA.

Soon after the late Presidential election, when Democratic rejoicing was exchanged for the chilling apprehension of defeat and disaster through the action of the Louisiana Returning Board, the Chairman of the National Democratic Committee requested sundry gentlemen of the Northern States to repair to the city of New Orleans in the interest of "a fair and honest return" of the votes cast in that State. The President of the United States ordered the presence of an imposing military force "to preserve peace and good order, and to see that the proper and legal Boards of Canvassers are unmolested in the performance of their duties." He declared, in this military order, that "should there be any ground of suspicion of a fraudulent count on either side, it should be reported and denounced at once," and that "no man worthy of the office of President should be willing to hold it, if counted in or placed there by fraud." He also appointed a number of prominent public characters and representative men in the party with which he is associated to visit the State of Louisiana, "to see that the Board of Canvassers make a fair count of the vote actually cast," and expressed the hope that "fair men of both parties" would attend to this duty. The Returning Board itself so far recognized the gravity of the situation and the wide-spread distrust of its integrity, that an official invitation was extended to the visitors from distant States of the Union to attend its session, while canvassing the returns and ascertaining the result of the Presidential election in Louisiana.

THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR THESE TROUBLES.

These are very remarkable proceedings. They have no precedent in the history of American politics, and they bear witness to the fearful decay of public virtue, and the alarming drift of public affairs toward abnormal and revolutionary methods. At whose door lies the just responsibility? Who is to blame for the atmosphere of suspicion which now covers the land, and the feeling of national peril which recalls so painfully the opening of the year 1861? The answer to these questions is not unknown to the people. The present government of the State of Louisiana was founded on flagrant usurpation and barefaced fraud. It was conceived in the illegal order of a drunken and corrupt Federal Judge, and midwifed by the political knaves and traders who controlled the National Administration four years, as they control it to-day. While the people of Louisiana have been prostrate and helpless under the heel of Federal tyranny, the Returning Board has been the vile instrument of that tyranny in the furtherance of its baleful purposes, which it has sought to drape over under the forms of law. It is the creature of the same organized political rapacity which has trampled down law and insulted decency in the States of the South during the past eight years. Under the act creating this board its members hold their places for life, with power to appoint their successors. There is no appeal from their decision, whatever it may be, according to the ruling of the Supreme Court of the State, and no accountability to the people for their acts. Although they are a tribunal of special and limited jurisdiction, and their acts, whether ministerial or judicial, are to be construed strictly, and are absolutely void if not authorized by the law from which they derive all their power, yet, according to the authority cited, there is no redress against their rulings, however defiantly they may transcend their jurisdiction or trample justice under their feet. For any reason or for no reason at all, they may count in or count out the vote of any parish or precinct in the State, and thus arbitrarily determine the character of the Government under which her people are to live, contrary to their choice, and the character of the National Administration for four years, should it depend on the vote of the State. While the guilt of the board in an act so heaven-daring would be multiplied by the millions whose voices it would stifle, these millions would be utterly without remedy, even in the Congress of the nation, according to the leaders of the Republican party.

THE RETURNING BOARD.

And who are the men constituting this autocratic if not omnipotent institution of the Republican party in Louisiana, concocted in the worst days of carpet-bag government, and for the most nefarious purposes? Two of them are white men and two colored. They are the same men who sat upon the board in 1874, and after the election in that year took the majority of votes away from one side and gave it to the other by "unjust, arbitrary, and illegal action," as admitted by a Republican Congressional committee, of which one William A. Wheeler was a member. They are all members of the Republican party, and one of them holds a custom-house office under the spoils-hunting system of the present administration. J. Madison Wells, the President of the board, who was elected Governor of Louisiana under the reconstruction policy of President Johnson, was summarily ejected from that office in 1867 by Gen. Sheridan, for violating an act of the Legislature respecting the repair of her levees, and seeking to prostitute the funds of the State to partisan purposes. Gen. Sheridan branded him as a "political trickster and a dishonored man," and charged him with "subterfuge and political chicanery." He declared that "his conduct had been as sinuous as the mark left in the dust by the movement of a snake," and that "he had not one friend who is an honest man." After a stay in New Orleans of over three weeks, and mingling freely with the people when not engaged in watching the action of the Returning Board, I have no hesitation in indorsing the statement of Gen. Sheridan as true. Gov. Wells is not only a journeyman and expert in rascality, through long years of training and experience, but he is a scoundrel aboriginally; and in saying this I believe I simply give expression to the general sentiment of the State. Anderson, the other white man on the board, is not quite so vicious. The element of humanity is not so fatally left out of his composition. He is not so coldblooded. If placed in command of a pirate ship he might falter in some emergency which his more intrepid and satanic companion on board would enjoy as a luxury. But he is not wanting the qualities which have made the Returning Board famous, for he is a thoroughly accomplished knave and swindler. He counts well, and is, in a word, the fit companion and associate in office of the President of the body. Cassanave, one of the colored members of the board, is an undertaker by occupation, and was a slaveholder before the war. He is a man of limited education and intelligence, and not at all qualified by capacity or training for the position he occupies. He is a very strong partisan, but is regarded as a kindly, well-disposed sort of man, whose worst misfortune is that the thoroughly unprincipled men on the board use him as their tool. This must be regarded as certain, in the absence of any proof that he has ever opposed the confessed illegality and fraud of his associates. Kenner, the other colored man, and junior member of the board, is a very small, light mulatto, quick and sprightly in his movements, but altogether unfitted by talents, education, or experience, for so responsible a position. He is a gambler and grog-seller, a very low fellow, and a few years ago was kicked out of a saloon in New Orleans for stealing the money of his employer.

A CONFERENCE PROPOSED AND REJECTED—THE REASONS.

Representative men of both political parties had reached the theater of trouble, as the avowed missionaries of peace and fair dealing. The man who represented the Democratic side of the controversy, fully appreciating the seriousness of the situation, addressed a brief letter to Stanley Matthews, John Sherman, and other representative Republicans who had been deputed by the President, proposing a joint conference "in order that such influence as they possessed might be exerted in behalf of such a canvass of the votes as by its fairness and impartiality should command the respect and acquiescence of the American people of all parties." I submit to all just and reasonable men that this was a fair and manly proposition. I am sure it was made in good faith, and that not a man who joined in it would have been willing to see Tilden and Hendricks counted in by fraud. We simply asked for a fair count, and the supervision of the canvass by a conference representing both sides of the disputed question. It might not have accomplished any valuable result, but in so threatening an aspect of public affairs the effort was certainly to be commended, and could not honorably be declined. What was the answer to our proposition by the deputies of the President and leaders of the Republican party? They say in the outset that they "know of no reason to doubt that a perfectly honest and just declaration of the results of the recent election in Louisiana by its lawfully constituted authorities will be made." Gentlemen, would any of you have believed it morally possible for Stanley Matthews, John Sherman, and their Republican co-laborers in Louisiana to face the American people with a statement so [illegible]? And yet these were equal to the extraordinary task, and they are "all honorable men." I will not be so ungenerous and impolite as to call in question their veracity, but it can only be defended by an impeachment of their intelligence, almost as disgraceful as lying. No reason to doubt that a perfectly honest and just declaration of the vote in Louisiana would be made by the infamous Returning Board! Then they had mingled freely with the people of New Orleans without ever having heard of the notoriously bad character of three of the four members of that board? William A. Wheeler, two years ago, pronounced it a "disgrace to civilization!" They had never heard that it was proved before a Congressional committee of Republicans, about the same time, that the President of this board perjured himself in the testimony he gave respecting the election of 1874! They had never heard of the perfectly well-known fact that in that year this board illegally and unjustly took the majority of votes honestly and fairly given to the Democratic ticket, and counted them on the other side, as admitted by the Congressional committee referred to, which was composed of the political friends of these surprisingly innocent and ignorant politicians, and of the members of the board itself! They had never heard that Gen. Sheridan had summarily turned the President of the board out of his Gubernatorial office in 1867, on account of his shameless rascality and disregard of law! Who would have supposed that our country was afflicted with so rare an assemblage of political Rip Van Winkles as that which reported for duty in New Orleans under the lead of Sherman, Garfield and Kelly?

FURTHER REASONS—"THE INNOCENTS ABROAD."

But these Republican patriots declined our proposal for a joint conference for the further reason that they were present as mere "witnesses, without power or legal influence" over the action of the board. They said they were "strangers without official functions," and that "it would be a manifest interference with State rights and local self-government for persons like ourselves, without official rights, to attempt to interfere with or control" the actions of such a tribunal. Will wonders never cease? John Sherman and his confederate Republicans preaching the gospel of State rights and local self-government in Louisiana. The chief apostles of Federal usurpation and the Christianity of the bayonet striving to hide the villainies of a Republican returning board under the mantel of Thomas Jefferson. The sanctities of law invoked by the assassins of a State! Could anything be more sublimely impudent or more charmingly satanic? These emissaries of the President knew that the men who proposed a joint conference were not such idiots as to suppose it would possess any official power over the legal functions of the board. When Senator Sherman pretended not to know this, the man was forgotten in the pettifogger. What we hoped from the presence and co-operative action of leading Republicans and Democrats was the exercise of such a moral influence over this suspected tribunal as would secure publicity, impartiality and fairness in its methods of canvassing the votes and ascertaining the result. Our purpose was unmistakable, and it accorded perfectly with the declared wish of the President, that "representative and fair men of both parties" would visit Louisiana "to see that the Board of Canvassers make a fair count of the vote actually cast." The presence of these Republican leaders in New Orleans in response to the invitation of their chief, was a clear recognition of the very power which they afterward disclaimed by styling themselves "strangers," with no right to "control or influence any of the officers of the board as to the manner in which they shall perform ministerial or political duties." Fellow-citizens, can any of you divine what brought these gentlemen to New Orleans? They recoil from the very thought of exercising any influence, legal or moral, over the action of the board, or the method of its proceedings. They say they know of no reason to doubt that it would make a perfectly honest and just declaration of the result of the election. And yet here were twenty-six "eminent citizens" and "Christian statesmen" simultaneously leaving their homes for Louisiana at the call of the President and attending the sessions of the Returning Board in successive squads till its work was done. What is the meaning of all this? They say they went as "witnesses," but why go so far to witness a performance that would undoubtedly be conducted with perfect honesty and fairness? Why make a long journey for the mere purpose of becoming spectators of a proceeding over which they could exercise neither legal control nor moral influence? These provoking questions are rendered all the more so by the singular fact that this formidable body of "witnesses" which the President detailed for duty at New Orleans disobeyed their orders. The private citizens and strangers, whose innocent and useless mission was that of simple spectators of the doings of the board failed even in that duty. They were in the court room in which the board sat while canvassing the returns and examining the papers, but with rare and very slight exceptions they gave no more attention to what was going on, and manifested no more interest in the proceedings than if the whole affair had related exclusively to the denizens of another planet. Their confidence in the board seemed to be so gushing and unreserved that they peacefully resigned themselves to their correspondence, their newspapers, and their cigars, while the presence of a formidable military force in this city to "see that the members of the board were unmolested in the performance of their duties," was probably felt as a superadded solace to their souls. They may have been "witnesses" to some of the acts of the board, but if so, it must have been at night, in some appointed gathering of the politically-elect, into which no friend of Tilden and Hendricks could be admitted. Gentlemen, I desire to do injustice to no man. Unfounded suspicion is mean and cowardly; but in the light of the facts I have stated I again ask the question, why did this remarkable troupe of political partisans visit the State of Louisiana? Did they go to see the orange groves and sugar mills of the State, or the jetties of the Mississippi? Was it a trip of mere pleasure, or private business, accidentally happening at the time the Returning Board was in session? Was the invitation of the President utterly without meaning? If their mission was political, do you believe they went as an embassy of peace, putting party under their feet in the overmastering desire to tranquilize the public mind and enforce justice and law in counting the votes of the State? Or did they go as the backers and accomplices of the Returning Board, in the conspiracy to count out the lawfully elected President of the United States, by wrenching from the people of Louisiana for the third time the precious right of self-government? Answer these questions for yourselves, after you have followed me in the further development of my subject.

THE VACANCY IN THE RETURNING BOARD—PETTIFOGGING.

The board entered on its regular duties on the 20th of November. Was it legally constituted? The law creating it declares that it shall consist of five members, and that all the political parties of the State shall be represented. But there were but four members, and these all Republicans; and yet Senator Sherman, in the Senate the other day, said "the board was legally constituted." What does he mean by so reckless a statement? It is not denied that the action of four members would be as legal as that of the whole, so far as numbers are concerned; but here is a positive requirement that all political parties shall be represented on the board. This is just as binding as the provision fixing the number of the body. A board consisting of two members could not act, because it would lack the numerical qualification prescribed by law, just as a board composed exclusively of members of one political party lacks the political qualification prescribed by the same law. The first duty of the board, therefore, without which I think it was powerless to perform any other, was to fill the vacancy, which the law expressly authorized and required it to do. The counsel for the Democratic candidates formally asked for the performance of this obvious and imperative duty, suggesting the name of a most worthy and well-qualified man for the position; but the board refused. It defiantly trampled under foot the two-fold command of the law to fill the vacancy, and to supply the political element which was wanting. President Wells, "the plain man," who seems to be a great favorite of Senator Sherman, said the Democrats had lost their right to a member of the board by the resignation of Mr. Arroyo, which I think took place a year and a half ago. He further said that the board had failed to agree as to the appointment of the gentleman suggested, as if no other man could be found among the more than 80,000 Democrats and Conservatives of the State. He made the further pitiful plea, that when this Returning Board was first created there was no such organization as the Democratic-Conservative party in the State, as if that fact could furnish the slightest excuse for violating the law to-day. This miserable drivel, by the side of which the worst forms of pettifogging become respectable, is paraded in the Senate of the United States by Mr. Sherman as a vindication of the board; while in a recent debate in the House of Representatives, Mr. Hale, of Maine, sought to extricate Gov. Wells from his despicable dilemma by saying that at its late session the board had offered the vacancy to as many as six Democrats, who successively declined it. This statement is absolutely untrue. Not a Democrat was offered the position, although the board was urged, morning after morning during its sessions, to fill it. Why did it refuse? For the perfectly manifest reason that a Democratic member would be an unmanageable obstacle to the work to be done. He would have a right to take part in the oral examination of witnesses. He would have a share in the work of canvassing the returns. He would have a right to be present in the secret conferences of the board, during its protracted public sessions. And he would be present at the final cooking of the returns by which the State was to be cheated, and would be the witness of the transaction. These are exactly the reasons why the board stubbornly and brazenly refused to fill the vacancy; and I believe no man will deny it who is acquainted with its history, except the innocent and childlike Senator Sherman, and the guileless political babes who played their part as "witnesses" so inoffensively at New Orleans. Gentlemen, the defense of such lawlessness by honorable men in either branch of Congress would be a melancholy fact, even if this Board had been able to point to a record of unimpeachable good behavior in the past. But its character was bad in the judgment of all political parties. It had thwarted the will of the people of Louisiana two years before, by making the ballot the football of knavery and fraud. Its integrity was suspected by intelligent men throughout the entire land, and its action in thus violating the principle that no man shall be a judge in his own case, was as shameless as would be that of a Judge of one of your own courts who should claim the right to occupy the bench and charge the jury on the trial of an indictment against himself, after a former conviction for the same offense. Its audacity in clutching at party machinery and scouting the virtues of honesty, impartiality, and fairness, while proceeding to decide the grave issues of a State and national election, is enough to provoke the laughter and amazement of devils. Senator Sherman defends it. He thinks Gov. Wells "the peer of any man in the Senate," and he sees nothing wrong in the further fact that the clerical force of the board was also packed with Republicans. He says there was no law requiring a political division of the clerks, and that Democrats, when they have the offices, do not divide with the Republicans. But this is a very transparent dodge. The point here involved is not one of law, but decency. The Returning Board is covered with public suspicion. Its character is stained by fraud. If bent upon further rascalities it would, of course, want a body of faithful clerical scullions, skilled in the work of falsely and fraudulently canvassing and tabulating the votes, and all acting harmoniously in the service of their master. This, of course, would be seriously interfered with by the presence of Democrats, while no harm would be done if honor and fair play were to be the governing principles. All this is as palpable as the moral blindness which hinders very distinguished and honorable gentlemen from seeing it.

SECRECY AND SKULKING.

But the board not only signalized the beginning of its work by openly violating the law affecting its organization and functions, but it still further confirmed the popular distrust of its integrity by excluding the public from its sessions. Judge Spofford, one of the counsel for the Democratic candidates, made a very earnest and eloquent appeal for publicity. He reminded the board that forty millions of people were watching its proceedings, and quoted the language of the President, that "should there be any grounds of suspicion of a fraudulent counting on the other side, it should be reported and denounced at once." In the name of the American people he asked that no part of the work should "be done in a corner," and declared that there was "no call for privacy in applying the rules of arithmetic." But the board refused to listen to this demand on the flimsy pretext that if it was surrounded by a multitude of people it would be disturbed and delayed in its proceedings. What the country wanted was, not only an honest count of the vote, but that the proceedings should be conducted with such evident fairness as to make this unquestionable to the people of all parties. If at all possible, suspicion should have been entirely disarmed by invoking the full light of day upon a transaction so pregnant with interest, both to the State and the nation. But "men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." The people of Louisiana were not allowed to witness the canvass of their own votes. The press reporters, representing the leading newspapers of the country, were excluded from the court-room on their petition to be admitted. The Supervisors of Registration and Elections who desired to witness the canvass of the votes were not allowed to be present, either in person or by their counsel. The Democratic candidates and their attorneys were also excluded, except on the hearing of contested cases, although their presence was exceedingly important during the entire proceedings, owing to their familiarity with the different parishes and voting precincts, and their ability to detect any indications of fraud on the opening of the returns, which the visiting committee present would necessarily fail to discover. The board, it is true, so far yielded to the pressure from without as to permit the presence of two political committees, with a reporter for each, but this was an exceedingly frail barrier against secret manipulation and fraud in the returns. These committees were composed of strangers from distant States, wholly unfamiliar with the practical roguery of Louisiana officials, while the exclusion of the general press reporters, the people of the State, the Supervisors and Registrars of Elections, and the candidates for office, was wholly indefensible, and utterly irreconcilable with an honest purpose to serve the interests of truth. It perfectly accorded, however, with the action of the board in other respects. It had openly violated the law as to its organization. It had excluded from any share in its deliberations every element that would not yield unhesitating obedience to its base purposes. It had usurped the right to sit as final judge of its own flagitious acts. It had fully recorded its purpose to re-enact the foul game of 1874. It was entirely natural, therefore, that it should wrap itself in the mantle of darkness when entering upon the final chapter of its unhallowed conspiracy to cheat the people of the United States.

THE LAWLESS ACTS OF THE BOARD.

But let us follow the board in its work. The counsel for the Democratic candidates, at the outset, protested against the right of the board to canvass the electoral vote at all, but the protest was summarily overruled and no opportunity allowed for argument. With characteristic one-sidedness, the board ruled in favor of its own jurisdiction; and Senator Sherman, in his late letter to the President, declares that its action is "independent of State and national laws other than those of Louisiana," and "finally and substantially conclusive as to the votes cast and candidates elected." In support of this position he cites a decision of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, well knowing at the time that Chief Justice Ludeling, who pronounced that decision, had been branded with "fraud and breach of trust" by the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case which brought his character in question. But conceding that there is no appeal from the decision of this board, their finality certainly could not be admitted as to questions beyond its jurisdiction. It has no right to wander away from its appointed work and pass upon questions not cognizable by it, under the law from which it derives its authority. Judge Trumbull and his associates, in their late Louisiana report, have conclusively shown that the law of 1872 creating this tribunal, and under which it acted, makes no provision as to the manner of appointing electors for President and Vice President, while it seems to repeal all other laws on the subject of elections. They show that if the previous act of 1870 respecting the appointment of Presidential electors is repealed, there is no law of the State on the subject, and the board is consequently without authority to canvass the votes for such electors; but that if the act of 1870 is not repealed, the canvass of the votes for electors must be made by the Governor in the presence of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, a Judge in the district in which the seat of government may be established, or any two of them, as required by that act. The public has been made acquainted with this argument, and I need not repeat it at length, and although Mr. Sherman refers to it as "an array of technicalities," its soundness has been indorsed by some of the ablest lawyers of the country, and has not been successfully impeached in any quarter.

But even if the board had the right to canvass the electoral vote, it clearly transcended its legal authority in throwing out votes on account of intimidation and violence. Its simple duty was to canvass and compile the returns and proclaim the result, unless the Commissioners of Election or the Supervisors of Registration imposed upon it a further duty by laying a legal foundation for it as provided for in sections 26 and 43 of the State Election law. That foundation must consist of the affidavit of the Supervisor of Registration or Commissioners of Elections, supported by the affidavits of three or more citizens, setting forth the facts of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free and peaceable election, and showing the number of qualified electors deterred by such proceedings from voting or registering. This statement must be made out within 24 hours after the receipt of all the returns for the different polling-places, and shall be forwarded in duplicate to the Supervisors of Registration of the parishes. If this foundation is not laid, the board has no jurisdiction whatever except to count the votes returned. It has no right to attack the returns from any poll, ward or parish in the State, for any of the causes specified. If the decision of the board is final, it is because its proceedings have tracked the law, and are therefore backed by its authority. The board has no ex-officio power to institute complaints against any poll. The special provisions of the law have an unmistakable meaning. Their purpose is that all the Supervisors shall be engaged simultaneously in their several parishes in completing their returns and statements on the spot where the election was held, without communication with each other or with persons beyond the parish, and before they can obtain information of what has been done in other parishes, or any clear knowledge of the result. The design is to exclude from the consideration of the Returning Board all ex post facto complaints which might be trumped up at the last moment for dishonest purposes. And this was the declared opinion of Messrs. Hoar, Wheeler and Frye, in their famous report of February, 1875, in which they say: "We are clearly of opinion that the Returning Board has no right to do anything except to canvass and compile the returns which were lawfully made to them by local officers, except in cases where they were accompanied by the certificate of the Supervisor or Commissioner provided in the third section." I believe no such foundation for the jurisdiction of the board as the law requires was laid in any parish of the State, and certainly not in any of the five which have been the chief theater of alleged intimidation and violence. The action of the board, therefore, in seeking to defeat the will of the people of Louisiana, by disfranchising more than 13,000 Democratic voters, was not only a flagrant usurpation of authority, but a most unpardonable sin against "the habit of obedience to the forms of law," which the visiting committee of Republicans at New Orleans lately solemnly warned us "should be sedulously inculcated," and that "the resort to extra-constitutional modes of redress for even actual grievances should be avoided and condemned as revolutionary, disorganizing, and tending to disorder and anarchy."

Wisconsin.

Wisconsin is one of the fortunate few States in the Union that have a small debt. Its debt is only $2,252,057—little more than one year's receipts of revenue. The receipts into the State treasury last year were $1,976,074, including a balance of $277,781, and the disbursements were $1,660,000, leaving a balance Sept. 30, 1876, of $315,866. The general fund, amounting to $1,148,748, supplies the money to pay the expenses of government, and of the benevolent and other public institutions. Of the whole amount $657,000 was derived from State taxes, and $395,000 from railroads—from which it would appear that the railroads in Wisconsin pay about one-fourth the cost of the government. The charitable and penal institutions of the State cost last year $433,542. The various trust funds for the benefit of common schools and colleges amount to $4,050,000. The estimated receipts for the present year are $1,300,000, of which $400,000 will come from the railroads. The estimated expenditures are $975,000. The total amount of taxes collected for all purposes in 1875 was $8,000,000, of which $795,000 was for State purposes, $1,572,000 for county purposes, $1,700,000 for schools, and $2,980,000 for town purposes. The number of convicts in the penitentiary is 300—about one-fourth the number we have in Missouri.—St. Louis Republican.

Uncle Sam in Luck.

Some months ago an eccentric man named Charles Fox died in New York city leaving a will in which he provided liberally for all his living relatives, giving each a stated sum, and bequeathing the balance of his property, amounting, it is supposed, to between $100,000 and $150,000, to the United States Government, to be applied toward the payment of the public debt. Senator Booth has introduced a bill in Congress providing for the appointment of a trustee to look after the interest of the Government and the settlement of the estate.

The Corn Yield for Eight Years.

The corn crop harvested in the United States since 1868 is as follows:

	Bushels.
1868	906,000,000
1869	874,000,000
1870	1,094,000,000
1871	991,000,000
1872	1,097,000,000
1873	932,000,000
1874	854,000,000
1875	1,100,000,000
1876	1,300,000,000

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

THURSDAY, Jan. 18.—SENATE.—Mr. Baxter introduced his temperance bill, which provides for a State Commissioner, to be appointed by the Governor, who shall have sole control of liquor sales in the State. In each city and town there shall be an agent for the sale of liquors, he to receive them from the State Superintendent and sell only for medicinal and medicinal purposes. The saloon-keeper selling in violation of the laws is held responsible with the drunkard for any damages. The drunkard is empowered to testify against the seller, and a woman can collect damages from a seller by first giving him warning not to sell to her man....Mr. Dunham, of Vigo, followed Mr. Baxter with a bill permitting every man, woman, and child, to eat, drink, and wear what they pleased, if not inconvenient....Bills were offered to fix the pay of commissioners of the reform schools at $300; to give school directors full control of schools in each district; to fix interest at 8 per cent.; to repeal all laws enabling counties, towns, cities, and townships to vote taxes in aid of railways; to prohibit drawing warrants on public funds when the Auditor knows there is no such fund; to repeal clauses of the school law requiring township institutes, and provide for a Commissioner of Insane, who shall examine and report all cases within the State.... The bill giving a Judge discretion in change of venue cases came up for a second reading, and the discussion exhausted the day.

HOUSE.—The House consumed the day in committee reports on unimportant bills.

FRIDAY, Jan. 19.—SENATE.—Bills were introduced to create a bureau of statistics in the State Secretary's office, to collect statistics on population and the industrial and material interests of the State; regulating the indebtedness of cities of over 16,000 voting population, and limiting the taxation rate; suppressing the sale of obscene literature; providing for voluntary assignments of property for the benefit of creditors; regulating freight charges, that rates shall not be advanced after freights are offered and before goods are hauled; that the shipper shall have the right to choose the route for his freight when there is more than one route; companies shall not charge more than the regular rates for what they claim to be the overloading of cars.

HOUSE.—A resolution was passed to investigate the expenditures of the late Supreme Court....Mr. Oglesby introduced a joint resolution requesting Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for the bill pending before that body for the counting of the Presidential vote. Referred....Bills were introduced discouraging the useless and sheep-killing dogs; legalizing dissection of human bodies for surgical and anatomical purposes; fixing interest at 6 per cent. unless stipulated in writing; relieving the temporary poor; providing for drainage of wet lands; amending the liquor law so as to fine a plain drunk from $3 to $10; preventing candidates for office buying votes, either by free drinks or money, such purchase to constitute the buyer ineligible for office; and preventing minors from playing billiards.

SATURDAY, Jan. 20.—SENATE.—The session was brief and the proceedings meager....Mr. Branham, of Jefferson, was reported dangerously ill....Mr. Johnson asked compensation to the amount of $1,200 for guards employed to protect the jail at New Albany, and the prisoners from mob violence in the late Jones-Tolliver troubles in Orange county....A bill was presented creating a local option provision in the liquor law....Mr. Dykeman presented a voluminous railway code, embracing 200 sections and 100 pages legal cap.

HOUSE.—[illegible] indorsing the bill proposed by Congress for the counting of the electoral vote, and instructing the Chairman of the Senate and House Committees on Federal Relations to so inform Representatives in Congress, was referred without debate....A bill was introduced requiring children from 8 to 14 years of age to attend school or be instructed at home at least fourteen weeks in each year....A bill was also introduced fixing the per diem of members of the General Assembly at $5 per day, with $3 mileage for every twenty-five miles they may travel. The pay of the officers for sessions of sixty-one days is: Secretary of the Senate, $2,500; assistant, $1,500; doorkeeper, $1,500; Clerk of the House, $2,500; assistant, $1,500; doorkeeper, $1,500. The pay of sub-employes is included in the above.

MONDAY, Jan. 22.—Senate.—The Senate passed a bill forbidding change of text-books in public schools oftener than once in six months, unless by unanimous consent of the School Board; further, that only the Presidents of Town Boards of Trustees shall be members of the County School Board....The Governor sent in the nomination of A. P. McFarland, of Carroll, as manager of the Indiana Reformatory for Women and Girls, vice Franklin G. Armstrong. The confirmation of the appointment was postponed.

HOUSE.—A bill was introduced providing for a Board of Aldermen in cities of over 16,000 population; also amending the divorce law, by fixing the alimony in bulk instead of annual payments; creating a bureau of statistics in the State Secretary's office; enabling boards of underwriters to maintain fire patrols, and prohibiting traffic in obscene literature. The penalty in the last-mentioned act is severe.

TUESDAY, Jan. 23.—SENATE.—A bill was introduced providing for a new State Capitol building, placing the construction in the hands of the Governor, Auditor, and State Secretary, and two to be elected by the Legislature; limiting expenditures to $3,500,000, and levying a tax of 1-12 of a mill for 1878, [illegible] for 1879, [illegible] for 1880-81, [illegible] for 1882, and [illegible] for 1883, to be known as the State Capitol Building fund....A resolution was introduced petitioning Congress to make White river navigable from the east and west fork to the mouth....A bill came up on committee report giving camp-meeting associations power to appoint courts and try offenders, and it was discovered to be a fac simile of an act vetoed by the Governor two years ago....A bill was introduced requiring agents of insurance companies to have certificates from the State Auditor and own at least $200,000 capital stock; also giving them power to invest in State and county bonds.

HOUSE.—Mr. Oglesby introduced a bill providing that at the next assessment of property, in April, 1877, there shall be listed for the purpose of taxation all church property, both personal and real; also the real and personal property of secret societies, of all private denominational schools, and any and all property not belonging to the common schools, cities, towns, county, State or the United States....A resolution, setting forth that the denial of the right of suffrage to women is an usurpation of the constitution, and wrong, and contrary to the genius of republican institutions, was referred....Bills were introduced to prevent extortionate charges for transportation of freight and passengers; against keeping bawdy houses; changing the election of State Librarian, etc., to the fourth Thursday in January....A resolution prevailed that it was the sense of the House to pass no measures looking to the increase of taxes on the people in all cases where the objects of taxation might be avoided, and that the strictest economy is the demand of the hour....The afternoon was absorbed in discussing the bill giving married women the right to hold separate property, sue and be sued, etc.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 24.—SENATE.—Bills passed: Preventing change of text-books in the public schools oftener than once in six years, unless by unanimous consent of the School Board; abolishing the criminal courts of Floyd and Clark counties, and empowering Town Trustees to grant liquor licenses....A joint resolution was passed asking Congress to extend the time for pension application until January, 1880....The bill giving Judges discretion in granting a change of venue in civil cases failed of a constitutional majority.

HOUSE.—The bill to take the sense of the people regarding a constitutional convention was made the special consideration for Wednesday, Jan. 31. ....The bill making gold and silver legal tenders within the State was tabled, and the suggestion to absorb one-half of the liquor license revenue in establishing a State Inebriate Asylum was referred. ....After a protracted discussion the joint resolution, petitioning Congress to repeal the Bankrupt act, was passed—80 to 9.

THURSDAY, Jan. 25.—SENATE.—The series of resolutions against the reduction of the school tax, the passage of the conspiracy act, etc., as adopted by the Indiana workingmen, were presented and referred....A resolution passed for the Insurance Committee to draft a bill with a provision that life insurance companies shall place upon the policies a table showing the yearly value of policy....An investigation was ordered of the claims filed by the insane asylum superintendent against counties for clothing furnished to insane, also whether he or his subordinates have received from friends compensation for keeping incurably insane people beyond the time allowed by law....A lengthy report from Dr. Jameson, President of the Board of Trustees, reported no employes nor friends nor perquisites in the deaf and dumb asylum beyond what the law permitted....Mr. Winterbotham offered a bill empowering assessments on certain property at Michigan City for the improvement of the harbor; Mr. Dunham, a bill establishing an additional election board, consisting of a judge, two inspectors and two clerks, who shall conduct the count by ballots during the progress of the vote; Mr. Reed, requiring railways to fence their tracks; Mr. Given, to prevent extortionate charges by railways for transportation of freight.

HOUSE.—A resolution passed abolishing the office of Swamp Land Commissioner; also one instructing Congressmen to vote a pension of $8 per month to Mexican war survivors....The bill was engrossed making it unlawful to kill quails within five years; so also the bill providing for a record of marks on fence rails....By a vote of 50 to 1 the joint resolution passed making silver a legal tender for all debts except those otherwise provided for by law....The Attorney General reported in favor of paying Pat Shannon, State Agent in 1871-72, $2,000, still due on a claim of $10,000, for two years' salary as said agent. ....The bill for the relief of the ex-Treasurer of Perry county, who was robbed of $7,000 by burglars, was voted down.

AUSTRALIA.

Some Interesting Facts Regarding the Largest Island in the World.

[From the New York Times.]

In view of the inter-colonial exhibition to be held in Sydney, April 10 next, the following facts, culled from the most trustworthy official authorities on Australia, may be found interesting. That largest island on the globe is about one-fifth smaller than Europe, and more than three times as large as India, its dimensions being [illegible] miles, with 8,000 miles of coast line. It [illegible] deg. of longitude. Laid with the northern extremity touching this city, it would reach southward to South America, eastward to the further end of Nova Scotia, and westward to the further edge of Nebraska. Including the near-by island of Tasmania, or Van Dieman's Land, its area is about 3,000,000 square miles, about the same as that of the belt across this continent from ocean to ocean constituting the United States, excluding Alaska.

Settlement has merely skirted the eastern and southern coasts. A company of nine started to cross from east to west, thirty years ago, but disappeared, and repeated search failed to trace their route; since then explorations have been successfully pushed across in both directions, and the colony of South Australia, having then but 180,000 population, undertook and accomplished, in the two years ending Aug. 22, 1872, the daring feat of constructing a telegraph across the island from south to north, nearly 2,000 miles, importing and carrying by teams all the materials used, in order to get a direct communication with England. Yet the interior is still nearly unknown, and some portions vie with inner Africa in interest and romance. Rivers, bays, and lakes are few, although the existence of a great inland lake is conjectured, and the hot winds blowing outward from the north and west indicate that the interior is a desert plain. But [illegible] the coast 250 miles wide, omitting the northern side, is taken as the habitable portion, this strip contains 785,000 square miles, and nearly equals the area covered by the twenty-six States of this Union lying east of the Mississippi; hence there is room enough, even if the interior, like some spots on the American belt, is found to be "bad land."

It so happened that the Australian gold discoveries and the consequent rush thither were almost exactly parallel in time with the similar occurrences in California. Up to 1875 the quantity exported was $1,131,965,105, against $905,356,572 in California during the thirteen years, 1848 to 1860. The following table contains sundry important details:

Area in square miles	219,839
Population	1,885,276
Acres under tillage, 1874	3,263,236
Number of sheep	47,030,812
Number of horned cattle	5,355,025
Wool exported in 1874, pounds	288,294,718
Public debt in 1874	$163,520,695
Revenue in 1874	31,787,745
Imports in 1874	183,385,290
Exports in 1874	163,793,983

Australia has 1,000 miles of railroad and 19,000 miles of telegraph. The land under tillage is 3,263,236 acres, less than one-third that of the State of Ohio alone, twenty-five years ago; but Australia is eminently a pastoral country, having 47,000,000 sheep, against 27,000,000 in the United States. Her public debt, incurred mainly for railroads and public works, is $86 per head, against $52 per head in the United States. The revenue is $28 per head, against $7 in the United States. The imports and exports are $100 each per head, against $14 each in the United States, approximately. A population considerably less than one-half that of the State of New York, occupying a territory as large as the United States, much of it never trodden by white men, have a commerce nearly one-third as great as that of our 40,000,000 people; measured per capita, the inhabitants of that extraordinary island pay four times as much to public revenue, and consume seven times as much of imported goods, as do the people of this country.

The commerce of Australia is mainly with Great Britain and with the other Australian colonies. The imports from Great Britain are about $75,000,000, and the exports about $68,000,000, the former consisting mainly of textile manufactures and iron.

Phenomenal Weather in England.

The London correspondent of the New York Herald says, under date Jan. 16: "The season of unexampled severity which we are now passing through has been marked by a series of disasters such as has not been recorded for a long period of years. Deluging rains have saturated the country districts and swelled the rivers with destructive floods and overspread the low valley lands with inundations. Gales have swept the coasts and strewn them with wrecks. The utmost anxiety prevails in the agricultural districts regarding the planting of crops, for if the season continues bad to its end the consequences to the farming interests will be very serious.

"It is gravely suggested that if the present phenomenal conditions continue to prevail England will soon become as uninhabitable as Labrador or Nova Zembla. In this event a compulsory and wholesale migration of the great English nation to America must occur. The idea of an abandonment of the 'tight little island' on account of bad weather must awaken the gloomiest feelings in the breasts of her people, but I don't think there is any immediate danger that such a movement will be necessary. The 'Mistress of the Seas' should not be afraid of a little extra supply of rain water."

Woman Suffrage.

The constitution of the new State of Colorado provides for an election on the question of woman suffrage next October. It is understood that while in Washington next month the sisterhood will arrange for a heavy pressure to be brought upon the gallant and susceptible masculine minds and hearts of the Miner State. Utah and Wyoming are at present the Western exponents of the equal right of the fair sex.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The receipts of grain at this station have been on the increase since our last report, the average deposits of wheat alone in the freight house bins having reached over 500 bushels per day. In consequence of the "break up," which commenced in the early part of the present week, the receipts have been unusually lively. From our principal buyers we gather the following quotations, which govern this market up to the hour of going to press: Wheat, $1.39@$1.24; Oats, 40c; Corn, 30c; Clover seed, $5.50; Potatoes, $1.00; Butter, 18c; Eggs, 25c; Hogs, live weight, 5¼@5½, dressed 6@6¼; Hides, green, 6c; Poultry, 5@7c.

While Senator Morton is being so loudly applauded by some of our turpentine republican neighbors for his opposition to the Compromise Bill in the Senate the other day, we venture the prediction that the name of Roscoe Conklin, the Onondagua statesman who fought so manfully for its adoption, will be recorded among the most eminent statesmen of modern times, and that he will live in the memory of man, bright among the brightest of the patriots of these stormy times, long after the defender of the carpet-bagger shall have been forgotten.

The damphoolishness, or pure cussedness, or whatever you may please to call it, of some folk seems to be proverbial. Upon the reception of the news that the Compromise Bill had passed the Senate, our red-hot republican brethren were rip roaring mad—one gentleman of the O. P. M. pursuasion going so far as to indignantly declare, that now "the Re-"publicans in Congress had simply ex-"posed their——ignorance, and though "the move might please Ben Hill, Jeff. "Davis and the devil, it didn't suit him "by a jug full." Alas, poor Yorick!

The fifth week of the protracted meetings of the M. E. Church society of Corunna, were concluded on Wednesday evening. During that time about eighteen sinners have signified a desire to become christians and lead better lives in the future. 'Tis well: for if anywhere on the Lord's green earth, the devil has held high carnival here and hereabout, and he has run his muck with a full head of steam on, in the past. Let us rejoice.

As an index to the grain traffic of Corunna, the Agent, Mr. Miller, informs us that from Dec. 15th, 1876, to Jan. 15th, 1877, (official from the last monthly report) 508,130 lbs. of wheat were received at this station. When we consider the fact that the wheat crop was almost an entire failure throughout a large section of this county, the showing is not bad for a one-horse town.

The other day we met our old friend Brown Clark, formerly of Fremont, O., but for the past ten years doing business at Waterloo. Mr. Clark carries the finest line of Hardware and Cutlery in Northern Indiana.

Dick & Cox, General Agents of the Stillwater, Ohio, Nurseries, were in town last week making a canvass for fruit and other trees. The Messrs. D. & C. work upon the "three-link" principle, and as a matter of course are reliable gentlemen.

A young man enveloped in a linen coat, crowned with a straw hat, and perched upon a cutter behind a span of calico mules, was seen driving southward Monday afternoon "h— bent for election."

Messrs. Quince & Walters shipped four car loads of stock to Buffalo on the 20th. Mr. Quince will send in a consignment of stock on Saturday of the present week.

Senator Mercer paid his constituents in this place a flying visit not long since. The Doctor speaks very highly of "Blue Jeans," and is constrained to believe that he will make a good Governor.

Charley Lyon, a bold Missourian all the way from Lathrop, was in town last week. He reports crops promising in that State.

And still that pesky brindle dog prowls and wanders, and the result is another cow mourneth the loss of her tail.

At Salem Centre no less than sixty converts are reported as having espoused the cause of religion.

LOVELAND.

SPENCERVILLE.

—The young men composing the Spencerville Brass Band, visited the Cedarville band on the evening of Jan. 22, and had a very pleasant time.

—The young daughter of J. W. Dills, that died on the 23d, was buried on the 24th. The funeral services were held at the M. E Church. Rev. Lancaster delivered a very able and practicle discourse on the occassion.

—The wife of Mr. Samuel Gill died very suddenly on the 24th inst.

—A passage at arms took place at a dance near Nelson's Corners, in Newville township, one evening last week between to young men named Pattison and Hart. The bone of contention was a jug of hard cider. Hart came out second best.

—Mr. Bennet Leighty and Mrs. Martha Burley were joined together in wedlock on the 15th, by the Rev. E. W. Erick.

—A dark complected individual has opened a barber shop in this place. Call and get a clean shave.

AUBURN JUNCTION.

—D Krider is nursing a pet on his hand in the shape of a carbuncle.

—Our ladies should be careful how they go calling and leave the oven full of kindling, with a big fire in the stove, for our fire company is not yet organized.

—We would advise the boys of our place to engage their company when they go sleigh riding beforehand; then there will be no trouble. We saw some boys, after a fruitless attempt to get partners, start out with five boys and one girl.

—Mr. Methias Hollopeter has sold and traded his property to Mr. Clark. We understand Mr. H. intends on moving away in the spring. Mr. H. is a good citizen and has done considerable to build up the Junction, and we are loth to see him go.

—Churubosco, Whitley county, this State, supports a negro who delivered a message to a school master three miles from the office, collected the charges, and was back in forty minutes from the time he left the office. We were an eye witness to this, and can say it is no fish story.

—Growler has been out of his hole, or at least his probossis has protruded around to the south-west sufficiently to catch the passing breeze, but like an undutiful cur, one sniffle frightened him back to his kennel without any developments save a smell. Come nearer next time, Alf. We think a stronger dose would operate better; and by the way, a mild cathartic each week would improve your "multum in parvo."

—In the Republican's items of last week, from this place, we noticed the startling fact that Mr. Spriggs, of Chicago, has been appointed freight agent on the G. W., in Canada Who'd a thunk it? Well, Alphonso, as a reporter of electric dispatches you are a success, but otherwise a fizzle.

—We heard the question asked a short time since by a worthy citizen of this place, "can't the Republican be supplied with a correspondent from the Junction, whose interests are with us, or must we read the scribblings of a foreigner who is anxious to appropriate any flying report to our detriment, instead of inquiring into the true state of affairs.

DON PEDRO.

LAOTTO.

—Richard Dudley started for Ohio last Thursday to visit his Ohio friends.

—George Sowers has been appointed agent at this place for the U. S. Express company.

—Miss Nettie Martin and Miss Nellie Potter, of Auburn, were here on a few days visit with Miss Ida Zern.

—Bert Hanson is at home visiting his parents, after a somewhat prolonged stay down east.

—A jovial party met at the residence of our genial artist, I. Yearin, last Friday evening, and had a real old fashioned party.

MARRIED—At the residence of Geo. Leonard on the 23d of January, by the Rev. John Swan, Mr. Barney Sparks to Miss Drana Hall.

Success to his "Haul" and may their Sparks be many. Go thou and do likewise.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St, Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables, routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

There is loud lamentation among the Morton stripe of radicals because a tolerable decent man, Hoar, has been chosen as one of the republican members of the electoral tribunal.

* * *

Congress has finely got all the members of the Louisiana returning board within the clutches of the law, and these worthy gentlemen may be rudely awakened from their pleasant dreams of unrestrained dictatorship.

* * *

"Contempt of the House" is a ludecrously mild legal euphemism for the crime against the nation of which the Louisiana returnig board is guilty.

Mark These Facts.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE WHOLE WORLD.

Holloway's Pills.

"I had no appetite; Holloway's Pill gave me a hearty one."

"Your pills are marvelous."

"I send for another box, and keep them in the House."

"Dr. Holloway has cured my headache that was chronic."

"I gave one of your pills to my babe for cholera morbus. The dear little being got well in a day.

"My nausea of a morning is now cured."

"Your box of Holloway's Ointment cured me of noises in the head. I rubbed some of your Ointment behind the ear, and the noise has left.

"Send me two boxes; I want one for a poor family."

"I enclose a dollar, your price is 25 cents but the medicine to me is worth a dollar."

"Send me five boxes of your pills."

"Let me have three boxes of your pills by return mail, for chills and fever."

I have over 200 such testimonials as these, but want of space compells me to conclude.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS,

And all eruptions of the skin, this ointment is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Invariably cures the following diseases:

DISORDER OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water, or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel or with aches and pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys these pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

For Stomachs out of Order, no medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these pills; they remove all acidity occasioned by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasm—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and stomach.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the best known in the world for the following diseases: Ague, Asthma Billious Complaints, Blotches on the Skin, Bowels, Consumption, Debility, Dropsy, Dysentery, Erysipelas, Female Irregularities, Fevers of all kinds, Fits, Gout, Headache, Indigestion, Inflammation, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Lumbago, Piles, Rheumatism, Retention, Stone and Gravel, Tic-Douloureaux, Tumors, Ulcers, Worms of all kinds, Weakness from any cause, &c.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

None are genuine unless the signature of J. Haydock, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills, and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be suspicious.

Sold at the manufacture of Prof. Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable druggists and dealers in medicines throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

Office, 112 Liberty Street, New York.

CONSUMPTION

Positively Cured.

All sufferers from this disease that are anxious to be cured should try Dr. Kissner's celebrated Consumptive Powders. These Powders are the only preparation known that will cure consumption and diseases of the Throat and Lungs—indeed so strong is our faith in them, and also to convince you that they are no humbug, we will forward to every sufferer, by mail, post paid, a free Trial box.

We don't want your money until you are perfectly satisfied of their curative powers. If your life is worth saving, don't delay in giving these Powders a trial, as they will surely cure you.

Price for large box $1, sent to any part of the United States or Canada by mail on receipt of price. Address,

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES.

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on the increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arraves in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 20 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

TEAS! TEAS!

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—For Scurvy, Leprosy, and cutaneous diseases they are unrivalled. In places where these maladies are prevelent, the cures are marvellous, for the expulsion of pimples, blotches, &c., they are unparalleled, and as a cosmetic the Ointment stands unequalled. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Jas. V. Hazzard, Cashier of the First National Bank, of this place, met with a bad accident last Saturday night. While walking along the street in front of Samuel Ralston's store, slipped and fell in such a manner as to throw three of his fingers on his left hand out of joint. The sidewalk is very slippery at that place, making it quite dangerous to pedestrians.

'If people would only look where they are going, and be a little careful they would never slip—." "Oh; laugh you confounded fool," he added as he pushed the dint out of his hat, and got up and brushed the snow off his cloths. Verily, these are "trying" times.

Dr. A. R. Collar, late with Dr. Casebeer, has engaged with Dr. J. Spooner in the practice of medicine. Mr. Collar is a well read man and always attentive to business, and we doubt if there are any among the older class of physicians that have been more successful than young Dr. Collar.

We see by the Reading, Mich. Press, that Wm. Foot, of Hillsdale, Michigan, has leased the Reading House, at Reading. Billy and his accomplished lady know how to cater the hungry man's palate and bash up as good a meal as can be had along the line of the F. W. J. & S. R. R.

While at Reading, Mich; we were shown through the Ink and Blueing factory of L. H. Thomas, which is one of the largest institutions for the manufacture of ink and blueing in the west Mr. Thomas has gained for himself a wide reputation, as the manufacture of the best writing fluid now in use.

The Catskill Recorder says: "Hot lemonades and things are counted as sure cures for colds." Wish that Catskillian would define "things." We've tried hot lemonades and milk, egg, nutmeg, ground cloves and all kinds of spices, but our cold still lingers.

We have had now almost two months of continued sleighing, a thing we have not had before for years. Four years ago the snow came deeper and consequently drifted more in the lanes, and spoilt the travel in many places but this winter the snow has not been deep but continuous.

A combat took place last Tuesday evening between Bob Bailes and A. Florida which resulted in Bailes getting a complete thrashing. It seems there was some missunderstanding concerning a settlement of accounts. Threats are made by Bailes that he will lick Florida yet.

The Columbia City Post says: Quite a number of cases of small-pox are prevailing in Lafayette township, Allen County. All parties who have been exposed to the small-pox in said townships are forbidden coming to Fort Wayne by the Mayor by an official proclamation.

S. T. Galloway Town Marshal.

Half-grown boys who attend public entertainments without the guardian care of their parents should find some more genteel way of making their presence know than by constantly moving from one part of the room to another and smoking cigars, to the great annoyance of delicate ladies and others who may not relish the second-hand fumes of an inferior cigar. Such conduct is very "unpurity."

W. J. Stabler, of Fort Wayne, will meet all those wishing to join a class in music, at Hollister & Benedicts Hall, next Monday evening. Mr. Stabler has the reputation of being a first-class musician, and will begin at the very foundation. This will be a splendid opportunity for those who are not acquainted with the notes to become ready readers of music. For information call on E. E. Williams, Bruce Miller or at this office, and at the same time leave your name for scholarship.

Amusements.

We are authorized to say that our Dramatic Company will again appear in about one week in the splendid play of "Black Eyed Susan," one of the most charming dramas of the day. The laughable play of "Pocahontas" will conclude the entertainment. In these quiet inactive times, our citizens should take advantage of a little diversion of this kind, if only to break the monotony of dull times. The troup will endeavor to please and amuse, and are worthey of patronage.

The Plymouth Democrat says: A Fashionable church in New York raised $14,000 for foreign missions a few days since but not a penny for charity at home. Right here is the difference between the "fashionable" church and the Heathen church. Us heathens prefer to be charitable; divide of our portion among our less favored neighbors—allow them to steal from our wood pile, for instance. We are full of kindly acts, but we never say anything about it. We don't give $14,000 to strangers.

See change in the advertisement of the Fort Wayne Fruit House, which appears on the fourth page of this issue. No dull times with the Fruit House, but trade continually on the increase, and the reason of it is they purchase their goods in large quantities at first hands and sell to their customers at a small profit, thereby receiving the patronage of the masses. That is the secret of their success; but, read this advertisement and that will tell you what they are doing.

"Keep to the right," is a maxim as good as it is old, and is very applicable to those who drive upon the public highways. By observing the above, the man whose horses were whipped across the nose, might have saved an oath which no doubt stands against him on the final record, also a great deal of confusion which one is thrown into by some one threatening to "swat" you. Will some correspondent of the Courier give us the correct definition of that word "swat."

The News, of Milford, has been changed to the Independent—a name intended to indicate its freedom and independence from all political and other organizations and cliques,—and is published by Messrs. Ager & Rhine. The new proprietors have improved the paper in appearance and are receiving a very liberal support from the business men of the place—nearly all of whom are represented in its advertising columns,—which not only speaks well for the enterprise of Milford, but will aid materially in securing the success of that journal.

The following named parties wish through the columns of the Courier to express their thanks to Mr. Mrs. G. H Stahl, of this place for the courteous manner in which they were entertained on last Wednesday afternoon:

W. Dickinson and Tilla Williams, E. P. Dickinson and Frankie Lemmon, Clark Long and Jennie Wallace, A. V. Sinclair and Emma Johnston, O. W. Shull and Ola Leab, S. G. Trout and Lina Jackman, M. Johnston and Frankie Buss, Frank Buckland and Nettie Urie. All agree they spent an evening which will long be remembered.

The following are the marriage licenses issued by the clerk during the month of January:

Robert A. Lacy to Sarah A Gramling, Emerson D. Hawkins to Arvilla Robinett, Daniel M. Headley to Jennie West, Alexander Davis to Loria Bell Smith, Walter Rosenberry to Corintha Robinett, Isaac Peters to Sarah E. Nelson, James G. Kaufman to Laura R. Shuman Mosses Getts to Mary Pontius, Edward Sparks to Celestina Hall, Darius Fry to Jane Mouffler, James Crummings to Margaret Slentz, Charles B. Leighty to Martha Burley, Daniel W. McClellan to Matilda Rosenbery, Albert Nodine to Allice E. Hallett, Charles A Rhodes to Oraline M. Burley.

"Justice" in the Auburn Courier of last week cannot teach us our duty. We think twenty years of faithful service in the cause of the democratic party of Indiana, is "primafacie" evidence of what we are going to be, and no contemptable upstart can make us what we are not or what we are not going to be.—Garrett News.

That's right Parker, stick to it, and you may get the post office. If you know your duty, don't let anyone softsoap you in such a manner as will make you take that graceful flop spoken of. If the News can't stand the presure of the hard times, why go east again, money will make the mare go if brains won't, and if that "contemptable upstart" tries to make out you no know something, punish him; hunt him up and make him work out your poll tax which you neglected last year.

The school marms of Garrett will not consent to wear the chains of bondage which the "wise law makers" of the Garrett school board would seek to put upon them That's right. When they attempt to make a law, forbidding the teachers the privilage of recogalizing a friend or even receiving a letter from them, they go far beyond their jurisdictions, and no community where they are civilized, as they are in Garrett, ought to uphold them. If a teacher does her duty during the hours of school, what business is to the school board what she does with the rest of her time; its her own and they have no right to dictate, and furthermore the laws of Indiana will not uphold them in the passage of any rule debaring the teachers from society. The persons that constitute that school board are a "little to nice to be wise."

What Should be Done?

It will be remembered that when the Eel River Railroad was first opened, its eastern terminus was at what is now called Auburn Junction, and the reason it was not completed then as it is at present was the want of a sufficient amount of good responsible subscriptions. In course of time the public interists demanded that the road should be completed on to Butler, a distance twelve miles. The people of Butler and Auburn put their shoulders to the wheel and another and last effort to accomplish that purpose. But when the nominal sum was subscribed, the officers of the road demanded that these subscriptions be made good by responsible parties. Thereupon four of our citizens stepped forward, when every other means was exhausted, and to save the project from failure, guaranteed to make good the amount demanded by the Railroad company to grade and tie those twelve miles. Major Spratt, Dr. J. H. Ford, John L. Davis and F. D. Ryan became the guarantors. It was they who crowded forward the enterprise to a successful issue, more than three years ago. They had each, prior to that, subscribed and paid liberally to that road as well as the F. W. J. & S. R. R. After they had paid their subscriptions and collected all that could be collected on the Eel River subscriptions, they were compelled to and did borrow over three thousand dollars, which is to-day in judgments against them amounting to near thirty-four hundred dollars. Now, although this amount can be collected off of them, is it right that those who have and are reaping the benefit of their labor and efforts, shall sit idly by and permit them to pay this sum? Is it morally right that these men after paying more than their reasonable proportion, be now called on and be compelled to pay eight or nine hundred dollars more each? Two of the parties can pay that proportion without great inconvenience, but for the other two, we understand, and believe it will materially embarrass and distress them.

To our readers, friends and neighbors residing on the line of this road we appeal—not that you are legally bound to assist in paying this debt, but as an equitable, moral and in fact a religious business duty to do in this matter as "you would be done by." They have become responsible for your debt, they incured it for you and your benefit. They have done this thing for the good of the public, and especially for the eastern and middle and south-western part of the county, and in fact for the benefit of advantage and good of the whole county.

Executions are in hands of the Sheriff and this money must be soon had, even if it takes the residences of some of these parties, and whatever is done should be done quickly. We have said this much because we believe it our duty to say so. We know the times are hard, and that is the reason we make this appeal. It is easier for a thousand or fifteen hundred to pay two or three dollars each than for these men to pay thirty four hundred. Can not we have some united action from Butler and all along the line of the road in this county, and make up for these men the whole or a portion of this sum.

In a Hurry.

A boy came rushing into one of our restaurants the other day in a great hurry, and said he wanted some "hash," and see how quick you can get it up, too.

The clerk flew around on double quick time, and asked the boy what he wanted.

"I'll take some oysters fried in crumbs, milk toast, a boiled egg, hot biscuit and a cup of tea; now fly 'round as if codfish was twenty-seven cent a pound and the market risin'."

After he had eaten his supper he stepped up to the counter and said:

"What's my bill, sir?"

After being informed, he said:

"I guess I'll take five cents worth of them cigars."

"Which cigars?" inquired the clerk.

"Them right there," pointing to an advertisement on the wall.

"We are just out of them kind—fifty for five cents—my friend, but expect to have some when spring opens."

"When spring opens! that won't do me any good. I wanted to go out in the country to 'tend protracted-meetin' and wanted to smoke on the road," he said, as he started out shaking his head, and when he reached the door he turned around and said:

"Why in h—l don't you pull down that sign, or keep up stock."

On Monday the President signed the Electoral Tribunal Bill, and sent to Congress a short message setting forth his reasons for this patriotic act. The President assures us that something of the kind is necessary in order to relieve the country of the unhappy muddle into which it has been plunged. He says that, while the history of the country shows that the President of the Senate has always been the Supreme Returning Board of the land, he has never exercised his profound functions when there was a grand dispute. The President says the country wants peace and a quite settlement of the Presidential trouble. He doesn't discuss the Constitution in a very learned way, but signs the bill in the hope that it will accomplish what the public sincerely prays for—a peaceful, amicable settlement.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine prescribed by physicians, or sold by druggists that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe Coughs, Colds settled on the Breast, Consumption, or any disease of the Throat and Lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

PUMPKIN PIES.

I've tasted the best
In East and West,
I've lunched 'neath tropic sun,
I've tested all
The fruits that fall,
And like them every one;
But North or South
No human mouth,
I will the world apprise,
E'er tasted food
One-half so good
As our own pumpkin pies.

Upon the vine,
In rain and shine,
Through fragrant day and night,
The yellow globe
In emerald robe
Drinks up the summer light.
Oh, golden sweet,
The suns repeat
To mold thy luscious size,
[illegible]
And roll thee home,
And make our pumpkin pies.

Our lovely girls,
With shining curls,
Put neatly in a cap,
Cut slice on slice
And peel it nice,
And stew it to a pap;
Then milk is had,
And eggs they add,
And sweeten as is wise,
While others haste
To spice to taste
These home-made pumpkin pies.

Oh, sure and fair,
This food so rare,
Made up of all that's best!
No creature's pain
Goes to its gain,
But only nature's zest;
For summer days
And autumn haze
And smiles from beauty's eyes
Are in the dish,
Mixed to our wish,
That we call pumpkin pies.

No wonder, then,
That loyal men,
From Florida to Maine,
Their quarter eat,
The same repeat,
And pass their plate again
That exiles fret
With vain regret,
And vex the air with sighs,
When forced to stay
In climes away
From their own pumpkin pies.

So to our boast
I give a toast,
Embroidered all in rhyme:
May pumpkins round
With us abound
Through future autumn-time!
And may our girls,
With shining curls
And tender beaming eyes,
All learn by heart
The happy art
Of making pumpkin pies!

"A PERFECT TREASURE."

One day Frank came home with a look of triumph.

"I have a perfect treasure for you," he said, "in the way of a nurse. Gerald Temple is going to take his family to Europe, and, when he heard what you wanted, offered to let us have their nurse, whom they will not want."

I heard a low sigh. Virginia, Frank's only sister, had been sitting in a corner of the drawing-room. She rose now and slipped out.

"How could you, Frank?" I said, following her with sad eyes. "I have never heard your sister speak of the Temples since she has lived with us; the very mention of their name brings back the memory of Gerald's brother, and all that sad tragedy."

"I am sorry," said Frank, "but I did not know she was in the room. Poor Virginia!"

"Yes! Poor Virginia!" I said to myself. But once the loveliest little creature I ever knew. It is something of a story, but it is an "ower true tale," and I will tell it in the shortest way I can:

Virginia and Frank were orphans, and old Mrs. Chichester, their grandmother, had adopted Virginia almost from infancy. The old lady had very ambitious hopes of making a splendid match for her beautiful grandchild. But Virginia thought different; and when she was 17, at the time of my wedding, she and Langley Temple were insane enough to fall desperately in love with each other. Langley was Frank's most intimate friend, and the pair met continually at our house, until Grandma Chichester found it out. After a while Langley was ordered to his ship (he was in the navy); but Frank waged war with grandma until he obtained a viperish consent that the lovers might correspond. Grandma took pains not to let Frank know how Virginia was tormented and tyrannized over until the poor child consented to go out into society again; and there she met and made conquest of the very man whom grandma had intended for her beauty—Horace Kent. Virginia refused him; but grandma said, scornfully, "That made no difference. She would come to her senses soon," and, to my utter amazement, the preparation of the trousseau went on, and by-and-by we were bidden to the wedding—a quite elegant affair, where Virginia walked and talked as if she was frozen. Frank and I confessed to each other, that night, that the business passed our comprehension, for we had no idea then of foul play.

Kent and Virginia were to sail for Europe within a fortnight of their marriage, and went to Washington and Baltimore to pass that time. Left alone one evening in Baltimore, with a severe headache, Virginia remembered to have seen some aromatic vinegar in her husband's dressing-case. Kent was peculiar in his careful way of locking up his longings, and she took her own bunch of keys to open the box, when, rather to her surprise, she found the key left in the box. Some listless, vague impulse, which she never afterward could account for, prompted her to lift the upper tray, although she had found the vinegar already. Underneath, to her surprise, she found paper, and was about returning the tray to its place without further examination, when her eyes were caught by the words: "My own Virginia," in a dear, a too well-known handwriting.

When Kent came back that night, he found his beautiful young wife senseless upon her bed, with two letters crumpled between her cold fingers—one, the last letter Langley had actually written her; the other, the base forgery in which he asked to be released from his engagement. Kent was not at all bad. He loved her madly, and you may be sure that his sore punishment began when, after the physician had got her out of the death-like swoon, the first words came to Virginia's lips, in that strange, passionless tone which is far worse than anger, were, "Remember! I will never forgive you—never!"

They came back to New York for a single day; but Virginia saw no one but her grandmother. The old lady upon her deathbed raved of that interview, and vainly implored her forgiveness for urging Kent on to his treachery. The newly-wedded pair sailed in the ill-fated ship which took fire off the coast of Nova Scotia, and whose name still carries terror to many a heart. Virginia was one of the handful of survivors; her unhappy husband fought for her place in the boat, and remaining behind himself, perished with the ship. The agony of terror, the long night which she spent at the mercy of the waves, proved too much strain upon her already overburdened frame, and Frank and I were summoned by telegraph to her at Halifax, where she lay for days unconscious with a brain fever. And then, to add to her misery, when recovering she was [illegible] fatal relapse by seeing accidentally [illegible] had gone down in the attack on Mobile harbor, with every soul on board. The Tecumseh was Langley's ship.

Virginia came to live with us about two years before the commencement of my story. She seemed to feel a sorrowful remorse about her husband, which was not grief, and yet it cast a shadow over her life. "He was treacherous and false," she said to me one day, "and he broke my heart; but what right have I to judge him? Harrie, I told him I would never forgive him, and he died thinking himself unforgiven." Of Langley she never spoke.

Well, the "perfect treasure" made her appearance. She was a rather young woman, with a pleasant, low voice, and very good manner for one of her station. I was charmed. Certainly this girl seemed determined to please me; she did her work in a faultless, neat way; she amused and played with the twins; and baby had more quiet nights than I had known him to have for weeks. So, after a month's trial, I began to sing Alice's praises and allowed her full control in her department, with a good many privileges. Virginia alone, did not seem to like her. Virginia had a curious way of looking at new faces—a searching, penetrating glance, that I always thought had a sort of mesmerism in it, all the stranger because her eyes were so gentle and soft. Alice never met the look fairly, as I remembered afterward.

It was in the spring of '65. The closing scenes of the war were crowding thick and fast upon each other. Virginia kept her room a good deal. The warm April weather seemed to enervate her, and she shrank away from the joy and enthusiasm we all exhibited. Poor child! It was hard for her to hear of the soldiers and sailors who would be coming home now, and to feel that for her sore heart peace would bring no balm.

One night Frank had taken a box at the Italian opera in New York. We lived in Brooklyn, and, as Kellogg was to sing, I begged Virginia to go with us. But she steadily declined. She would stay at home and keep house, she said. Now, two of my servants were at a firemen's ball that night, leaving only Alice and the cook at home; so I must say I felt rather more easy about the children when I found that Virginia would not go. Going from New York to Brooklyn at night, however, is a long journey, and it was close upon 1 o'clock when we drove up to our door.

In the meantime, Virginia, after our departure, had set for some time writing letters in her own room. The twins were having a noisy romp in the nursery; and, when she looked in to say good-night, Fred fastened himself upon her neck, and begged to come and stay with Auntie; she yielded, and then Fred began building card-houses on the sofa until he got tired, when he curled himself in a corner, and in two seconds was fast asleep. Being very much interested in her book, Virginia left the little fellow sleep on, thinking that by-and-by she would take him up to her room and put him to bed there, as she frequently did. At last she fell asleep herself.

She never knew how long she slept, but had a painful, nightmare sensation, as if somebody was trying to smother her, and, after struggling with the feeling for some time, she slowly, and with a great effort, opened her eyes. Why! what has happened to the room? The gas must have gone out—it was totally dark, save a flickering gleam from the dying fire on the hearth; and what a sickening, deadly smell there was! With a lightning rapidity which is more like instinct than thought, it suddenly flashed upon her what the strange smell was—chloroform! Then, as she caught her frightened breath, and sank back into her chair, a low sound of voices from the dining-room reached her ear. The door between the rooms was ajar, and she saw a thread of light from it; the voice she heard was a man's:

"Ye didn't give the young 'oman too much o' that stuff, did ye?" it asked, rather anxiously.

"I wish I had," returned Alice's low and stealthy voice; "I hate her! she suspects me."

"Ha! ha!" gurgled the man, "she must ha' been mighty oncivil to ye; ye usually gets on the right side of 'em. Is that 'ere pitcher silver or plate?"

"Plate; the silver is up-stairs."

Virginia shook when she heard the venom of that low voice.

"She was Mr. Langley's lady-love until her old grandma stopped it."

"And what was Mr. Langley to you, my girl?" said the man.

"Hush! you'll wake the child, and I do not want to do him any harm. Mr. Langley"—the woman's voice softened—"never said a dozen words to me in his life; but look you, Vincent, I fairly worshiped him."

"That's right; tell me all, as I'm yer husband that is to be," said the other, with a coarse laugh.

"Mrs. Kent has splendid jewels, too, I just picked the lock to look at them. You can take as many of those as you like. Come!"

As soon as the sound of their footsteps died away, Virginia snatched the deadly handkerchief off her head, and staggered to her feet, though dizzily. She was a very spirited girl, and determined that the pair should not escape. But what could she do? It was in vain to think of getting the cook to alarm their neighbors at the corner, for the next lot was vacant, and she must cross the hall and go past the stairs to find her. There would be no use in throwing up the window and screaming; the house was on Clinton avenue, quite far out, and the policeman on that beat did not come past very often.

Virginia wrung her hands, when a sleepy murmur of "Auntie!" startled her. In a second her resolve was taken, and she was on her knees by Fred, kissing him and whispering in his ear.

"Fred, my darling, Auntie is going to do something funny. You remember how pa jumped you down from the balcony on Christmas day to run after the monkey? I am going to jump you down. Don't speak a word now. Act like a man. There, now!"

Fred was just 4 years old, but a great boy for his age, and he always obeyed Virginia implicitly; so he rubbed his eyes wide open, and was carried to the window. The balcony, outside, was not far from the ground. As Virginia looked out carefully, she saw, under the gaslight [illegible] of brass buttons.

"Fred," she whispered rapidly, "run to that policeman, and tell him to come right here to Auntie; then go to Mr. Motley's, at the corner, and ring the bell with all your might—it is low, and you can reach it—and tell George and Harry Motley that Aunt Virginia says there is a thief in the house. Don't be afraid, Fred; be a man like papa!"

Over, gently, over the low railing; and then, with a good shake of his small person, Fred's fat little legs trotted swiftly off toward the policeman.

Directly, under the balcony, a voice said, softly:

"What is wanted, ma'am? Can you open the front door for me?"

"I cannot," she panted; "there are burglars in the house, and I should be heard. Can you get up here, somehow? Has the little boy gone to the neighbor's?"

There was no answer to her question; but the policeman easily followed her suggestion, and climbed up over the balcony.

"Wait!" whispered Virginia, laying her cold hand on the policeman's arm, as he made a motion to go forward. "They are up stairs in my room, looking for my jewels. If you will stand just behind that door, I will creep up the back stairs and reconnoiter; if the woman comes to answer the bell, seize her. There is only one man; if I want help I will call, and then you will rush up the front stairs."

"Are you not afraid?" asked the policeman with some surprise; but Virginia was gone before he had finished his remark.

When she reached the stairs, she found by the sounds that the man had evidently gone into the silver-closet, which stood on the other side of the back stairs, and that now she was between the two—for she could hear Alice walking around in the bed-room. Quick as a flash the little figure glided up-stairs, slipping off her boots on the lowest step; there was no light in the hall, except that afforded by the burglar's lantern, for the gas was turn down low, and the lantern set inside the closet door. The door opened outward, and the key was in it; a spring, a sudden bang, and then the click of the key in Virginia's nervous fingers, as she turned it in the lock. A tremendous curse came from the captured thief, as she leaned breathlessly against the door. The same moment the gaslight behind her was suddenly turned on her, and Alice confronted Virginia.

"You here, madam? Well, you and I are quits, anyhow. Open that door, or I'll send a bullet through your head! You didn't think of my having a revolver, did you?"

"No," said Virginia, looking in the girl's furious eye with her peculiarly calm smile. "Help! Police!"

"You may split your pretty throat calling," said Alice, seizing her savagely by the arm. "No one will come; the cook is drugged, and you are at our mercy. Give me the key!"

"I'll trouble you for that pistol!" said a stern voice behind Virginia, as a quick, strong arm jerked the weapon away from Alice.

Alice, with a shriek, fell on the floor, for she realized all at once. But Virginia, gasping "Ah, my God!" gazed as if turned to stone, for it was Langley Temple that she saw.

"Virginia, don't be terrified," he said; "it is my very self, no ghost. Take my hand, love; see, it is flesh and blood, like your own, dear." He had her in his arms. The door-bell was ringing furiously, but he would have let the neighbors pull the wire till it broke before he would have left her in that dumb, shocked state. As he touched her she trembled violently; then the light came back to her eyes, and, with a sob of joy, Virginia flung herself on the breast of him whom she had mourned as dead.

The Motleys had time to think that Virginia was murdered before the pair opened the door. Very much surprised were they to see, instead of the policeman they expected to find, a very tall, handsome young man, a stranger, in undress navy uniform. Fred, now that his part of the fun was over, began to roar, and Virginia took him up in her arms, while the three gentlemen, assisted by the real Simon-Pure policeman, a brawny son of Erin, opened the closet and secured the prisoner. Within the next fifteen minutes the other servants had returned—for the burglary took place before 11 o'clock—and Alice, having recovered from her swoon, was carried to the station-house.

I don't know how Langley and Virginia was occupied till my return; but when Frank thrust his latch-key into the door, Virginia flew out of the library, and tried, with a few incoherent sentences, to prepare me for seeing something. The consequence was, that, when I pushed the door open in a very bewildered frame of mind, and saw Langley smiling at me, I was terrified almost out of my senses, and came near fainting.

To the best of my recollection, the household sat up nearly all night, though finally, after I had heard the whole story, been speechless over Virginia's bravery, and hugged Fred—now asleep in the arm-chair—Frank dragged me off to bed.

I don't know that Langley and Virginia sat there till morning, but certainly the first persons I saw upon coming down to breakfast were themselves, on the identical sofa where I had left them.

Langley's story is too long a one to be told here. Suffice it to say that being on deck when the Tecumseh sank, he had been able to strike out from the sinking ship, and, under cover of the smoke and roar of battle, to swim ashore. There, however, he was taken prisoner, and kept in close confinement for some months, finally making his escape. Coming direct to Frank for intelligence before presenting himself to his family, he had stopped to light a cigar under the gaslight, where Virginia had mistaken him for a policeman. He had known her instantly, and probably only her fright and agitation prevented her from recognizing his voice, which, as he mischievously told her, he did not disguise in the least.

Alice and her accomplice were identified by the police as old offenders. The woman had carried on a systematic pilfering at the Temples', and was an accomplished hypocrite. To my intense gratification the pair were sentenced for a full term in Sing Sing.

Langley and Virginia were married very soon after. Frank gave away the lovely little bride, whose fair girlish bloom had come back to her, and who, under the influence of love, seemed a different woman from the pale, sad creature who had moved so quietly about the house.

They idolize each other, and I think have quite forgiven Grandma Chichester and poor Horace Kent. Fred has always been a great pet with his aunt for his bravery on the night of the attempted burglary.

Between Fred's boasting and my sly teasing, poor Frank will never be allowed to forget his instrumentality in introducing me to such "a perfect treasure."

BENNETT—MAY.

The First Authentic Account of the Duel.

[From the New York Sun.]

Friends of Mr. May were much troubled by a suspicion which was growing prevalent that his conduct in the course of the duel had not been creditable, but a knowledge of the truth in regard to his extraordinary behavior was confined to but four, and the number of those who had any suspicion of the depth of disgrace which he had brought upon himself was small. Mr. Bennett fully intended to marry Miss May until the rupture occurred. Rooms were fitted up in his house at Fifth avenue and Thirty-eighth street in the most sumptuous manner for her occupation. Those who have seen the apartments declare them to be marvels of artistic magnificence.

After the assault on the 21st Mr. Bennett desired to find means of settling the matter without the publicity and scandal which would surely be consequent upon a duel. Several consultations were held between him and his friends, but they had all resulted in the conclusion that a duel must follow the street encounter. A challenge was sent; the arrangements, including the drawing up of a new will by Mr. Bennett, were completed, and the principals with their friends and a police surgeon not wholly unknown to fame, by devious routes arrived at the dueling ground at Marydell, Md. The first shot went to Mr. May. If he could kill or disable his antagonist while the words "one, two, three" were delivered in rapid succession by the other's second, he was safe. If he should fail, it would be his turn to be a target for the the bullet of his opponent. If, however, he fired before or after the words, he was, by the code, a coward, and in case he killed his opponent, a murderer. This arrangement has been found to be fairer than it seems at first thought to the duelist who has the second shot, for the nervousness of a man who discharges his pistol first discomposes his aim and acts as a shield to the other, and in the present case Mr. May betrayed a nervousness strongly at variance with his reputation as a cool and accurate marksman. When he took his position he was observed to be greatly discomposed. Mr. Bennett, on the other hand, showed no sign of trepidation, either in speech or manner, and from the first seemed to look upon the meeting rather as a disagreeable than a dangerous occurrence. Arrangements having been completed, the two principals took their positions at a distance of about twelve yards apart. The pistols were loaded and handed to them, and the seconds retired to one side. Then came the question, "Are you ready?" Immediately, and before "one" could be given, Mr. May raised his pistol, took hasty aim, and pulled the trigger. The weapon missed fire. On receiving the intimation that it was his turn, Mr. Bennett raised his pistol, cried scornfully, "I could kill you now if I wished," and, pointing it into the air, fired quickly. The duelists then saluted one another, when, suddenly overcome by shame and mortification, to the utmost amazement of all present, Frederick May turned and hurried away, unable longer to face his disgrace. It was no impulse of generosity on the part of Mr. Bennett, as all felt, which caused him to fire into the air, but a sudden desire to repay with interest the mortification which he had felt in the public lashing before the club-house. No words passed between the two principals at any time during the meeting, except Mr. Bennett's remark when he fired his pistol in the air, and the propositions so often mentioned were a mere myth. As soon as the tall form of the retreating duelist was out of sight, the rest of the party returned to the railway station.

The Dance of Death.

It was New Year's night at Cole Camp, sixteen miles from Sedalia, Mo., and there was a bar in the ball-room. A young man, while dancing near the counter, staggered, fell to the floor, and broke his nose. It was so common an incident that no attention was paid to it. The man lay on the floor for half an hour, and the dance went on. A physician came in, felt the man's pulse, and gravely remarked that he would die in a short time. The dance went on. In twenty minutes the man was dead. As the waltzers whirled by the corpse, they chatted pleasantly about the cause of death. Some thought that it was the bad quality of the whisky; others attributed it to undue indulgence in Kimmel; others said it was the shock caused by the fall; others mentioned heart disease. But the dance went on at Camp Cole until daybreak, although the man under the bar had increased his distance from Sedalia.

The oldest inhabitant is almost unanimously predicting an early spring.

TURKEY'S DEFIANCE.

Failure of the Conference of the European Powers.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

The entangled web of European complications is at last unraveled, so far as the relations of Turkey and Russia are concerned. The work of the conference is over, and the Plenipotentiaries by this time are on their war-vessels sailing for home, without having accomplished any valuable result in righting the wrongs of the Sclavic Christians or guaranteeing them immunity from Turkish tyranny in the future. The result is a melancholy one, to say the least. Great expectations were based upon this conference. Every leading power in Europe was represented [illegible] of the ablest men, and England sent undoubtedly the most brilliant diplomat she possesses. They met with a great flourish of trumpets, and at the outset impressed the world with the hope, based upon the firmness with which they treated the question of armistice between Turkey and Servia, that they would present such an ultimatum, and in such a manner as would inevitably impress the Porte with the conviction that the great powers were in earnest, and that, unless Turkey conceded and guaranteed the reforms which Russia had demanded, she would insur the displeasure of all Europe. As time went on, however, the conference dropped many of the most material demands which had been made with so much bluster, and so modified others that at last there was scarcely one of the propositions that had been made in the Andrassy note, the Berlin memorandum, the English note, or Ignatieff's Russian ultimatum, that had not been evaded or discarded altogether by the audacity and sharpness of Turkish statecraft. The conference, however, could not yield everything without the admission that the great powers had been overwhelmed by Turkey in the diplomatic game. They must make a stand somewhere, and they made it upon the question of an international commission to supervise the reforms promised by Turkey in her Utopian paper constitution, during a limited time, and it was laid before Turkey as an ultimatum. It might have been accepted by the Porte without at all weakening its hold upon its provinces, and would have cost the Turks nothing but a little humiliation; but even this small price it appears they were not prepared to pay. Having checked the conference at every step, they suddenly checkmated it with the prompt refusal not only to accept the last remaining proposition of the powers, but with defiant announcement that they would not allow any foreign interference in their affairs, saying which they politely but resolutely showed the Plenipotentiaries to the door. The decision has been made with astonishing unanimity. It is not the Sultan alone, nor the Sultan acting upon the advice of his Premier, which has thus confronted all Europe. It comes from a council of the magnates of the empire—Turks, Greeks, Armenians, and Christians—who unanimously informed the conference not only that their proposals were rejected, but that they (the Turks) would discuss nothing further except their own counter-proposals; that they preferred death to dishonor, and would rather have war than any foreign interference.

The prompt and vigorous action of the Turks has thus simplified matters. Some one must back squarely down or there must be a fight.

Safety from Fire.

Considerable discussion is going on in Chicago regarding safety from fire in theaters and public halls. The Superintendent of Buildings for that city recently made an elaborate report, after a careful inspection of the different dramatic temples, in which nearly all of them were condemned as mere fire-traps. The only exception to the sweeping condemnation was McVicker's theater, and even in the case of that the Building Superintendent made some suggestions whereby he thought improvements might be introduced for the protection of human life in case of fire. Mr. James H. McVicker, the proprietor of the theater, has been heard from on the subject. In a letter printed in the Chicago papers he says: "I claim for McVicker's theater that it is the best in regard to outlet of any theater in the country; that it is better built than nine-tenths of them, and that the precautions taken against fire are superior to any of them; the upper circle is better provided with outlets than any other theater in the country, and I doubt if there is one better in the world. It is an impossibility for those in it to form a blockade. Over two thousand persons have frequently passed out of McVicker's theater without haste, inside of four minutes. In a well-regulated and correctly disciplined theater, no fire should ever gain sufficient headway during a performance to endanger the lives of an audience. In the history of our country we have had but two calamities of this nature in theaters. The cause of the first was from doors opening in—that of the second was from carelessness. That thorough laws should be enacted and enforced in regard to theaters and all places of public assembly I have always contended, but the subject has received no attention of a proper kind in any State in the Union. I have done what I deem my duty, and shall continue to do so. Our true duty is to avoid the cause of panic, to check carelessness and provide for its punishment, when life or property is sacrificed by it. I am now preparing to make all material in McVicker's non-inflammable to such an extent that I feel justified in dropping all insurance unless my views are met in regard to rates. In the meantime, the public should have some regard for their own safety and discernment, instead of being led by loud advertisements to a special attraction, no matter where given."

The total number of arrests in New York city for the year 1876 was 95,599. Of the persons arrested, 68,003 were males and 24,596 females; 25,885 were charged with intoxication, 19,836 with disorderly conduct, 10,590 were drunk and disorderly, 6,349 were charged with assault and battery, 6,513 with larceny, 812 with burglary, 235 with robbery, and 100 are classed under the head homicide.

OPEN YOUR MOUTH AND SHUT YOUR EYES.

BY [illegible]

Like remembered words of a worn-out song
Comes a piping voice from the childish throng:
"Keep your mouth wide open, and shut your eyes,
And I'll give you something to make you wise."

Little honest Fred, with his mouth agape,
Shut his eyelids down for a tiny nap,
But doubting Frankie prefers to keep
A vigil stern through his feigned sleep.

'Tis the echo still of the serpent's speech,
That seems through the aisles of years to reach
Down from tempted Eve and the luscious sphere
To the cry of the children's voices here,

"To make one wise." Not a gaudy lure,
To entrap the rude, untutored boor,
For the eyes that look on the bending bough
Of the Tree of Knowledge open now.

On the gathered love that has gone before—
On the worthless heart of the apple's core,
And the open mouth [illegible]
Or a protoplasm, [illegible]

How the children jeer—"Courage, little Ted,
Never mind the laugh of the prudent Fred,
Perchance it is better still to trust,
Tho' the mouth be filled with a bitter dust."

It is better, Ted, maybe, after all,
To trust one may tho' the heavens fall,
And with open mouth, and with lidded eyes,
Still seek the gift that shall make us wise.

THE SNEEZE.

What a moment! what a doubt!
All my nose is inside out;
All my thrilling, tickling caustic,
Pyramid rhinocerostic,
Wants to sneeze, and cannot do it,
How it yearns me, stings me, thrills me!
Now says, "Sneeze, you goose; get through it."
Shee—shee—Oh! 'tis most del—ish!—
Ish!—ish!—most del—ish!

"All this falling down on sidewalks is sheer nonsense," observed the old man; "it is worse than that—it is downright carelessness. Now, when a man reaches a slippery place like this, for instance, he must—ah-wow!—gosh!" And when the old chap got through pounding stones and splitting boards, he lay on his back and helplessly inquired: "am I all here?"

Costly Laces and Jewelry.

Queen Isabella, of Spain, possesses a collection of old laces which cannot be equaled in Europe, and which is worth several millions. Productions of all countries, kinds and ages are there, all perfect in work, and of infinite richness. One dress of point D'Alençon is worth more than 100,000 francs. Some full sets of trimmings in old point, belonging to Her Majesty, are in themselves a fortune. That collection of lace is the pendant to that of cashmeres belonging to Queen Victoria, which is estimated at not less than 5,000,000 of francs. Her Majesty possesses India shawls to which the labor of more than twenty years had been devoted, and which, at no matter what price, could not be reproduced at present—existing workmen having lost the secret of such an art. We do not speak of certain shawls woven with the threads of gold, and in which the embroidery is ornamented with pearls and diamonds. Turning to other matters of female ornamentation, we can say that the finest emeralds in feminine jewelry are possessed by the Empress Elizabeth of Austria, just as the richest and most perfect collection of rubies extant is the property of the Grand Duchess of Saxe Weimar, grand-daughter of Paul I., Emperor of Russia. Pearls and turquoises, which are without rival, belong to the Russian imperial family, as do sapphires to the British house of Guelph. As for diamonds—except the crown jewels of various nations—private collections can vie with those of Queens, and not disadvantageously.—Paris Sport.

Hundreds of appliances by which the recent horror could have been prevented have already been forced upon public attention East and West.

SCHLIEMANN'S DISCOVERIES.

A New World of Splendid Hand-Made Pottery Brought to Light.

The German correspondent of the London Times sends the following from Leipsic: Dr. Schliemann is so busy in clearing the tombs on the Acropolis of Mycenæ, and in carefully arranging the treasures which he has brought to light, that he has no time at present to write a full account of his discoveries. "I would require more than a week," he writes, "to prepare even a superficial description of the treasures here collected." It is perhaps not generally known that the excavations at Mycenæ are carried on at the sole expense of Dr. Schliemann, while everything that is found by him goes to the Greek Government, to be deposited in a National Museum of Ancient Art at Athens. In a letter dated Nov. 19 Dr. Schliemann writes:

"In a depth of seven and one-half meters (twenty-five feet) I yesterday brought to light three more enormous tombs, all cut in the rock, which will have to be emptied this week. How great the veneration of the people of Mycenæ was for all these sepulchers cannot be better shown than by the ancient tombstones which I found three feet to six feet below those of which I wrote to you before. When the primitive tombstones had for ages been hidden by the accumulations of rubbish, their site was, nevertheless, so accurately remembered by tradition that the new monuments (which are probably of the thirteenth century B. C.) were erected exactly on the same spot. All the pottery found within two meters (six and one-half feet) above those rock-cut tombs is made by hand, lustrous black inside and out, or light green or red, with rude black or dark red ornamentation of circles and spiral lines."

In another letter, dated Mycenæ, Nov. 21, he says: "I beg leave to send you a drawing of a gold cup and a gold diadem, as well as of a bronze lance found to-day in the tomb marked by the bas-relief of the two serpents. In, on and about these tombs a new world of splendid hand-made pottery comes to light, and a vast number of obsidian knives. I am just going to open a sepulcher of enormous proportions. At a certain height above it there stands a cyclopean artificial altar. I expect to find treasures beneath it."

He writes again, under date of Nov. 24: "There are now in all five tombs. In the smallest of them I found yesterday the bones of a man and a woman, covered by at least five kilogrammes of ornaments of pure gold, with the most wonderful archaic impressed ornaments. Even the smallest leaf is covered with them. To-day I emptied the tomb, and still gathered there more than six-tenths of a kilogramme of beautifully ornamented gold leaves; also many earrings and ornaments representing an altar with two birds. One earring represents Hercules slaying the lion. There were found two scepters with wonderfully chiseled crystal handles, and many large gold and bronze vessels. I had hardly touched the second tomb when I found a beautifully ornamented gold cup and four large bronze vessels. This tomb is the largest, and will probably yield much more treasure. I have now the firmest conviction that these are the tombs which, as Pausanias writes, belong, according to the accredited traditions, to Atreus, Agamemnon, Cassandra, Eurymedon, etc."

Laura Prior's Perilous Promenade.

James H. Prior, of St. Louis, according to the Globe-Democrat, has an adopted daughter of 13 years who performs wonderful gymnastic feats in her sleep. Finding her room vacant one night, Mr. Prior began a search, which resulted in discovering her walking along a narrow iron railing which protected a gallery running the entire width of the house. When she reached the end of the railing she deliberately turned and walked back. This feat she performed several times with grace and apparent carelessness. In the meantime Mr. Prior came to himself, but fearing that if he moved he would startle the girl, and she would fall to the paved yard below, he remained quiet while she continued her perilous walk. In a few moments she seemed to be satisfied, and, carefully stepping to a chair, reached the floor and glided slowly by Mr. Prior, down the hallway, into her apartment and bed, where she was soon sleeping sweetly. At another time Mr. and Mrs. Prior found the girl had crawled through the skylight and was promenading the length of the roof-ridge. She was walking with her arms hanging listlessly by by her side, and her head inclined forward, as if she was looking immediately in front of her feet. The moon was shining brightly, and the white, lithe form of the sleeping girl could have been seen a block distant. There was a chimney half way to the ridge, and sometimes she made detours to the right or left, going completely around the obstruction, regaining the ridge, and traversing the entire length. Once she leaned on the chimney and seemed absorbed in deep meditation. Each time she reached the end of the roof it appeared to be her deliberate purpose to walk off, but she always checked herself when within about a foot of the edge, and slowly turning, carefully retraced her steps. Twice she descended on the incline of the roof, each time returning to the ridge very rapidly, as if she had met with something that excited her fears. Several times she looked up as if gazing at the stars or listening to some distant sound. Suddenly, while at the point of the ridge which she had first reached, she began to descend in the direction of the skylight, taking each step with great caution, and making slow progress. When she had nearly reached the opening Mr. Prior quietly withdrew. In a few moments Laura followed, proceeding at once to the garret-stairs and disappearing down the dark passage. Mr. and Mrs. Prior followed, keeping behind her as closely as possible, but before they could reach her she was in her own room and composing herself in bed.

Positively the Oldest.

"The oldest living person" is believed to be Esther Groom, colored, of Caldwell county, Ky. Octogenarians thereabouts say that "Aunt" Esther was an old woman when they were children. She is believed to be not less than 120 years old, is perfectly helpless, her flesh shrunken to her bones, and her skin all wrinkled and shriveled. She can scarcely talk intelligibly, though her mind is fair, while her memory cannot be relied on. She lives with her youngest son, Granville Groom, who is himself between 80 and 90 years of age.

A Modern Sarah.

[From Lexington (Ky.) Gazette.]

The very largest congregation that ever assembled in any church in Lexington came together on Monday, Jan. 1, at the Main street Christian church, to witness the marriage of Dr. Joseph G. Chinn to Mrs. Catharine Lawson, the former of this city, and the latter of Fayette county. The ages of the high contracting parties made it one of the most extraordinary marriages that was ever solemnized. The groom was of the ripe but modest age of 89 years, and looked as vigorous as most men at 60. The lady will be 90 years of age on the 1st day of May next. Dr. Chinn was a soldier of the war of 1812. He enlisted when about 18 years of age, but owing to an accident by which he was severely wounded in the foot he did not go out until the next year, but served with credit until the close of the war. This is his third marriage, but in all probability he may survive it many years. Mrs. Lawson was born in Virginia, but was brought by her parents to Kentucky in early life. She had a dream not long ago that made a deep impression on her, and that was that the Lord was sparing her for some wise purpose, which she interpreted, without the doubts and incredulity that beset Sarah of old, and these led her to accept one of several offers of matrimony. Having made up her mind to marry, she set about it with all the eagerness that any girl of 18 could exhibit. She bought a handsome trousseau and appeared at the altar in a steel-colored silk, with velvet cloak, seal-skin muff and boas, velvet bonnet, trimmed very becomingly with feathers and point lace, and very handsome jewelry. Out of respect for the white hair of her affianced, she did not conceal her own gray hairs, but had them puffed and well arranged. She was attended by five generations of her relatives, who preceded her into the church, and took reserved seats. The ceremony was performed by Elder Marshall with all solemnity, and the large congregation—that is, all that could get within the church—behaved with respectful attention. After the ceremony, and after the venerable couple had been congratulated by the clergyman, Master Coleman Gentry, a youth of 5 years, a nephew of the fifth generation, stepped up to her, bearing a beautiful bouquet of camelias and orange blossoms, which he presented in due form, and which was accepted by the bride with evident pleasure. The congregation remained seated while the bridal party passed out. At the door an old negro woman, one of her former servants, lifted her train, and carried it until she entered the carriage, when they drove off to their home and happiness. A bountiful wedding breakfast was awaiting their arrival.

Startling Discovery.

A belief in color-poisoning by means of green dresses and green wall-papers has already been forced upon the public by some tolerably conclusive evidence, but it seems that the mischievous propensities of this color are far from being yet fully exposed. A French savant, M. Paul Bert, has just exhibited against it articles of impeachment of the gravest character, supported by reports of a whole series of startling experiments. If his theory is true, it is not only the arsenic used in producing the color which does the injury, but the actual color itself, and a mere ray of green light is capable of affecting the health of the person exposed to it, apart from all aid afforded to it by the smell or presence of arsenic. To demonstrate this alleged fact, M. Bert has submitted several specimens of the sensitive plant to rays of different colors thrown upon them through stained glass, and in every case those which were treated to the most brilliant green light withered and died in the shortest time. In those plants which were exposed to red light a peculiar phenomenon was observed; the tips or spikes of the leaves prolonged themselves and grew forward in a lean and hungry fashion horizontally with the branch from which they sprang; while in a blue light the contrary effect was produced, the spikes standing out abruptly and perpendicularly from their stem. On one of the plants being inclosed in a sort of lantern, having a red glass on one side and green on the other, instead of shrinking away from the poison on their right to the roseate antidote on their left, the leaves, as if by fatal fascination, turned with one consent the other way and literally looked death in the face.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Why We Cough.

An Italian investigator has been studying the causes of coughs, and has come to the conclusion that they are the result of the presence of a parasitic fungus in the air-passages. In severe cases the parasite multiplies and takes possession of the lung-cells. Quinine is said to possess the power of stopping the microscopic fungi, and, is therefore, recommended as a remedy. The Italian doctor has successfully used a composition of the chloral-hydrate of quinine, one part; bicarbonate of soda, one part; gum arabic, twenty parts. The soda is intended to dissolve mucus; the gum arabic to increase the adherence of the powder on the bronchial passages. The blowing in of the powder should take place during a deep inspiration of the patient, so that it may penetrate the windpipe, the chief seat of the microscopic fungus. The remedy, whatever may be the truth of the theory on which it is founded, has the merit of simplicity, and if its application did little good, it could not do much harm.

We will add to the above that a gentleman in this city who is subject to severe attacks of hay-fever cured himself the past summer by snuffing quinine.—Rural New Yorker.

A LUNATIC, whose mental disorder is not suspected by strangers, recently traveled through Kentucky, and bargained to buy hundreds of farms at ridiculously high prices. The elation of the farmers was speedily followed by a disappointment.

Fish Culture.

The people who constantly enjoy the luxury of broiled whitefish, and whose boast is that the whitefish of our lakes is the best fish that swims, cannot be aware how rapidly the waters of the great lakes are being depleted of this valuable and delicious fish. If so, they would call a mass meeting to urge upon the Legislature of the State to make an appropriation and pass the necessary laws for the appointment of a Board of Fish Commissioners and the commencement of fish culture in the waters of our State.

The State of Michigan has been at work for three years, and makes an annual appropriation for this purpose. The Legislature of Wisconsin appropriated $10,000 last winter, and the result is that they have now in the hatching establishment at Milwaukee 10,000,000 whitefish and salmon-trout eggs hatching. Ninety-five per cent. of these eggs will hatch and the young fish be distributed in the waters of the State. The greater part will be deposited in Lake Michigan.

The returns for money invested in fish culture is enormous—500 per cent. is not a high estimate. The fisheries of the Dominion of Canada for the year 1875 yielded one million dollars' worth of fish more than in any one year before artificial hatching was begun. It is reasonably estimated that water with culture can be made to yield more per acre than land.—Chicago [illegible]

Business in Canada.

The Mercantile Agency of Dun, Wiman & Co., of Canada, has issued a circular reviewing the business results of 1876 in the Dominion of Canada. It is a new thing in the business world and is intended to be an annual affair. The agency reports that the year has been a hard one for the Dominion merchants, and there [illegible] a surprising number of failures. [illegible] following is the statement of failures for the last four years:

	Number.	Amount.
1873	994	$12,334,192
1874	966	7,696,765
1875	1,968	28,843,967
1876	1,728	25,517,991

The failures in Canada in the last two years, says the circular, number nearly 4,000, which, occurring among 50,000 traders, is a proportion indicative of something radically wrong in the trade of a rich country. At this rate, in ten years every second business man in Canada may succumb! The gross liabilities of failed estates during the two years are over $50,000,000, a sum barely equaled by the entire exports of grain in that period. Of this $50,000,000 at least $30,000,000 have been irrevocably lost, and when this amount is divided among the limited number of first hands which comprise the merchants, manufacturers, and bankers, the marvel is that they have stood these calamities with so few signs of distress.

Cold Feet.

It is just the season for cold feet, and many ills are attendant upon a lack of circulation in the extremities. People who are troubled with cold extremities are apt to have headaches, loose their appetite and feel bad continually, and these results can only be avoided by removing the cause, which seems a very little thing to do, but very few are willing to do it.

First of all, the shoes or boots must not be worn so tight as to prevent the circulation. No dictation of false pride should be allowed in this matter for there is too much at stake.

Second, for winter there is no covering so good to be next the feet as woolen. It serves a double purpose, of being a good non-conductor of heat and thus holds the heat of the body, and through a slight irritation of the surface keeps up a circulation in the capillaries next the skin, thus creating warmth. If the feet are once thoroughly chilled it is not the wisest plan to warm them by placing in water well heated, but far better to wash them thoroughly in water from which simply the chill has been taken, then with a crash towel rub the surface until it is red with blood, and the feet burning under the friction.

This method is a good one to preserve the warmth of the feet if used before the exposure.

A MAD cow owned by a Mr. Dugger, of Granby, Mo., attacked the log cabin in which the Dugger family resided, and tore down one side of it, one of the falling logs striking an infant 6 months old, and killing it.

Popularity.

The popularity of Messrs. James S. Kirk & Co.'s soaps, manufactured in Chicago, is shown by the unprecedented sale which their goods have reached during the year 1876. This by far is the largest soap manufacturing concern in the United States, producing and selling in all parts of this country, from the Red River of the North to New Orleans, and from Portland, Me., to San Francisco, 25,000,000 pounds annually. No so-called greases enter into these soaps. Only pure refined tallow and vegetable oils are used, containing no adulteration. Fair and square weights always reliable. This is why their soaps are so popular with all good and economical housekeepers.

YOU SAY CONSUMPTION cannot be cured. It can, by this new principle, new way, Dr. J. H. McLean's Cough and Lung Healing Globules. The healing gas generated when sucking them being inhaled, stops tubercular irritation and cures Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Consumption, or any diseases, Throat or Lung. Trial boxes, by mail, 25 cts. Dr. J. H. McLean's office, 314 Chestnut St. Louis, Mo.

For Throat Diseases

And affections of the chest, "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are of value. For Coughs, Irritation of the Throat, caused by cold, or Unusual Exertion of the vocal organs, in speaking in public, or singing, they produce beneficial results.

HATCH'S UNIVERSAL COUGH SIRUP has been in use 15 years, and has always been warranted to cure, and is now sold by over 6,000 druggists, who say they seldom have a bottle returned. Many of the best physicians in the country prescribe it as the best remedy for coughs, colds and CROUP within their knowledge. Pleasant to take, sure to cure, and should be sold by all druggists. It should be in every family, especially those with croupy children. Try it and you will always keep it. Two sizes—50 cents and $1.00. Put up by D. W. Hatch & Co., Jamestown, N. Y.

ON the death of one of England's most eminent physicians, all his effects were sold by auction, and among other things was a sealed packet, marked "Advice to Physicians," which brought a great price. The purchaser, on opening the packet, read as follows: "Keep the head cool, the bowels open, and the feet warm." If physic is necessary, use Parsons' Purgative Pills; they are the most scientifically prepared pill that has appeared in the last hundred years.

The Prodigal.

Inheritors of vast wealth are proverbially spendthrifts. The golden ore is dug from the mine, refined and coined by the labor of other hands and the sweat of other brows. Like children playing with an expensive toy, they can form no just estimate of its value. When the donor weighed the gold, into the balance so many days of unremitting and fatiguing toil, so many anxious and sleepless nights, so great self-denial, and so much care. But the heir [illegible] into his balance throws only—pleasure. The one values it by what it cost him, the other for what it will purchase. Like the prodigal in the Scripture parable, he thoughtlessly spends it to gratify the caprices and cravings of his nature. Then comes the last scene—the misery, the remorse, and the long and wearisome journey back to the home of frugal industry. But there are other prodigals. On her favorites our bounteous parent, Nature, has lavished her richest gift—health. But the prodigal values it lightly, for it cost him naught, and recklessly squanders it in riotous living. Present pleasure obscures future want. Soon the curtain rises on the last scene. We see him listless, impotent, abed—the sad inheritor of body and mind all lost—in misery and despair. Remorseful Conscience holds up to him the mirror of memory; he sees his own reckless folly has perverted the cause of his present pain. He resolves to return. The journey is long and tedious, but, if he perseveringly follows the right road, he will at length see the haven of his bliss in the distance, and Nature, seeing her invalid child afar off, will come out to meet him, and receive him back with love and blessing. To find the right road homeward, the suffering prodigal should read "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." Therein it is completely mapped out, its landmarks all indicated and its milestones all numbered. Read it. Price $1 50 (postage prepaid). Address the author and publisher, R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.

THE GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL, NEW YORK, has reduced prices to suit the times. The traveler can now stop at a first-class hotel for $2.50 to $3 per day. This is the largest hotel in the city, and Mr. Powers has taken the proper step to keep it full. We recommend the traveling public to give the Grand Central a trial.

THERE can be no mistake about it, "Matchless" plug tobacco takes the lead. Old fine-cut chewers say it gives better satisfaction and is cheaper than fine cut. You cannot be imposed upon, as each plug has the words, "Matchless P. T. Co." on a wooden tag. Try it once and you will always chew it. Manufactured by the Pioneer Tobacco Company, New York.

GOOD ADVICE.—If there is any of our readers who doubt the wonderful curative effects of Durang's Rheumatic Remedy, let them write to any prominent person in Washington city, where it is manufactured, and they will learn that it will do even more than is claimed for it. Sold by all retail druggists, and at wholesale in all large cities. Price, $1.00.

EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD at this season should take Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, because it purifies and enriches the blood, gives vigor, strength and vitality to the whole body and system. Dr. J. H. McLean's office, 314 Chestnut St. Louis.

WE received a very pleasant letter of thanks from our old friend Kendall, since his return home, for a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment which we gave him, and which he says has entirely cured him of the troublesome and dangerous cough he had when here.

MAGIC EGGS
—OR—

Fiery Serpents!
The great Parisian Miracle and Scientific Wonder. The great Egyptian Mystery renewed. There has never been any trick or illusion so eagerly sought for and giving such universal satisfaction as these Eggs of the Fiery Serpent. They create a world of fun and amusement, never failing to astonish all observers. For the Parlor, Exhibition, or Social Circle, it excels all others as a purely scientific wonder. Every egg is warranted to produce a perfect snake. They are no larger than a pea, yet by touching fire to them a hissing serpent over 300 times the size of the egg, or at least a yard in length, issues from the flame and smoke, and leisurely coils itself in such a natural attitude that it is almost impossible to realize that it is not a real snake. The reptile produced by these eggs can be preserved as great curiosities. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Buy one box and you will send for a dozen. Single boxes 25 cents, or 4 boxes for $1. ARMORY PUBLISHING CO., 59 Randolph Street, Chicago, Ill.

We Purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer and there is no Middle men to eat up the profits. Some goods—take Teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach the consumer, and each one has to have his profit; so that 40 to 50 per cent is added to price. The importer has his profit of 10 per cent, the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent, the speculator and wholesale merchant 10 to 20 per cent, and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars Coffees Spice, Prunes Fruits Tobaccos Liquors or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these intermediate profits. No Middle-men with us. We have made another Reduction on Teas.

THE INDIANAPOLIS

SENTINEL.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1877.

Every reader and thinking man in the state who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for at least one of the editions of the Sentinel. Farmers, Merchants and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL.

The Weekly Sentinel will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than Compare Favorably with any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be Newsy, Literary, and full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

TERMS.

Invaribly cash in advance.

"Unquestionably the best sustained work of the kind in the World."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

ILLUSTRATED.

Notices of the Press.

The magazine has attained in its one quarter century and more of existence to that point where it may be said of it, in the words of Dr. Johnson, "It is vain to blame and useless to praise." The lustre is its long-ago attained reputation has increased as the years have passed, and its future seems as bright if not brighter than at any time since the golden hue of prosperity settled around its later and better years.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Harper's Monthly is marked by the same characteristics which gave it circulation from the first with the better class of readers. It combines reading matter with illustrations in a way to make clear and vivid the facts presented. Pictures merely designed to catch the eye of the ignorant are never inserted.—Chicago Journal.

TERMS.

Postage free to all Subscribers in the United States.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, one year $4 00

$4 00 includes prepayment of U. S. postage by the publishers.

Mark Twain's Hotel.

Having lately opened a hashery, I send you these, my rules and regulations:

This house will be considered strictly intemperate.

None but the brave deserve the fare.

Persons owing bills for board will be bored for the bill.

Boarders who do not wish to pay in advance are requested to advance and pay.

Boarders are expected to wait on colored cooks—for meals.

Sheets will be nightly changed once in six months, or more if necessary.

Double boarders can have two beds with a room in it, or two rooms with a bed in it, as they choose.

Boarder are requested to pull off their boots if they can conveniently do so.

Beds with or without board.

Dreams will be charged for by the dozen.

Night mares hired out at reasonable rates.

Stone vaults will be furnished to snoring boarders, and the proprietor will in no wise be responsible for the tin-panums of the other ears.

The jest that gives pain is no jest.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables, routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to Amusements.

We are authorized to say that our Dramatic Company will again appear in about one week in the splendid play of "Black Eyed Susan," one of the most charming dramas of the day. The laughable play of "Pocahontus" will conclude the entertainment. In these quiet inactive times, our citizens should take advantage of a little diversion of this kind, if only to break the monotony of dull times. The troup will endeavor to please and amuse, and are worthey of patronage.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

How it Appears from a Democratic Point of View to a smart Woman.

I never until this fall realized the debt we owe the press, and I never appreciated the advantage of living in a country that elects its own rulers. My husband is a democrat, and my father, who boards with us, is a republican. On the 7th of November I took down my last winters cloak, and I couldn't keep back the tears. That cloak cost $25, but it was short, and of course I couldn't wear it this season. It didn't seem as if I could wear my double Paisley shawl all winter, but I thought of the sufferings of the poor, our heavy church debt, and of the many obligations William had to meet the 1st of January, and I concluded I wouldn't say a word about it. I might be a dowdy, but I would go calmly forward—up the church aisle—supported by the smiles of an approving conscience.

When William came home that night he said New York had gone for Tilden, and there was a glow upon his brow and a light within his eye I hadn't seen there for years. The biscuits were light as a feather, and said I: "William, what do you think I had better do about a cloak this winter? You know they don't wear short cloaks. I suppose you don't feel as if you could afford a new one?"

"See about it" said William scraping the last drop of peach juice from his preserve plate. That's a dreadfully vulgar habit, and I've told William so over and over again, and I do wonder, that being a genuine, elegant democrat, he will presist in it.

The next morning, when I passed through the sitting-room, William sat shivering over a closed register in his stocking feet, his hair uncombed, but he cried out from the top of his paper, "Democratic victories everywhere!" "The coutry gone enmasse for Tilden!" "Intense excitement and rejoicing!" We had waffles and maple molasses for breakfast, and I made the coffee myself. William had made one earnest dab at his hair with the hair brush, but had evidently missed. Father called for toast, and said he had neuralgic pains streaking all down the left side of his face. William read aloud soothing morsels from the Democratic paper, such as "Indiana gives Tilden 10,000 majority!"

"What do you think this morning about my having a new cloak, William."

"Of course you can have a new cloak, if you need one. Full returns not yet received from Oregon, Nevada, Florida, and Louisiana, but they are undoubtedly ours!"

"Um!" said father.

I felt a good deal of anxiety about family prayers. William isn't a professor, Father leads devotions, and I was afraid he would be too supplicatory; but he prayed mostly for the heathen, Jews, and such like, but didn't refer to the democrats, and only once—just after the heathen—alluded to our suffering country.

When William came up to dinner he said returns of democratic majorities were pouring in from all quarters, and said I: "William, I've been thinking the matter over, and I do believe it would be the best economy to buy a fur cloak. everybodp is wearing fur. It might cost more at first, but it would be cheapest in the end, fur is so durable."

"How much will it cost?"

"Mrs. Col. Tucker's sealskin sacque was $200 last winter, but I don't feel as if, in our circumstances, we can afford that. Furs are cheaper than last fall, and I think I could get a good, desirable article, not so rich as some, but still good enough for people in our circumstances, for $150.

"Um!' said father.

William had taken out a blank check, and was reflecting, when in whisked the president of the democratic club and said Florida and South Carolina had gone for Tilden, and William was wanted down at the club room to see about the illumination. He filled out the check, and I immediately went down street and selected the cloak.

That evening a shade of anxiety—a scarcely preceptible tinge of melencholy—had settled on William's countenance, while father's neuralgia was better. William asked if I had done anything about my cloak, and, if I hadn't, he should suggest waiting awhile; furs might be cheaper. He said, when I asked him about it, the illumination had been postponed.

The next morning I heard the boys in the street screaming that Hayes was elected, and when I went down father was sitting on the front stairs coatless, and with his vest on one shoulder, while William balanced himself on the edge of the hat-stand. Both patriots were stocking-footed. They had just taken in the morning papers. Very little conversation was made at the breakfast table, but father was extremely polite to William, said he didn't know when he had eaten buck wheat cakes that tasted so much as they did when he was a boy.

At noon William didn't stay to desert, but father, having eaten his own pudding, drew William's untasted plate to himself.

The tears were welling to my eyes, and father kindly inquired why I wept.

"I've been thinking my old hat fixed over won't look at all suitable with my new cloak, but William is so blue I can't bear to ask him for more money."

"Mercy, on me!" said father, "don't cry over a bonnet. Go down and get what you want and bring the bill to me."

My hat was to be of seal-brown. "Two feathers or three?" ask the milliner. I thought of the hundreds out of employment of the destitution and want the winter would behold, of the vanity and pride of dress, but while I hesitated a newsboy, just out with the afternoon papers, yelled: "Florida and Louisiana both sure for Hayes!" I knew how father would feel, and said: Oh three certainly."

For two or three days there was a look, not so much of pure melancholy as of gloom, wrath, and vengeance commingled in William's countenance, and he spinkled pepper on his beefsteak fearfully. Father said that he awaited the action of the Louisiana returning board with confidence in their integrity, and sipped his tea with a spoon. I never knew father to sip his tea before with a spoon in all my life.

By and by it was reported that elecors' names had been omitted from republican voters in Louisiana, and father said there was a chill in these November days that struck to the very marrow, and William said he intended to arrange his business so that he could spend two or three weeks of winter in some southern clime, say in Georgia or Louisiana. That afternoon I went shopping, and at tea-time laid on the cloth four or five samples of seal-brown merino.

"William," said I, "which of those do you call the best piece of goods?"

His opinion coincided with mine. I held two bits off at a distance. "Every so many woman that I know have dresses off that piece," said I. I laid the bits down and sighed. Then I held them off again and said, "How dreadful it is to be poor!"

"If you want a dress so badly, get it, Mary Ann," said William.

"I really don't know as in our circumstances I ought, William."

"If there's anything I hate to see it is a shabbily dressed woman—get it." So in order to satisfy William I had to get the merino.

Since that time Hayes has been sometimes elected and sometimes Tilden. All disguises have fallen off in our family, and though my father and William treated each other with forced politeness, such words as "corruption," "nigger," "bull-dozed," have become familiar language in what I once hoped hoped would be a refined Christian household.

"William," said I, as I rang for more baked potatoes one morning, "I never allowed myself to read the Beecher scandal—much as I wanted to—and if it were worse than this I'm glad I didn't."

One day, when Louisiana went for Hayes, father promised me a new parlor carpet. If the question isn't settled soon I think I can easily get the house refurnished, and perhaps have a new china set and a silver desert service. I am so sorry the Centennial is closed, for I know I could just as well spend another fortnight in Philadelphia, and I do believed I could have that lovely pink coral set I wanted so badly.

I don't understand politics, but I am so glad I live under a republican form of government, and I do feel sure, if anyone makes good resolutions, and tries to be economical, and really means to be a good wife and daughter, a way will open out of difficulties.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A BLOCK of business houses in Hartford, Conn., was destroyed by fire last week. The loss is estimated at $220,000....J. B. Ford & Co., the publishers of Henry Ward Beecher's paper, the Christian Union, have gone into bankruptcy the second time. They offer their creditors 30 cents on the dollar. Among the assets is the contract with Henry Ward Beecher to write a life of Christ. It is indorsed "value uncertain."

THE Coroner's jury in the case of the Brooklyn Theater calamity has just rendered a verdict. They say that, of the 218 victims of the fire, two were burned to death, and the remainder were suffocated.

THE WEST.

THE Academy of Music, at Indianapolis, was destroyed by fire last week. The loss is estimated at $100,000....A peddler called at the house of Mr. S. B. Chalfant, near Thornville, Ohio, the other evening, and obtained permission to lodge over night. During the night he chloroformed the entire family, and ransacked the house, carrying off $900 in money and $35,000 in drafts....By the explosion of a boiler in Goff's saw-mill, near Eaton, Ind., a few days ago, three men were killed and four dangerously injured.

MRS. MITCHELL, a Chicago woman, has distinguished herself by killing a burglar. The victim was Dave Baggio, one of the most dangerous desperadoes in the city. He attempted to rob her of a gold watch and chain, and received a pistol ball in his anatomy, which gave him his quietus.

THERE is stored in Chicago elevators 3,533,-530 bushels of wheat; 2,367,788 bushels of corn; 660,940 bushels of oats; 249,082 bushels of rye, and 1,049,631 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 7,860,971 bushels, against 4,645,300 bushels at this period last year.

NEWS has reached Red Cloud Agency that Crazy Horse's camp is located at the mouth of the Powder on the Yellowstone, and consists of 1,200 lodges. The 500 Cheyennes whipped by Gen. Mackenzie in the Big Horn mountains late in November had reached the village after a terrible march through storms across the country. They were destitute of food, ammunition, and shelter, and many wounded died en route. All are said to be very much discouraged, and seriously debating a surrender....A telegram from Kansas City, Mo., says "reports are coming in from all quarters that terrible havoc is being made among the cattle herds between Los Animas and Fort Dodge on account of the severity of the weather. Thousands of cattle are reported dead on the plains of Colorado and Wyoming."....A fiendish conspiracy has been discovered and broken up in Williamson county, Ill. Some twelve or fifteen villains had perfected a system of arson and robbery, involving murder whenever it should be necessary or desirable, and were all ready to carry out the fiendish programme when the existence of the organization was accidentally ascertained, and, after several arrests had been made, the parties turned State's evidence, and disclosed information which enabled the authorities to completely break up the organization.

THE SOUTH.

THE Supreme Court of South Carolina has rendered a decision in the quo warranto proceedings against the Hayes electors, dismissing the case on the grounds that the proceedings were illegally presented on the part of the State, instead of the United States....Robert Gibson, a Deputy United States Marshal, was murdered at Memphis, a few days ago, by Robert Drury, whose father, a noted counterfeiter, had been arrested by Gibson....W. C. D. Whipps, proprietor of the Willard Hotel, Louisville, Ky., shot and killed his chief clerk, R. W. Stockton, during an altercation in the hotel office, a few days ago.

A COLUMBIA (S. C.) dispatch says: "Judge Mackey has granted a preliminary injunction restraining State Treasurer Cardozo and Comptroller General Dunn, respectively, from drawing any warrants or paying out any funds from the State treasury under the Appropriation bill passed by the Mackey House at its late session, upon the ground that that body, which pretended to originate and pass it, was not the legal House of Representatives."

CIRCUIT JUDGE CARPENTER has rendered a decision at Columbia to the effect that Chamberlain's late inauguration as Governor of South Carolina was illegal; that Hampton has not been legally inaugurated, and that Chamberlain is therefore lawfully acting Governor until his successor shall be duly qualified....R. O. Holloway, a Republican trial Justice, was recently assassinated at Timmonsville, S. C. "The assassination," so the telegraph informs us, "fired the blacks, who immediately armed, and the whites organized a strong police force. The two parties came in collision on the outskirts of the town, and the result was that two special policemen were wounded, when the whole force returned to town."

IN a habeas corpus case coming up last week before Judge Mackey, at Columbia, S. C., he again decided that Wade Hampton was the legal Governor of the State. His decision was appealed from to the Supreme Court.

POLITICAL.

THE contest for the United States Senatorships from West Virginia, has been settled by the election of H. G. Davis for the long term, and Frank Hereford for the short term....The Georgia Legislature has chosen Benjamin H. Hill to succeed Mr. Norwood in the United States Senate from that State.

THE New York Senate, by a party vote, last week adopted resolutions declaring Hayes the legally-elected President, and that he ought to be inaugurated....The Florida Legislature has made an appropriation to pay the Democratic Presidential electors from that State.

COL. PLUMB, an editor and practical printer, has been elected to the United States Senate from Kansas.

THE testimony of John T. Pickett, a Washington lawyer, and formerly a General in the Confederate army, given before the House committee on the duties and powers of the House in counting the electoral vote, produced quite a sensation at the national capital. Pickett's testimony is to the effect that overtures were made to him, on behalf of J. Madison Wells, to negotiate the sale to the Democrats of the Louisiana Returning Board, the consideration being the trifling sum of $1,000,-000. According to Pickett's story, Joseph Harris Maddox visited Washington as Wells' agent, and made the proposition. Pickett thereupon visited New York, consulted John Morrissey, and laid the facts before him. Morrissey, to use Pickett's words, "would buy these fellows as easily as he would pigs," but, having faith in Tilden's election, he didn't think it necessary to open negotiations. He next called on Abram S. Hewitt, who said that "this was the third proposition of the kind that had been made to him on the part of the Louisiana Returning Board, but under no circumstances would he entertain any such proposition." Maddox was placed on the witness stand and partially corroborated Pickett's story. He said he went to Washington in the interest of Wells; that the latter told him (Maddox) that he (Wells) would like to serve his party in making a return in favor of Hayes, but would not take the risk unless paid for it; that the Democratic majority was too heavy to handle. The witness, upon visiting Washington, called first upon Secretary Cameron and told him Wells wanted money, but the Secretary declined to have anything to do with the matter. He says he then, in obedience to Wells' instructions, attempted to open negotiations with the Democrats, with the result as stated. Wells denies the story as a base fabrication manufactured out of whole cloth. He says it is an infamous conspiracy to injure the Returning Board and influence the electoral commission.

WASHINGTON.

JUDGE DAVIS, says a Washington dispatch, was on the Supreme bench when he received the telegram from Springfield, Ill., informing him of his election to the United States Senate. "After the adjournment of court he was called on by Illinois friends, who congratulated him on the result, and inquired as to his acceptance of the office. He did not say whether he would accept it or not, but if he should conclude to do so he will not resign before the 4th of March, the Senatorial term not beginning until that time. He stated that he had not been consulted regarding the use of his name as a candidate, and had not authorized it."....The President has appointed Thomas Settle, of North Carolina, United States District Judge for Florida, and Benjamin F. Flanders United States Assistant Treasurer at New Orleans.

THE commission appointed to report a plan for the reorganization of the army have informed the President that they have not been able to give due consideration to the subject, and are not prepared, therefore, to recommend any plan....In an interview, the other day, the President expressed a very confident belief that the country has reached a condition which renders an immediate resumption of specie payments practicable and desirable, and that the present Congress could render no more acceptable and valuable service to the country than to pass the laws necessary for the realization of this desirable result at once. He thinks it would be entirely feasible to resume on the 1st of March, and that the state of trade and high favor in which American securities are held abroad would insure the complete success of the effort, if the Executive is empowered to make it.

TO ALL the appeals of the Packard Government for recognition as the lawful State authority of Louisiana the President replies that he will do nothing whatever to forestall the decision of the Presidential question, which is so interwoven with that of the State election that the settlement of the one will carry with it the other. Unless some act of violence is attempted in New Orleans, the existing situation will be maintained; and, if an outbreak should occur, martial law will be proclaimed, and the State will remain under military administration until the whole matter can be adjusted by the arbitrating commission....The Supreme Court has adjourned till the 19th of February on account of the impending withdrawal of five of the Justices to form the judicial branch of the tripartite electoral Commission.

THE President has appointed A. T. Wikoff, Pension Agent at Columbus, Ohio....The trial of Gen. Belknap, for receiving bribes while acting as Secretary of War, is set in the Criminal Court at Washington, beginning Feb. 21. Ex-Senator Matt H. Carpenter and Judge Fullerton, of New York, will conduct his defense.

GENERAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says a number of officers of the late war, both Federal and Confederate, have determined to offer their services to President Iglesias, of Mexico. They say they can easily raise 10,000 or 15,000 men in Louisiana and Texas, who will be able to sweep Diaz's forces before them.

A SYSTEM of customs frauds, thought to be unparalleled in breadth and ingenuity, has just been unearthed at Washington. The direct means of defrauding the revenue has been through false invoices, and the only means of their detection lay in attaching guilt to United States Consuls in Europe. This has been done by means of a United States official traveling incognito among the crooked consulates, who has recently returned to Washington, having succeeded in securing clews that will lead to the conviction of some of the largest importing firms in the East. Suit is to be commenced by the District Attorneys against the offending merchants, and the developments promised are of a startling character.

FOREIGN.

SPAIN is again troubled by turbulence in the Basque provinces.

MR. GLADSTONE, while disclaiming any warlike intentions toward the Ministry of England, bluntly asserts that the policy of his country in the Eastern complication has been wrong and ruinous. In a speech at Taunton, the other day, the ex-Premier criticised severely the English attitude toward Turkey, claiming that the British Government is largely to blame for the Porte's treatment of the European powers. The Oriental savage has won renown for his disregard of treaties, and Mr. Gladstone showed that the Paris compact has never been respected by the fez and tassel....The Russian ambassador, Ignatieff, took his departure from Constantinople on Saturday, and the Sultan and his Ministers are left for the present to their own devices, for such preparation as it may be possible to make for the termination of the armistice, and the eventualities which are most likely to follow when the season permits a resumption of field operations by the Bosnian and Herzegovinian insurgents and their allies....A Constantinople dispatch says the Porte, in accordance with the friendly advice of France and Austria, has requested Servia and Montenegro to send delegates there to arrange for peace. It is thought the proposal will be accepted. The basis of the peace proposed by Turkey is said to be moderate and conciliatory.

A LONDON dispatch says the American "spiritualist," Slade, who was recently sentenced to three months' confinement at hard labor, has had his sentence quashed on appeal on a legal technicality....A heavy defalcation in the Banque de Paris has just been discovered. The culprit is one of the chief clerks of the bank. The amount of the embezzlement is 600,000 francs.

A DISPATCH from St. Petersburg says the peace party in the Russian Cabinet is prevailing....The British Council has issued further stringent orders against the importation into Great Britain from Germany and Belgium of cattle, hay, hides, horns, fat, hoofs and fresh meat....The Emperor of Japan has reduced farmers' taxes from 3½ per cent. to 2½ per cent. per annum. The revenues of the empire are thus impaired to the extent of $15,000,000, but the Japanese ruler, in the decree lessening the people's burdens, enjoins such economy in public expenditures as will comport with this reform in the fiscal affairs of the Government.

THE Countess Howe, wife of the late Earl Howe, committed suicide in London, the other day, by jumping out of the window of her mother's house, while laboring under a fit of temporary insanity....A dispatch from Rome announces that an officer has visited the Roman Archbishop Ledochowski with a copy of an indictment and a summons to appear before the Posen tribunal to answer for breaches of the German law.

ADVICES from the City of Mexico to Feb. 1, furnish the following news: Armed resistance against Gen. Diaz is considered at an end for the present. Many adherents of Lerdo continue to leave the country, fearing outrages. The Church party tacitly countenances Diaz, but is really working to place the Conservatives in power. The general opinion prevails that the Diaz Government will be of short duration. Gen. Diaz has ordered the release of a number of foreigners who have been confined in prisons at Matamoras and Monterey.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, Jan. 26.—Senate.—The session of the Senate was brief, and no business of importance was transacted. Mr. Jones, of Florida, called up the petition of the Democratic Presidential electors of Florida, recently presented by him, asking that their votes be counted as the true return, and addressed the Senate at length in regard to the recent election in that State. He argued that the Tilden electors were legally elected, and had been deprived of their rights by the State Canvassing Board.

House.—The discussion of the Electoral bill was resumed, and Messrs. Hooker (Democrat, of Mississippi), Hartridge (Democrat, of Georgia), and Felton (Democrat, of Georgia) spoke in favor of the measure, and against the claim that the President of the Senate had the right to count the electoral vote. Mr. Mills (Democrat, of Texas) opposed the bill, yet said there were some good things in it. Mr. Baker (Republican, of Indiana) spoke against the bill, declared it unconstitutional, and criticised it for excluding from the commission the Chief Justice, characterizing the discrimination as an odious and unjust reflection upon a wise magistrate. Mr. Watterson (Democrat, of Kentucky), spoke in favor of the bill. He said if the two houses failed to agree upon some plan the country would see the Senate declare Hayes elected, and it would see the President of the United States, supported by the army and navy, prepared to seat him in office. Mr. Lamar (Democrat, of Mississippi) advocated the measure. He said it eliminated the sword from the controversy, and sent it to a tribunal whose character guaranteed justice, right and truth in its decisions. Mr. Hill (Democrat, of Georgia) gave the bill his hearty and warm approval. Mr. Singleton (Democrat, of Mississippi) and Mr. Lapham (Republican, of New York) opposed the measure on constitutional grounds. Mr. Bland (Democrat, of Missouri) sustained the bill because it provided a remedy for existing difficulties, but he expressed his belief that no constitution or law could be devised which would secure honest elections, or which thieves and robbers could not find some means of evading. Mr. Southard (Democrat, of Ohio) sustained the bill, but suggested that it should be so amended as to provide for submitting to the commission the question as to the right of Colorado to vote as a State. Mr. Vance (Democrat, of North Carolina) opposed the bill as unconstitutional, and because Congress had no right to delegate its authority. Mr. Harrison (Democrat, of Illinois) gave the measure his hearty support. Mr. Foster (Republican, of Ohio) believed that Gov. Hayes was fairly elected, but he was in favor of the bill. Mr. Landers (Democrat, of Indiana) spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Townsend (Republican, of New York) was convinced that Hayes was elected President, and he did not propose to put in jeopardy that election; hence he would oppose the measure. Mr. Lynch (Republican, of Mississippi) opposed the bill on constitutional grounds. Mr. Knott (Democrat, of Kentucky) did not think that Congress had the right, under the constitution, to delegate the power of counting the electoral vote to a commission; he therefore opposed the bill. Mr. Carr (Democrat, of Indiana) opposed the bill on constitutional grounds. Mr. Dunnell (Republican, of Minnesota) opposed the measure; he thought if it were passed it would become a precedent, and the same great farce would be played over again four years hence. Mr. Hardenbergh (Democrat, of New Jersey) spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Pratt (Republican, of Iowa) opposed it as at variance with the whole course of constitutional precedents. Mr. O'Brien (Democrat, of Maryland) supported the bill. Messrs. Lawrence (Republican, of Ohio) and Blackburn (Democrat, of Kentucky) opposed it on constitutional grounds. Mr. Jones (Democrat, of Kentucky) opposed it, not so much on account of the unconstitutionality as the impolicy of the measure. Messrs. Field (Independent, of New York), Brown (Democrat, of Kentucky) and Randall (Democrat, of Louisiana) spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Payne (Democrat, of Ohio) Chairman of the committee which reported the bill, closed the debate in a brief but earnest speech in favor of the measure, and the Speaker announced that the vote would be taken on the final passage of the bill. The Clerk proceeded to call the roll amid the most intense interest and excitement, with the following result:

YEAS.

Mr. Speaker, Abbott, Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, Bagley, Geo. A., Bagley, John H., Banning, Beebe, Bell, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradley, Bright, Brown, Ky., Buckner, Burchard, Wis., Burleigh, Cabell, Caldwell, Tenn., Campbell, Candler, Caulfield, Chapin, Chittenden, Clark, Ky., Clark, Mo., Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Crapo, Culberson, Cutler, Darrall, Davis, Davy, Debolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durand, Eden, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Field, Finley, Foster, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hamilton, Ind., Hamilton, N. J., Hancock, Hardenbergh, Harris, Mass., Harris, Ga., Harris, Va., Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Hewitt, N. Y., Hewitt, Ala., Hill, Hoar, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, House, Humphreys, Hunter, Hunton, Jenks, Jones, N. H., Kehr, Kelley, Lamar, Landers, Ind., Landers, Conn., Lane, Leavenworth, LeMoyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, Marsh, McDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Morey, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, Philips, Mo., Pierce, Piper, Platt, Potter, Power, Rea, Reagan, Reilly, John, Reilly, J. B., Rice, Riddle, Robbins, N. C., Robbins, Pa., Roberts, Ross, N. J., Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Seelye, Sheakley, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Thomas, Throckmorton, Townsend, Pa., Tucker, Turney, Vance, N. C., Waddell, Walker, N. Y., Walker, Va., Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Wells, Mo., Wells, Miss., Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wike, Willard, Williams, A. S., Mich., Williams, Del., Williams, W. B., Mich., Willis, Wilshire, Wilson, W. Va., Wilson, Iowa, Wood, N. Y., Yeates, Young—191.

NAYS.

Baker, Ind., Baker, N. Y., Ballou, Banks, Blackburn, Blair, Bradford, Brown, Kan., Burchard, Butts, Caldwell, Ala., Cannon, Carr, Caswell, Cate, Conger, Crounse, Danford, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Evans, Eames, Flye, Forney, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Hubbell, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jones, Ky., Joyce, Kasson, Kimball, Knott, Lapham, Lawrence, Lynch, Magoon, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Nash, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Plaisted, Poppleton, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Robinson, Rusk, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, Smith, Pa., Smith, Ga., Stowell, Thornburgh, Townsend, N. Y., Tufts, Van Vorhees, Vance, O., Wait, Waldron, Wallace, S. C., Wallace, Pa., White, Whitney, Williams, N. Y., Williams, Wis., Williams, Ala., Wood, Pa., Woodburn, Woodworth—86.

Seven Democrats and seven Republicans were absent, namely: King, Collins, Egbert, Wigginton, Lord, Hayes, Bass, Stevens, Carson, Phillips of Kansas, Schumaker, Odell, Ross and Wheeler.

SATURDAY, Jan. 27.—Senate.—Mr. Allison introduced a bill to construe section 13 of the Pacific Railroad act of July 1, 1862, and to determine the relation of the main line and branches. Referred. Mr. Wright called up the Senate bill to extend for two years from the 10th of March next the act establishing the Board of Commissioners of Southern Claims. Passed....The bill to ratify the agreement with certain bands of Sioux nation Indians and with the Northern Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians passed.

House.—The House, by a party vote, and amid much general excitement, declared the members of the Louisiana Returning Board in contempt, for refusing to produce the returns and other documents relating to the Louisiana election. The members of the board submitted a written answer, in which they denied the right of the House to demand the papers, denouncing the attempt of the committee to compel their production as usurpation, etc., and claiming that the documents in question were beyond their reach, being in possession of the Louisiana Secretary of State. After the reading of the answer, the House passed resolutions ordering the prisoners to be held in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms until they produce the papers....Mr. Knott, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, made a report favoring the admission of Mr. Belford as the Representative from Colorado....The Indian Appropriation bill was passed.

Republican Caucus.—A caucus of the Republican members of the House was held in the evening, at which Messrs. Garfield and Hoar were chosen as the representatives of the party on the House branch of the electoral tribunal.

MONDAY, Jan. 29.—Senate.—A special Message was received from the President announcing his approval of the Electoral Arbitration bill. The President says he believes the bill gives assurance that the result will be accepted without resistance from the supporters of the disappointed candidate, and that the highest officer shall not hold his place with a questioned title of right. The Message also alludes to the imminent peril the country has escaped through the adoption of the bill. The President further declares that in no instance has the President of the Senate exercised the power of deciding disputed election returns. In such a case as this, where the result is involved in doubt, it is the duty of the law-making power to provide in advance a lawful mode of settling the difficulty. One of the two candidates must have been elected, and it would be a deplorable sight to witness any controversy as to which should receive or hold the office....Mr. Robertson called up Mr. Gordon's resolution acknowledging the Hampton Government in South Carolina as the legal Government, and made an address supporting the resolution. He denied there was any intimidation on the part of the whites toward the blacks. On the contrary, he had no doubt many blacks were deterred from voting the Democratic ticket by Republicans of their own color....Mr. Sargent submitted to the Senate the majority report of the special committee appointed to investigate the late election in Florida. The report finds that the electoral vote of that State was fairly cast for Hayes and Wheeler, and justifies the action of the Canvassing Board in throwing out certain returns on the ground of fraud and intimidation.

House.—The following bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Banning, fixing the time for the regular meetings of Congress. It provides that the first session of every Congress shall begin on the 4th of March....By Mr. [illegible], declaring forfeited to the United States certain lands granted Michigan for railroad purposes, and providing for their sale to actual settlers; by Mr. Hubbell, chartering a freight railroad company from tide-water on the Atlantic to the Missouri river.

TUESDAY, Jan. 30.—Senate.—Mr. Edmunds submitted a resolution authorizing and directing the President of the Senate to appoint two tellers on the part of the Senate to perform the duties required by the Electoral Count bill which recently passed. Agreed to....Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, delivered a speech in opposition to the bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts....A large number of petitions were presented, asking the adoption of the sixteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, prohibiting States from disfranchising persons on account of sex....Messrs. Edmunds, Morton and Frelinghuysen (Republicans), and Bayard and Thurman (Democrats), were unanimously selected to represent the Senate in the commission authorized by the Electoral Count bill, they having previously been nominated in caucus.

House.—The House, by a vote of 150 to 76, passed the bill abolishing the Board of Police Commissioners of the District of Columbia over the President's veto....The bill appropriating $500,000 to be paid to James B. Eads for the construction of the Mississippi river jetties, etc., was passed....Mr. Payne offered a resolution that the House elect five members of the commission on the Presidential electoral count. Adopted. Mr. Lamar nominated Payne, Hunton, Abbott, Garfield and Hoar. The five were voted for together, and elected, Payne receiving 263 votes; Hunton, 259; Abbott, 262; Garfield, 258; Hoar, 261....The Speaker also laid before the House a message from the President stating that the commission appointed to reorganize the army had reported that it was not at this time prepared to submit a plan for its reorganization....The House passed the bill reported last session from the Committee on Judiciary in relation to damages for the infringement of patents. It provides that damages can only be recovered for infringements which shall have occurred during the term of one year preceding the notice of infringement.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 31.—Senate.—The President pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication signed by Associate Justices Clifford, Strong, Miller and Field, of the United States Supreme Court, announcing that they had met, in pursuance of the Electoral Count bill, and selected Associate Justice J. P. Bradley as the fifth Associate Justice upon the commission....A concurrent resolution was adopted providing that no person shall be admitted to the south wing of the Capitol during the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, except upon tickets issued by the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, such tickets to be distributed equally to each Senator and Representative by the Sergeants-at-Arms of the Senate and House of Representatives. [The House concurred in the resolution.]...Mr. Thurman addressed the Senate in support of the bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts.

House.—The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the four Associate Justices designated members of the judicial branch of the commission, announcing that they had selected Justice Joseph P. Bradley as the fifth member....The Senate's resolution for the appointment of fifteen men to serve as special police at the Capitol during the counting of the electoral vote was agreed to....Mr. Garfield introduced a bill providing for more thorough investigation of accidents on railroads....The report of the majority of the Judiciary Committee, declaring that Colorado is a State, was adopted, and Mr. Belford was sworn in as a Representative....The House Florida Investigation Committee submitted their report. They say that the face of the returns of the recent election in that State showed a clear majority for Tilden and Hendricks. Mr. Knott offered a resolution discharging C. W. Barnes from custody, he having delivered to the select committee, of which William R. Morrison is Chairman, all the telegrams in his possession. Adopted....The Speaker laid before the House the resignation of Frank Hereford as Representative from the Third District of West Virginia.

THURSDAY, Feb. 1.—Senate.—Mr. Robertson, (of South Carolina,) presented resolutions adopted by a meeting of citizens of Barnwell county, in that State, denying that there was intimidation on the part of whites toward blacks at the recent election, and asking Congress to recognize the Hampton Government. Referred. Mr. Saulsbury presented a petition from business men of New Orleans in regard to the condition of affairs in Louisiana, and asking for the recognition of Nicholls as the legal Governor of the State. The Chair appointed Sargent and Allison tellers on the part of the Senate to count the votes for President and Vice President of the United States. Subsequently Mr. Sargent declined, and Mr. Ingalls was appointed....A communication was received from Nathan Clifford, President of the Electoral Tribunal, announcing that the commission was organized and ready to proceed to business. Mr. Mitchell, from the sub-committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was assigned the duty of inquiring into the eligibility to office under the constitution of any person alleged to have been ineligible as Presidential elector, submitted a report in regard to the laws in New Jersey, Missouri and Virginia. Mr. Kernan, the minority of the committee, dissented from the majority, and made a verbal report, in which he claimed that both the alleged ineligible electors in Missouri and New Jersey were clearly eligible under the constitution....The Senate proceeded to the hall of the House to take part in the count of the electoral vote.

House.—The Chair appointed as tellers on the part of the House, in counting the electoral votes, Messrs. Cook and Stone....The House, after a brief session, took a recess.

Joint Session.—At exactly 10 o'clock the Senate appeared at the bar of the House, and was formally announced. Following the Sergeant-at-Arms came four special policemen with the boxes containing the electoral returns, one of those brought by the messengers and the other those received by mail. Mr. Ferry took the chair; Speaker Randall sat on the right, and the tellers occupied the Clerk's desk, each having large sheets upon which to record the count. Mr. Ferry opened the packages, passed them to the tellers, and one set of papers was read through from each State, those holding the duplicates by mail overlooking to see if there was correspondence. Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, California, Connecticut and Delaware passed without objection. Then Florida was reached, and Mr. Stone, the teller, proceeded to read the certificate. The reading of the first certificate showed four votes of Florida for Hayes and Wheeler. Then the presiding officer handed to the tellers another certificate received from the same State, which, on being read by Mr. Stone, showed four votes for Tilden and Hendricks. The former certificate was authenticated by the late Gov. Stearns, and the latter by Attorney General Cocke. Then the presiding officer handed down to the tellers still another certificate from Florida, received through a messenger on the 31st of January, and a corresponding one, received by mail on the 30th of January. This third is the authentication of the act of the electors who voted for Tilden and Hendricks, and is made by the present Governor, Drew. Objection to the first certificate for Hayes and Wheeler was signed by Senators Jones of Florida, Cooper, McDonald of Indiana, and by Representatives Field, Tucker, Jenks and Springer. The Clerk of the House read the paper. It asserts that those persons (Pierce, Humphreys, Holden and Young), assuming to act as Presidential electors, were not duly appointed by the State of Florida, or in any manner whatever; that the other four persons had been elected, and had an irrevocable title to office; that the certificate of election of the first four persons was falsely and corruptly procured, and made in pursuance of a conspiracy between them and M. L. Stearns, late Governor; that they were usurpers, and that their acts are illegal, null and void. Further objections being called for, Senator Sargent sent up to the Clerk's desk and had read on behalf of himself and Senators Conover, Sherman and Teller, and Representatives Woodburn, Dunnell, Kasson and McCrary, three several sets of objections to the votes cast by Call, Hinton, Bullock and Yonge, Democratic electors, on the ground that the papers are not authenticated as required by the constitution and laws. Senator Jones, of Florida, made an objection specially to Humphreys, as holding an office of trust and profit under the United States. Mr. Kasson made the additional objection to the third set of certificate, because they were not authenticated by the person who held the office of Governor at the time that the functions of the electors were exercised. There being no further objections, the Florida certificates and papers accompanying them were sent to the Electoral College Commission for judgment and decision, and the Senate retired from the hall.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

[The Court, as organized, consists of the following officials:

JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Justice Clifford, of Maine;
Justice Strong, of Pennsylvania;
Justice Miller, of Iowa;
Justice Field, of California;
Justice Bradley, of New Jersey.

SENATORS.	REPRESENTATIVES.
Edmunds, of Vermont;	Hoar, of Massachusetts;
Morton, of Indiana;	Garfield, of Ohio;
Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey;	Payne, of Ohio;
Bayard, of Delaware;	Hunton, of Virginia;
Thurman, of Ohio.	Abbott, of Massachusetts.

The following are the counsel employed: Republican—William M. Evarts and E. W. Stoughton, of New York; Stanley Matthews and Samuel S. Shellabarger, of Ohio. Democratic—Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois; Matt H. Carpenter, of Wisconsin; Jeremiah S. Black, of Pennsylvania; Ashabel Green, of New York.]

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Jan. 31.—The Tripartite Commission assembled at noon in the Supreme Court room and organized. The special oath of office was administered to Justice Clifford by Mr. Middleton, the Clerk of the Court, and Justice Clifford, who, by the Electoral act, is the presiding officer of the commission, then administered the oath to the other fourteen members. James H. McKenny was then appointed temporary Clerk to the commission. A series of rules for the government of the body, drawn up by Mr. Edmunds, were adopted. It was decided that the sessions of the board should be public; all discussions and consultations between the members of the commission, however, to be held in private. Speeches of counsel were limited to two hours on the main question, and fifteen minutes in interlocutory questions. The President of the commission was invested with authority to regulate all arrangements affecting the attendance of spectators.

THURSDAY, Feb. 1.—The commission met at 3 o'clock p. m. in the room of the Supreme Court, at the Capitol. A communication from the two houses of Congress was received and read, as follows:

HALL OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Feb. 1, 1877.—To the President of the Commission: More than one return or paper purporting to be a return or certificate of the electoral votes of the State of Florida having been received and this day opened in the presence of the two houses of Congress, and objections thereto having been made, said returns, with all accompanying papers and also objections thereto, are herewith submitted to the judgment and decision of the commission, as provided by law.

T. W. FERRY, President of the Senate.

There was considerable discussion in regard to the propriety of printing the objections accompanying the returns from Florida, and the matter was finally postponed for the time being. The presiding Judge (Clifford) called for the names of the counsel who appear in the case on each side, and Mr. Field, for the Democrats, and Evarts, for the Republicans, announced the names of the attorneys for their respective sides. The presiding Judge then announced that counsel not exceeding two in number on each side, would be allowed to participate in the argument. The room was cleared, and the commission went into private consultation, and, after some time spent in deliberation, adjourned until Friday, at 10 o'clock, a. m.

Cleopatra's Needle.

There seems at last a reasonable probability that Cleopatra's Needle, which was given by Mehemet Ali to the British Government, and which has remained so long on the shore at Alexandria, will, before many months are over, be set up in London. An engineer, who has devoted much attention to the subject, says that by carefully swathing the monolith in a kind of sacking, and covering it with wood in a rounded shape, it could be rolled into a barge and then towed to the Thames. Once there, however, the still further and greater difficulty of erecting it has to be encountered. The erection of the obelisk in the Place de la Concorde, at Paris, cost £80,000; and it is the enormous expense involved in dealing with this larger and more interesting monolith which has hitherto deterred the British Government from attempting the enterprise. The engineer, whose plan is now to be tried, maintains, however, that the work can be done, and the obelisk put up safely in the place to be provided for it at the end of Northumberland avenue, at a cost of about £7,000.

Remarkable Surgical Operation.

Last week a remarkable feat of surgery was performed upon Gen. David Barrett, of Whitehall, N. Y., aged 79 years. Ten years ago he was injured by falling upon a pile of boards, and a splinter of wood was extracted from his side. At periods since he has suffered severe pains in his kidney, which was ascribed to overwork. Recently he was taken with more violent pains in the organ named, and an investigation showed the presence of a foreign substance. An incision disclosed the head of a tenpenny nail, and further use of the scalpel showed the surgeon that the nail was imbedded in the old man's kidney, and that mortification had set in. The only chance of saving the patient's life was the excision of the organ, which was successfully done, and, notwithstanding his advanced age, Gen. Barrett has made rapid and sure progress toward recovery.

A LABORER, aged 19, has been tried at Norwich, Eng., for a dangerous assault upon his wife's mother. Penal servitude for seven years.

A DUEL OF LONG AGO.

The May-Cochrane Meeting in Virginia in 1844.

The May-Bennett difficulty and reported duel have revived the recollection of a fatal meeting thirty-two years ago between Julian May, an uncle of the former, and Joseph Cochrane. I have obtained a history of the affair from an eye-witness. There were three brothers living here named Cochrane, remarkably handsome, fine-looking men. The youngest, Joe, who was 19 years of age, upbraided Julian May, aged 22, for ill treating his eldest brother. The language used by young Cochrane produced a challenge, and the parties met in Virginia, near the Crane bridge, on the morning of Feb. 16, 1844. Our informant was present at the request of the eldest Mr. Cochrane, and rode a fine horse of the latter to the meeting. He reached the spot about sunrise. The parties, their seconds, and surgeons were on the ground. The managers seemed to have had no experience in such matters, so this gentleman had the cause of meeting reduced to writing; he then got the challenge suspended in order to open the way for an apology. May's second was a Mr. Pooler, a nephew by marriage of Judge Wayne, late of the Supreme court; Cochrane's was a Mr. Ash. Mr. Pooler, my informant says, would not listen to any proposition, nor does it appear that Mr. Ash was authorised to offer any. The toss was won by Pooler, who of course placed his principal with his back toward the rising sun. My informant noticed a tall "rag-weed" a few yards in front of and in a line with Cochrane, and called to Ash to cut it down. Ash replied that he could not. This gentleman said that he would. Ash replied that Pooler would have a right to shoot him. The seconds consulted, and decided that the principals had taken position with the weed standing, and it must remain, though it did afford May an aid in making a line-shot. My informant then drew his knife and Pooler drew his pistol. He cut it down, without the latter, however, shooting. He then asked Ash if he was going to let Cochrane fight with his hat on. Ash replied he thought it was best, as it shaded his eyes from the sun. The word was given, and Cochrane fell with a bullet in his brain.

Just then the cry of constables was was raised. Julian May mounted a horse and fled, never returning to the country again. Cochrane was borne to a farm-house, where he died in a few hours, and my informant, galloping furiously, carried the sad news to his two brothers, who were anxiously waiting the issue of the meeting. The horse he rode died when he had reached his master's door. The youth of the parties, the tragic end of a handsome, promising young man, the folly of the meeting, and the stupidity of the seconds in permitting it, occasioned much animadversion. The grand jury investigated the case; nothing came of it by way of prosecution, but there came near being a challenge sent from the foreman of the grand jury to one of the panel for words growing out of the discussion of a presentment of all concerned.

Quick Time.

An Erie railway train that stopped at Binghamton on Jan. 13, had a figurehead standing in front under the headlight, and covered up to the ears with snow. The figurehead stepped down, and, walking back to the fourth car, remarked to the conductor, "Didn't I tell you I'd get here ahead of you?" The young man had been put off the cars at Waverly for not paying his fare, and had surreptitiously climbed to his post on the engine. The conductor was beaten by four cars' lengths.

Large Fish Hatchery.

The largest establishment in the world for hatching salmon eggs is that of the United States Government on the MacCloud river, Shasta county, Cal. It is under the superintendence of Livingston Stone, who distributes an average of seven million young salmon each year to the Fish Commissioners of the various States having rivers suitable for their increase.

GIORDANO BRUNO, who was burned in Rome for his pantheism, in 1600, is to have a monument if money enough can be raised. Six hundred dollars have been subscribed.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

Sulphur for Sheep.—Flower of sulphur alone is not generally given to sheep. As an alterative it is given in combination with Epsom salts. Dose, one to two ounces. Flower of sulphur is also sometimes used as an external application for scab in the form of an ointment, with lard.

Nasal Gleet.—The following medicines may be used once or twice daily: Powdered sulphate of copper, 1 dram; powdered gentian root, 2 drams; powdered ginger, 1 dram; mix. The horse should not be exposed to the influence of wet and stormy weather, and the stable should be comfortable.

Worms in Horses.—Take powdered sulphate of iron, 2 drams; arsenic, 12 grains; and powdered cantharides, 5 grains; mix, and give such a dose daily for six days, and the seventh day administer 6 drams of aloes. After a week's intermission this course of treatment may be repeated if necessary.

Rheumatism in Horses.—Rheumatism in animals, as well as in man, is difficult to get rid of. As a general thing, in spite of all treatment, it will return sooner or later again. Work will not make it worse, but the animal should be blanketed and kept comfortable, and not be used in wet and stormy weather.

Producing Sex at Will.—The question of producing sex at will, in animals, seems to be pretty well settled. It appears that science has at last, with analytical research and scrutinizing care, unlocked the door to these mysteries, and laid bare the simple means by which these ends may be accomplished. Prof. Thury, of Geneva, has shown how males and females may be produced in accordance with our wishes. He says: "If you wish to produce females give the male at the first signs of heat; if you wish males, give him at the end of the heat." The truth of this law has been sustained in practice.

Sheep Raising.—The St. Louis Republican, in an article on sheep-keeping, gives the following elementary suggestion to beginners, and in the hope that some good may come of it we reproduce it: 1. If you do not know how to tell the age of sheep, employ some one who does. The age is only to be judged of by the teeth, just as the age of a colt is. A 1-year-old sheep will have lost its two front "milk teeth," and they will be replaced by those of the second or permanent growth. But to make everything certain the new beginner should employ the assistance of a competent judge. 2. Pick the largest and heaviest-bodied ewes. See that they are well wooled on the bellies, legs and heads. 3. Examine their feet carefully for evidences of foot-rot. Squeeze the hoof in the hand with a gradually tightening pressure to see if any soreness exists. 4. Examine the pelt carefully for evidences of scab, rejecting all sheep that have any appearance of scrofula or rash in the skin. 5. In order to insure lambs to come at the right time, the bucks should be kept away from the ewes until December, and then applied with system and care. 6. When lambing-time arrives the ewes should be watched and helped through any trouble likely to occur. For cure of scab in sheep a solution of arsenic is recommended as infallible.

About the House.

To Renew Old Black Alpaca.—Strain black coffee until it is entirely free from grounds. Sponge the goods well, and press on the wrong side. Have a piece of black cambric to press it on. Vinegar or beer are very good but coffee is the best.

To Cure Stiff Neck.—Apply over the place affected a piece of black oilcloth with the right side to the skin, then tie up the neck with a thick handkerchief. In a short time the part will grow moist, and, by leaving it thus twelve hours, the pain will be removed.

Virtues of Pepper.—A tablespoonful of black pepper will prevent gray or buff linen from spotting if stirred into the first water in which they are washed. It will also prevent the colors from running, when washing black or colored cambrics or muslins; and the water is not injured by it, but is just as soft as before the pepper was put in.

Smearkase Pie.—A German lady gives a receipt for making this pie: For one pie, one pint of cottage cheese; sugar to sweeten; a little cinnamon; two eggs; one-half cup cream, sweet or sour; one tablespoon of flour; the rind of lemon, if desired; mix all together; pie crust of raised dough, without covering the pie.

Scarlet Fever.—An eminent physician of Boston robs scarlet fever of many of its terrors, by prescribing for the patient warm lemonade, with a little mucilage, as often as desired, and the application of warmth to the stomach. He directs that a sheet should be wrung out of hot water and laid on the stomach, renewing it as often as it cools. Nothing but lemonade is to be given.

To Test Kerosene Oil.—Take a shallow basin that will hold half a pint, and into it pour the oil to be tested deep enough to cover the bulb of a thermometer; set the whole into a pan of water, with the thermometer fastened so as to indicate the temperature of the oil; place the pan in the stove. When the thermometer indicates 110 degrees move a lighted match over the oil. If the oil is unsafe a gas will be generated that will inflame at that degree. The temperature of the oil may be raised to the degree when the gas is generated, and that will be the degree of fire test. Oil should stand a test of at least 110 degrees, and it is far better if it will stand a test of from 125 to 140 degrees.

A Smart Wife.

Concord, N. H., boasts of a clergyman's wife who is exceedingly smart, as attested by her record for the year, as follows: Gentlemen entertained, 53; guests at tea, 69; at breakfast, 38; at dinner, 47; lodged, 39; number of calls made, 484; received, 463; letters received, 494; written, 610, covering 1,287 pages. She has also read 90 books and written 116 newspaper articles. This is in addition to doing her own sewing, attending to her marketing and parish matters, keeping only one servant.

FACTS ABOUT SILVER.

Mining Statistics of Other Countries—The United States Ahead.

According to Humboldt, the value of the silver produced in Mexico and Peru from 1492 to 1803 was $4,152,650,000; that of the product of Europe during the same period being about $200,000,000. Total, $4,352,650,000.

Another authority gives $1,244,380,794 as the value of the production of Mexico and South America from 1803 to 1848, and $325,000,000 as that of Europe; a total for both continents of $1,569,380,794.

For the period between 1848 and 1868, Prof. Blake estimates the production of silver as follows: Mexico, $380,000,000; South America, $200,000,000; Europe, $160,380,000; United States, $73,000,000; Australia, $20,000,000. Total product $813,400,000.

Hitherto Mexico has held the first place as the great producer of silver; but henceforward she must be content with the second, the United States, in consequence of the discovery and successful working of the rich Nevada mines, having reached the head of the list.

From 1868 to 1875 the value of the product of the various countries was: United States, $168,000,000; Mexico, $140,000,000; South America, $56,000,000; and the rest of the world, excluding of course, Japan, China and India, $63,000,000, a total of $422,000,000.

Here is a brief synoptical view of the value of the products of the silver mines of the world from the period of the discovery of America to the present time:

	Value.
1492-1803	$4,352,650,000
1803-1848	1,569,380,794
1848-1868	813,400,000
1868-1875	422,000,000
Grand total since discovery of America	$7,157,430,794

The principal object of the report of Wells, Fargo & Co. is to demonstrate the vast importance of the mining interests of the trans-Missourian region. To impress this the more deeply, they furnish a tabular statement of the value of the metallic produce of the States and Territories on the Pacific seaboard for the six years ending with 1876:

	Value of Silver.
1871	$20,366,000
1872	20,527,650
1873	28,252,100
1874	30,486,000
1875	34,043,910
1876	41,505,679

Thus, in the short space of six years, the value of the silver produced in the region west of the Missouri reached the enormous sum of $175,214,182, or nearly fifteen millions more than Europe produced in the twenty years between 1848 and 1868.

The relative values of silver and gold at the English mint from 1844 to 1863, according to Prof. Henry C. Baird of Philadelphia, were as follows:

Year.	Gold.	Silver.
1844	1	12.479
1509	1	11.400
1600	1	11.100
1717	1	15.200
1816	1	15.508
1863	1	15.066

And the disparity tends to increase.

The Panic One Man Caused in a Colored Church.

Mr. Dolde, the giant powder man, has the reputation of being a practical joker, but his last performance may be regarded as going to extremes too great to place it within the pale, even, of allowable waggery. Mr. Dolde is interested in a powder manufactory at Delassus, in St. Francois county, and on last Sunday, while in that place, a bet was made that Dolde dare not enter a church near Farmington, occupied by a colored congregation, dressed in his Boyton suit, used in swimming, of which he is the owner.

Dolde accepted the challenge. He put on his Boyton suit, inflated it with air as if ready to plunge into the river, and, placing a fuse in his mouth, he entered the church. He walked up the aisle spouting forth fire from his mouth, and at the same time exploding his powder tester. The congregation were struck with consternation and imagined that the devil had come upon them this time sure. The pastor caught the infection, and, after breathing forth a short ejaculatory prayer, he turned around, kicked out the window in the rear of the pulpit with his foot and jumped outside. The members of the congregation tumbled over each other in their efforts to reach the door, and soon the church was evacuated. The result was that the perpetrator of the wicked joke was arrested by the sheriff of St. Francois county and kept in jail over night, when, on the interposition of friends, he was released.—St. Louis Republican.

How a Prisoner Convicted Himself.

The French bar has just lost in M. Chaix-d'Est-Ange one of its greatest masters. His greatest triumph, perhaps, and one of the greatest triumphs ever achieved at any bar, was achieved in the case of a man called Benoit, whom he was prosecuting for parricide. Benoit had all along persisted in declaring he was innocent, and there was nothing but circumstantial evidence against him. M. Chaix-d'Est-Ange resolved to employ one of the most startling and dramatic figures of rhetoric ever used in a court of law. Turning to the prisoner, he placed the scene of the murder in vivid and striking language before him. "There," he cried, "sat your father, quietly reading the newspaper, near the window. He could not see who came into the room. You stole in on tip-toe and crept close behind him. You paused one moment, and then raised the hatchet"——"Yes, yes!" cried Benoit, "that's it; that's how I did it!" What the repeated interrogatories of the examining magistrates had failed to elicit from the murderer was forced from him by the eloquence of the barrister.—Manchester Guardian.

When a New York bank promptly hands over $60,000 on a forged check it is time to wonder whether the last twenty years has improved the smartness of bank cashiers.

THE STATE OF TRADE.

Business Failures During the Last Year, and the Liabilities.

Dun, Barlow & Co.'s Mercantile Agency, of New York, have just published their annual circular of statistics, showing the number of failures that have occurred throughout the United States and the Dominion of Canada during the last year, together with the amount of liabilities. The number reported in business in 1876 in the United States is given at 630,009 and 54,292 in the Dominion of Canada. The number of failures during the year in the United States was 9,092, the amount of liabilities being $191,117,786. The number of failures in Canada was 1,728, the liabilities being $25,517,991.

These figures indicate an increase in failures during 1876 of 1,350 in number as compared with 1875, which, in its turn, showed an increase of nearly 2,008 over those of 1874. The liabilities of 1876, notwithstanding the increase in the number of failures, show a diminution, and the average amount of indebtedness last year in each failure is much lower than for many years previous. The average liabilities in 1876 in the United States was $21,020. Of the 9,092 failures in the United States, 887 were in New York city, the average liabilities being $37,479. The total number of failures in the United States during the four previous years was as follows: In 1875, total failures, 7,740; average liabilities, $25,960; in New York city, 951 failures; average liabilities, $51,769. In 1874, total failures, 5,830; average liabilities, $26,627; in New York city, 645; average liabilities, $50,516. In 1873, total failures, 5,183; average liabilities, $44,085; in New York city, 644 failures; average liabilities, $143,843. In 1872, total failures, 4,069; average liabilities, $29,996; in New York city, 385 failures; average liabilities, $58,724. The circular then says: The marked reduction in the average liabilities of 1876 indicates that the wider the wave of trouble extends the greater the number of small traders it includes. It may be interesting to discover in what section of country the financial pressure has been the most severe, and with that view the following table is presented:

	No. of Failures.	Amount of Liabilities.
	1876.
New England States	1,314	$37,657,062
Middle States	2,909	72,244,681
Western States	3,130	52,870,541
Southern States	1,361	23,063,266
Pacific States	369	5,282,236
Canada	1,728	25,517,991
	1875.
New England States	1,335	$40,015,164
Middle States	2,395	82,523,346
Western States	1,959	33,948,234
Southern States	1,383	38,277,777
Pacific States	377	2,828,610
Canada	1,968	28,843,967
	1874.
New England States	799	$18,845,000
Middle States	2,025	52,061,000
Western States	1,744	33,073,000
Southern States	1,128	30,690,000
Pacific States	....	....
Canada	966	7,696,765
	1873.
New England States	886	$29,550,000
Middle States	1,914	140,946,000
Western States	1,619	36,040,000
Southern States	917	19,686,000
Pacific States	....	....
Canada	944	12,334,192
	1872.
New England States	630	$30,671,000
Middle States	1,699	40,748,000
Western States	1,148	27,991,000
Southern States	807	19,080,000
Pacific States		....
Canada		....

In 1876 the number in business, the percentage of failures and the average liabilities were as follows:

	No. in business.	Percentage of failures.	Average Liabilities.
New England States	77,369	1 in 59	$28,828
Middle States	165,164	1 in 57	24,900
Western States	226,309	1 in 72	16,843
Southern States	87,140	1 in 64	16,980
Pacific States	22,312	1 in 60	14,261
Canada	54,000	1 in 32	14,767

An examination of the above table confirms the impression, which has been very general, that trade in the Western and Southern States has been less disastrous than that of the Eastern and Middle States. It is a significant circumstance that the failures in the Middle States are 1 in every 57 names reported in business, while in the Western States the proportion is 1 in every 72; but the comparison between the East and the South is even more significant, for in New England, with all its wealth and solidity, 1 in every 59 has yielded to the pressure of the times, while in the South, with all its poverty, its political and other disabilities, the percentage of failures is only 1 in every 64. Even in Canada, where there is a gold basis, light taxation, freedom from political complications and all other favoring conditions, the above showing is indicative of much greater pressure than in the United States, the failures in the Dominion being 1 in every 32. In England no very accurate figures are obtainable, and none of course as yet for the past year, but for 1875 a return was made of 1,700 failures among 60,000 firms prominent in trade, indicating 1 failure for every 36 firms reported in business, with an average liability of $87,870. The figures for the United States, showing a failure of 1 in every 63, with an average liability of $21,000, indicate that the pressure of the times has been either not so great in this country as elsewhere, or that it has been borne with less disastrous results.

Fearful Ravages of Hog Cholera in Illinois.

The State Board of Agriculture will present to the Legislature, when it reassembles this week, a petition, urging upon that body the importance of prompt and efficient legislation to secure a thorough scientific investigation into the disease known as hog cholera. The statistics gathered by the board last year showed that the disease is constantly on the increase, and the annual reports to the Auditor show a decrease in the number of hogs. Reports recently received by the board indicate a prevalence of the disease to some extent in eighty-eight counties of the State. It is estimated that the loss to farmers of this State during the past year from hog cholera will amount to nearly $8,000,000.—Springfield (Ill.) Cor. Chicago Journal.

Alligator Leather.

Between 17,000 and 20,000 alligator skins are tanned yearly, which are consumed by boot and shoe manufacturers in every portion of the United States, as well as exported to London and Hamburg. The alligators formerly came almost entirely from Louisiana, and New Orleans was the great center of business. The Florida swamps and morasses are now the harvest fields, and Jacksonville, in that State, the great depot. The alligators often attain a length of eighteen to twenty feet, and frequently live to a very old age. The hides are stripped off, and the belly and sides, the only portions fit for use, are packed in barrels, in strong brine, and shipped to the Northern tanner, who keeps them under treatment for from six to eight months, when they are ready to be cut up. So far, the leather has been mainly used in the manufacture of boots and shoes; but handsome slippers are also made of it.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

Friday, Jan. 26.—Senate.—A petition came from Parke county, asking the State to help the State Board of Agriculture out of debt by the loan of 6 per cent. bonds for $100,000.... The bill passed making school lands subject to taxation after sale and before deed is received.... There was considerable excitement over what seemed to be an effort on the part of the Republican Senators to break a quorum. The Democrats voted to postpone the joint convention for the election of officers until the 21st of February, and the Republicans, fearing that meant mischief by delaying it so late in the session, began filibustering on the vote, and, when a call of the Senate was made, no quorum was present. Upon reassembling in the afternoon Senator Dykeman introduced a resolution reciting that Baxter, Larue, and Johnston, of Parke, had absented themselves to defeat a vote, contrary to the act of 1867, which provides $1,000 penalty for bolting, and calling upon the Grand Jury of this county to examine the facts. Mr. Baxter's name was stricken out, he satisfactorily explaining his absence. The other Senators said they could do the same, but would not while such a resolution was pending. Finally, after a heated debate, the whole matter was laid on the table.

House.—In the House two or three minor bills were introduced, and a number of Senate bills were read the first time.... The Senate joint resolution relating to reducing expenses of the Legislature was passed; also the House bill preventing hogs from running at large without rings in their noses. .... A bill to allow the exemption of $500 of personal property and tools and implements of mechanics from execution was defeated after a very warm discussion. The debate occupied about the entire session.

Saturday, Jan. 27.—Senate.—The Senate was not in session.

House.—A resolution was adopted instructing the Auditor of State to report in full by counties losses to the school fund; also directing investigation of charges made for clothing against Daviess and other counties for the use of the insane, by the Superintendent of the Insane Asylum.... New bills were introduced empowering cities and towns to lay out and grade streets; authorizing County Commissioners to transfer liquor licenses from one place to another; allowing husband and wife to testify against each other.

Monday, Jan. 29.—Senate.—The Senate refused to second a demand for the previous question on the passage of the resolution approving the bill for counting the electoral vote, and it went to the Committee on Federal Relations.... The Educational Committee was ordered to look after the $180,000 reported due the school fund from the State..... A resolution by Dice, electing Sheriffs and Treasurers for four years, and making them ineligible for re-election, was referred.... Bills were introduced establishing Superior Courts in Vanderburg and Allen counties; creating a State Board of Engineers; assessing church property for taxation purposes, and declaring a conveyance to a husband and wife to be tenancies in common.

House.—A great portion of the session in the House was spent in discussing a bill to regulate the hanging of doors in public buildings. It was recommitted, with instructions to exempt churches and school buildings from its provisions.... The State House bill was introduced providing for a commission of four persons with the Governor to issue bonds for a new building not to cost over $3,000,000. .. Bills were introduced empowering Trustees of townships to establish a new school district; authorizing the State Treasurer to close the 3 per cent. fund; repealing the law compelling labor on public highways; regulating the manner to recover overcharges for transportation by railways; exempting $500 from execution; authorizing Trustees to levy not to exceed twenty-five cents on the $100 for school purposes, and compelling railroads to redeem coupons and tickets; abolishing the office of State Librarian, reducing the expenses $3,000 per year, and devolving the duties upon the State School Superintendent.

Tuesday, Jan. 30.—Senate.—The Governor's Message on recommending a new apportionment was submitted and referred.... A resolution was adopted authorizing the Governor to appoint two railroad Commissioners, to confer with similar Commissioners of other States, to agree upon uniform regulations for railroads running through different States.... The whole afternoon was absorbed in discussing some way to compel a uniform rate of interest.

House.—The Governor's apportionment Message was read and referred to the Committee on Elections.... A concurrent resolution passed instructing the joint committee thereon to inquire into the matter of building a new cell house for the prison north.... Bills were offered to abolish the Vanderburg Criminal Court and establish a Superior, and providing for the destruction of the Canada thistle.... Johnson's resolution indorsing the Presidential plan was killed by reference.... George W. Deitz, of New Albany, the old man who hoofed it to the Centennial, petitioned for assistance to enable him to publish a history of Indiana. .... A resolution making the school apportionment upon the basis of the number of pupils admitted into the schools, instead of upon the present yearly enumeration plan, was offered in bill form.... Carlton, of Vigo, offered a bill amending the Apportionment law as recommended by the Governor.... Adams, of Marion, offered a State House bill differing from former bills by providing that the House shall elect two State House Commissioners and the Senate two, with the Governor to act as the fifth. The cost is not to exceed $2,500,000, and to begin the work $50,000 is apportioned for 1877, and $100,000 for 1878. The bill also provides for the levy of a small tax to defray the building expense.

Wednesday, Jan. 31.—Senate.—The trustees and managers of benevolent and reformatory institutions were ordered to report a list of their employes and their compensation.... Bills were passed giving the State's consent to the requisition of certain lands of the United States, to be used for Ohio river improvements; amending the civil code so as to compel a change of venue on affidavit of a defendant that there is undue influence or prejudice against him, and that he has a good cause for action; providing for the continuance of causes in cases where a member of the Legislature, including the Lieutenant Governor, is party to the suit.

House.—Bills were passed legalizing restored county records; amending the act concerning real property and the alienation thereof, so that conveyances to husband and wife shall constitute a tenancy in common, unless otherwise expressed; regulating decedents and apportionments of estates; amending the Fee and Salary bill so as to allow witness fees before Justices of the Peace; amending the Felony act by making thefts under $15 petit larceny; limiting the original jurisdiction of Circuit Courts to $100; providing for the renewal of rail and plank fencing carried away by water; giving Peace Justices exclusive and final jurisdiction in State prosecutions, when the fine cannot exceed $20; making township trustees ineligible to a third term; enabling cities and towns to use surplus school fund in discharging indebtedness contracted in the building of school-houses.

Thursday, Feb. 1.—Senate.—A committee was appointed to inquire into the alleged overcharges for clothing by the Superintendent of the Insane Asylum.... The bill limiting the indebtedness of cities was read a second and third time and passed.... A concurrent resolution was passed pledging the Legislature to vote against any bill for the erection of a new State House that does not state the maximum when completed.... Bills were introduced declaring bonds executed by executors, administrators, or guardians liens on their real estate; authorizing county boards to borrow money to discharge existing obligations; limiting the power of County Commissioners to make appropriations, and for the removal of the Southern prison from Jeffersonville to Bedford, and appointing commissioners to affect such change.

House.—The bill authorizing County Commissioners to construct gravel roads upon the petition of a majority of the adjacent land-owners, authorizing them to issue the bonds of the county for that purpose, and providing for the taxing of the land adjacent to the road for the payment of such bonds, was read a third time and defeated.... Bills were passed authorizing towns to change their boundaries so as to exclude territory not laid out in lots; requiring gravel-road companies to make an annual statement of their financial condition; protecting wild game during their mating season.... Bills were offered to prevent the spread of hog cholera, and to legalize assessments for the construction of gravel roads.... Bills from No. 375 to 379 were read a second time and referred. There was a bitter fight in the House over the free gravel-road bill. After a stubborn contest it was finally voted down.

That is the Sum Asked by Wells for Delivering the Louisiana Returning Board to Tilden—Testimony of the Agent of the Thieves Who Attempted to Negotiate the Trade.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The Select Committee on Privileges of the House had before it to-day two witnesses who gave testimony of a highly important character, affecting the integrity of the Louisiana Returning Board. The following is the report of the most important of the testimony:

John T. Pickett, sworn and examined, said: I am an attorney-at-law, resident of Washington, D. C.

Q. Have you in your possession a letter from Mr. Wells, of the Louisiana Returning Board?

A. I have.

Q. Will you produce it?

A. (Handing the letter to Mr. Field.) It is what purports to be his handwriting. I am not familiar with it.

Field read the letter as follows:

New Orleans, Nov. 20, 1876.—(Name cut out.)—My Dear Sir: You fully understand the situation. Can you not advise me relative thereto? Yours, very truly, J. Madison Wells.

Q. State the circumstances of your receiving this letter, and what was done in relation to it.

Witness. On Thursday preceding the last Sunday of November, the 23d, a gentleman with whom I have been acquainted for more than a quarter of a century came to my office, having just arrived from Louisiana, where I had known him intimately a quarter of a century ago, and gave me the full history of the state of affairs there arising out of the late Presidential election. He said he had been spending a week or ten days in New Orleans. This gentleman delivered to me that letter. He stated that he had been some days in New Orleans. I knew that, for I had notified my Democratic friends down there of the fact of his having gone thither, and that he was an exceedingly dangerous man to our people (meaning the Democratic party), inasmuch as he had been a resident of New Orleans in former years, and had held a high position there socially and otherwise, and they might not have known that he was now a member of the Republican party and an emissary, as I believe, from the Government here touching how the vote of Louisiana should be counted, and stating that from my personal friendship for him of long standing I hoped that if there should be a disturbance there, as had occurred on previous occasions, no harm should befall him. By some means he obtained information of my having written such a letter, and when he came back to Washington he repaired to my office, and stated to me fully the condition of affairs in Louisiana. He said that he believed, and that others believed, that Louisiana was Democratic by from 8,000 to 12,000 majority, but that money would decide how the electoral vote would be thrown; that his sympathies were with the South, and with what was right, and that he had in his possession, which he exhibited to me, a sealed letter purporting to be from Mr. Wells to Senator West. My informant said: "I have not read this letter. It is sealed. I cannot open it, of course, nor would I have you do it if you would, but it informs Senator West that the Democrats have put up a million of money, and that we (meaning the Republicans) would need a million down there to settle this thing to counteract that." He said he did not feel disposed to deliver that letter; that it was not obligatory on him, and that, if he followed the wishes of his heart and dictates of his judgment, he would endeavor to have these gentlemen supplied with what they needed, so as to determine the result, and he asked me whether I had any objection to co-operate with him. I said, "Professionally I cannot, but in view of the magnitude of the interests at stake, I have no hesitation to do all that is in my little power." The result was that after one or two long conversations, extending over a portion of the next day, and after some preliminary reduction of points to writing, I repaired to New York and there had interviews with several gentlemen eminent in the Democratic party, to whom I fully related all those antecedent facts. I had but one letter, that which I have already produced to the committee, and, in order to conceal the name of the party to whom it was addressed, I cut it out; but I have it with me properly identified. I arranged with him certain preliminaries.

Q. Did you see the letter to Senator West?

A. I saw a sealed letter. I did not see its contents, but this gentleman voluntarily stated to me its contents, the chief portion of which was that the Democrats had to pay $1,000,000, and that the Republicans want $1,000,000 to counteract that.

Q. The gentleman with whom you had this conversation is, you say, within this building now?

A. He was here this morning. I came up to the Capitol with him.

By Mr. Lawrence—Who is this gentleman?

A. His full name is Joseph Harris Maddox.

Q. Did he give you any other paper than this letter purporting to be from Wells?

A. Nothing in the shape of a letter or credentials. We made some notes as to the basis on which he proposed I should endeavor to negotiate the affair.

Q. What were you to negotiate?

A. I was to negotiate, if possible, money enough to pay Gov. Wells and his fellow-members of the Returning Board to do what I considered right and proper; that is to say, to determine the State for Tilden. He informed me that they would give it for Hayes unless they were paid to give it for Tilden, under which circumstances I felt perfectly justified in doing all in my power, lest I might regret it ever hereafter, to attain that great end. This gentleman with whom I endeavored to make the negotiation, I am happy to say, informed me that had our positions been reversed, if he had been in my place and I in his, he would have done precisely what I did.

Q. The thing which he proposed to you was that you should make the necessary negotiations to get Wells and the Returning Board to give the State to Tilden? Is that it?

A. He informed me that the State of Louisiana was certainly Democratic by 8,000 to 10,000 votes, but that it would be counted for Hayes by that Returning Board. He knew its complexion. He had been acquainted with Wells twenty-eight years, he said, and with Anderson nearly as long. To get them to do what was right I consented to see these parties, at his instance, and to endeavor to see if the negotiations could be made.

Q. Whom did you see in New York?

A. I endeavored first to see Mr. Hewitt. He was out of town that day (Sunday), but a note was sent in the evening that he had returned, and I did see him. Previously I saw Mr. John Morrissey, with whom I had some slight acquaintance. I stated these facts to him. He said that while he had no particular compunction in paying a man to do what was right he did not feel that he was in that necessity. He said that he would buy these fellows as readily as he would buy pigs, or words to that effect (in which I coincided with him), in the interest of forty millions of people, but he said that we all know that Tilden was elected, and that he had just received, or the public had just received, information from Oregon which made it unnecessary to resort to any such means. That was about the purport of my conversation with Mr. Morrissey.

Q. Did you receive any money from him?

A. Not any.

Q. Did you see Mr. Hewitt?

A. In the evening I saw Mr. Hewitt and went over the whole story to him, to which he listened very patiently and kindly. He said that this was the third proposition of the kind that had been made to him on the part of the Returning Board in Louisiana, but that mine appeared the most plausible and authentic, and that under no circumstances would they entertain any such proposition; that if we bought them now we would have to buy them ever hereafter; that if the country was getting into a civil war we might as well let it come, and be done with it; but that he had no apprehension of any such result, and that the country knew that Gov. Tilden was elected. That was about the purport of our conversation.

Q. Was anything said between you and Maddox as to how much of the money he should have?

A. There was nothing said as to how much he should have, that was his affair. He said that if I could succeed in making the negotiation he should see that I should be very handsomely compensated; that I should have a certain percentage. I said that I would take the money, for I would regard it as "spoiling the Egyptians," and would distribute it among the widows and orphans in the South.

Joseph H. Maddox, special agent in the revenue service, was examined. Several papers were shown the witness, which he recognized as genuine, including the correspondence on h a past.

The following memorandum was read:

"For $1,000,000 the vote of Louisiana can be secured to Tilden and Hendricks; the manipulation must be done by me, and, as far as possible, to protect members of the Returning Board who may favor such a result, it may be necessary to elect two or three members of the board to reach what we want, details to be agreed upon; money to be paid in instalments—say one-fourth when the fifth member is elected, one-fourth when one member resigns and another is elected in his place, and one-fourth when another resigns with another elected in his place, the remaining one-fourth to be paid when certificates are given."

Question by Field. What was the proposition that Gov. Wells wanted you to carry out?

A. I decline to answer.

Mr. Field showed a telegram signed by J. T. Pickett and addressed to John Hancock, meaning Maddox, as follows: "Telegraphed as desired. Damn my interest; think of the interest of 40,000,000 of people."

Q. Is that the answer which came to you?

A. I decline to answer.

Mr. Marsh. Had you an interview with the Secretary of War.

A. I decline to answer.

The witness having been asked whether he would now answer the questions propounded, replied that he would not.

Mr. Sparks. Do you know the consequences of not answering?

A. I do.

Letters and telegrams were shown witness, which he said passed between Pickett and himself, but he refused to explain their meaning.

Mr. Field, to witness. We have got so far on the story that I now ask if you are not willing to tell us the whole truth?

The witness. I am not, and I do not feel really able to go into it if I was willing.

Mr. Marsh suggested that the witness have one hour to consider whether he would answer the question. The witness said it was useless to waste time.

Testimony of J. H. Maddox.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The committee on the powers, privileges and duties of the House in counting the electoral vote to-day recalled Maddox, who had read an explanation of his refusal to respond to questions yesterday. The refusal was because of a disinclination to commit a breach of faith. He asked for delay that Gov. Wells might make a full statement, but as the Governor did not, the witness was now ready to answer, and said that before Gov. Wells wrote the letter to him he had a conversation with the Governor with regard to the political situation and the difficulties with the Returning Board. The Governor proposed that the witness should go to Washington and explain the situation. He concluded he would write a general letter to witness as confidential, and he also wrote another letter to a friend in Washington. When the witness arrived at Wells' office next morning, one letter was finished and he was writing the other. The witness brought away the letter to him, and the other was sealed and addressed to Senator West, but had never been delivered. Gov. Wells said his life was in danger, as he had a very difficult job on hand, and did not see how he could get through with it. Wells stated he would like to serve his party in making a return in favor of Hayes, but would not take the risk unless paid for it. The majority was very heavy—too much for him to handle, and he did not know where to commence to throw out. He said in all probability he would have to throw out the vote of New Orleans on the ground (witness thought he meant) of necessity. Wells asked him to go to Washington, see influential men, and obtain protection for him, and also to see whether he could not get the required money to satisfy him. Wells said he ought to have $1,000,000. Witness showed to the President and Secretary Cameron the two letters addressed to him by Gov. Wells. He told the Secretary that Gov. Wells wanted money, but the Secretary declined to have anything to do with the matter. The money Gov. Wells required was to protect him. The programme was that the vacancy on the Returning Board should be filled, and Gov. Wells should resign in anger on that account. Witness did not know there was any special arrangement between him and Gov. Wells about details, but witness was required to submit a plan which could be acceptable. Witness, having been interrogated relative to a telegram sent Gov. Wells under the assumed name of C. M. Calvert, said it was understood between him and Gov. Wells that if the representatives at Washington failed to bring the money, then witness was to use his own judgment in the negotiation, and to give the returns as they were made in New Orleans, and that he should commence second negotiations. The word "hold" in the telegram to Gov. Wells signified he was to hold the returns in such a situation as to make them available at will. The first negotiation failed. Gov. Wells stated to witness he wanted for himself and Gen. Anderson at least $200,000 apiece, and a smaller sum for the darkies or negroes of the Returning Board. When witness returned to New Orleans he had a conversation with Gov. Wells about the failure of the negotiation. Witness received a dispatch from Col. Pickett, saying the negotiation had failed, when Gov. Wells suggested that witness endeavor to make some arrangement with Democrats. Witness made an effort in that direction, but didn't succeed. The idea of witness was, from what Gov. Wells said, that he would throw out votes to the best advantage, in order to produce a certain result, which would depend on circumstances.

Something for Inventors to Ponder.

A Georgia planter thinks there is a colossal fortune awaiting the inventor of a cotton-picker which shall do for the staple of the South what the reapers do for the wheat crop of the Northwest. It is not necessary, he says, that the cotton picker shall do its work cleanly; if it can but gather two-thirds or three-fourths of the crop, manual labor will take care of the remainder. The customary price for picking cotton by hand is 75 cents per 100 pounds of cotton, the average yield of which, in marketable lint, is thirty-three pounds. The cost of hand-picking, therefore, is 2¼ cents per pound, a very large item, which ought to be reduced by appropriate machinery by more than one-half. A successful inventor, who should exact as his royalty only one-eighth of one cent per pound upon the crop of the United States might fairly figure his annual income at more than $3,000,000, a sum worth striving for by any mechanic who has the gift of invention.

According to recently published statistics the area of land under cultivation in Austria is 69,609,300 acres, of which 25,082,300 are arable, 519,600 vineyards, 943,550 meadow and gardens, 11,008,850 pasture and 28,566,900 woods and forests. The live stock comprises 1,367,023 horses, 42,976 asses and mules, 7,425,212 horned cattle, 5,026,398 sheep, 979,104 goats, and 2,551 473 swine.

Over 3,000 men deserted from the English army last year and about 6,000 from the navy.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 8, 1877.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

MONDAY, February 5th, 1877.

DEAR COURIER—You have doubtless by this time received the news of the infamy of the Louisiana Returning Board, and the manner in which it counted the state for Hayes. The excitement here on its development was intense. I stepped over to the committee room the day that Maddux was examined, who, it had been given out, intended to make a full disclosure of everything he knew concerning the proposition of the returning board to sell out the vote of the state of Louisiana. The witness was called to the chair soon after the committee came to order, and signified his intention to tell all he knew, especially as Governor Wells had not been forthcoming with a statement, as he (Maddux) had expected him to do. His testimony throughout was a clear, concise and creditable statement of all that occurred at the various interviews between him and Wells. Before the examination commenced the republicans wanted the returning board present, and the committee granted their request. A deputy was dispatched to the room in the Capitol in which they are now confined, and in a few moments they came in, Wells looking haggard and troubled and taking a seat by his counsel, who sat near the elbow of Mr. Lawrence, the chief cross-examiner. The nervousness of the counsel, as well as client, was especially noticeable. The great purpose of the cross-examiner was to show up a conspiracy between Col. Pickett and Maddux to make money out of the returning board, and they claim that they are able to produce testimoney that will prove this to be the case. One incident occurred to indicate a purpose on their part to prevent the production of corroborative testimony before the committee. It was stated by Maddux that before leaving new Orleans for Washing, after the first conversation with Wells, in which the proposition to sell out the state was made, he was given two letters by Wells, one under seal for Senator West, and another containing his credentials. The letter to West was never delivered, the witness stating as a reason that he well knew the character of Senator West, and as the letter contained important matter he did not think it wise to deliver the letter to him. Maddux intimated strongly the nature of the contents of the letter, which related to the offer of the returning board and promised to produce it to the committee. The letter had been placed by him in the hands of a third person for safe keeping. Mr. Lawrence demanded that he should give the name of this person, but he stoutly refused to do so. The relevancy of the demand or the bearing of it upon the subject matter under the investigation were questioned by the committee, and they sustained the witness in refusing to answer. The reason given for this action was that the name of the party in possession of the letter becoming known, a legal process could be served upon him by the person to whom the letter was addressed for its delivery, and once in his possession it could be destroyed, and thus the efforts of the committee to subserve the public interests in trying to obtain all the evidence possible in this important investigation would be unavailing. The cross-examiner, prompted by the counsel for Wells, tried for more than an hour to obtain a clue to the whereabouts of the letter, but without success, and the name of its custodian is still a mystery to the defenders of Wells and company. The contents of the letter in question are in substance that an offer to sell out the state to the democrats for a million dollars was being negotiated, and that if the republicans could not do anything in the same direction the state would be lost to them.

I give the substance of the testimony of Maddux, and as you already have that of Littlefield, you can put the two together and draw your own conclusions.

The witness said that the night before Gov. Wells wrote the letter to him he had a conversation with Gov. Wells with regard to the political situation and the difficulties with the returning board. Gov. Wells proposed that the witness should go to Washington and explain the situation. He concluded that he would write a general letter to the witness as confidential, and he also wrote another letter to a friend of his in Washington. When the witness arrived at Gov. Wells' office the next morning one of the letters was finished and he was writing the other. The witness brought away the letter to him open; the other was sealed. The latter was addressed to Senator West, but had never been delivered. Gov. Wells said his life was in danger, as he had a very difficult job on hand, and that he did not see how he could get through with it. Mr. Wells stated that he would like to serve his party in making a return in favor of Hayes, but he would not take the risk unless he was paid for it. Mr. Wells said the majority was very heavy and too much for him to handle, and that he did not know where to commence to throw out. He said the probability was that he would have to throw out the vote of New Orleans on the ground, as witness thought he meant, of necessity; Wells asked him to go to Washington, see influential men and obtain protection for him, and also to see whether he could not get the required money to satisfy him; Mr. Wells said he ought to have $1,000,000; the witness showed to the President and Secretary Cameron the two letters addressed to him by Gov. Wells; he told the Secretary that Gov. Wells wanted money, but the Secretary declined to have anything to do with the matter; the money Gov. Wells required was to protect him; the programme was the vacancy on the returning board should be filled, and that Gov. Wells should resign in anger on that account. The witness did not know there was any special arrangement between him and Gov. Wells about the details, but the witness was required to submit a plan which would be acceptable. The witness having been interrogated relative to the telegram sent by him to C. M. Calvert, said it was understood between him and Gov Wells that, if the representatives at Washington failed to bring the money, then the witness was to use his own judgment in a negotiation to give the returns as they were made in New Orleans; and that he should commence to arrange a second negotiation. The word "hold" in the telegram to Gov. Wells signified that he was to hold the returns in such a situation as to make them available at will. The first negotiation failed, Gov. Wells stating to witness that he wanted for himself and Gen. Anderson at least two hundred thousand dollars apiece, and a smaller sum for the darkies or negroes of the returning board. When the witness returned to New Orleans he had a conversation with Gov. Wells about the failure of the negotiation. The witness received a dispatch from Colonel Pickett saying the negotiation had failed, when Gov. Wells suggested that the witness endeavored to make some arrangement with the democrats. The witness made an effort in that direction, but did not succeed. The idea of witness from what Gov. Wells said was that he would throw out votes to the best advantage, in order to produce certain results, which would depend on circumstances.

As the Electoral Bill provided, the two Houses convened Thursday to commence the count of the electoral vote. This had absorbed public attention for so long a time, and the mode of procedure had been the subject of so much agitation, that there was the greatest possible public curiosity in regard to the event. In anticipation of the deluge extraordinary precautions had been taken. Fifty special policemen, out of 1,500 applications, had been engaged to preserve order in the house wing, and without the proper ticket no one could obtain admission to the wing, after which there were a number of officials who had to be passed before the gallaries could be reached. The crowd was immense. People came who had little or no expectation of getting in, and who formed a large assemblage outside of the building. As early as 9 o'clock the crowd began to pour in, although the two houses did not meet in joint convention until 1 o'clock. A large proportion of the throng were ladies, and much sweet persuasion was wasted upon obdurate doorkeepers by those who were unprovided with tickets and they were numerous. Long before 1 o'clock the gallaries were filled, and presented an unwonted display of bright colors and fair faces. There was a large throng upon the floor of the House also, and the business of the House prior to the joint convention was transacted amid rather more than the usual bustle.

Shortly before 1 o'clock the speaker's gavel sharply rapped the House to order to receive the Senate. A number of seats to the right of the speaker's chair and upon the democratic side of the House were cleared for the use of the senators, and a number of easy chairs had been placed in the half circle fronting the desks for the use of visitors upon the floor of the House. At 1 o'clock the Senate entered proceeded by its officers, the House rising to receive the senators. President Ferry was in the van—a little man, insignificant in person, save for his long, red beard—and he took the speaker's chair, the speaker occupying a seat to his left. The senators came in two by two and took seats in the space allotted to them, as suited their convenience. Last of all, and after the other were all in, Morton came hobbling down the aisle alone. He dropped into a seat alongside the aisle next to Hamilton, of Texas, and close by West, of Louisiana. Conkling, Howe, Wright and Blaine were in a row together. Conkling was, as usual, elegant, while Blaine threw himself about in slouching, careless attitudes. Boutwell and Daws were sandwiched with the carpet-baggers, Spencer, of Alabama, and Clayton, of Arkansas. There was a time during the Johnson impeachment trial, when they used to call Boutwell "a black-haired energy," and make an ado over him. But at present he is in a state of collapse, like a pair of bellows blown out. He is small and insignificant in appearance, and his physignomy indicates perfectly the narrowness of mind which makes him such an intense Bourbon in politics. Daws is a commonplace, mediocre man, who came to the front in a time of drought. Logan, whose political demise has been announced by the Illinois Legislature, occupied a front seat between "Bonanza" Jones, of Nevada and Sargent, of California, who leads with Morton the extreme radical wing of the republican party in the Senate. Senator Edmunds to whose efforts is largely due the passage of the electoral bill, occupied a seat pretty far in the rear, alongside his colleague, Senator Morrill. Just behind Senator John Batterson, of South Carolina, sat David Dudly Field, who has been so unmercifully flaying the members of the Louisiana returning board. His face wears a pleasant smile, as though he liked the job. He has a high forhead, enlarged in appearance by his baldness and white hair moustache and side whiskers. Like most of these keen cross-examiners who can turn a witness inside out, he is very suave in appearance.

There was quite a number of distinguished visitors upon the floor. Off among the republicans, to the left of the main aisle, sat a distinguished looking man, whose aristocratic bearing and luxuriant silver hair at once attracted the attention. That was Mr. Stoughton of New York, the lawyer who has been so prompt an apologist for the outrages committed upon the peace and dignity of Louisiana. Upon one side was the stout and rosy Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, and upon the other Eugene Hale, of Maine, son-in-law of Zach Chandler. Chandler himself occupied an easy chair to the right of the speakers desk and with him was Secretary Don Cameron. Neither had a particular pleased expression. Near them occupying a chair in front of the desks, occupied by the Senate, was the lean and active figure of William M. Evarts, who was bright, cheery and chatty. Old Simon Cameron sat alongside him to his left, while to his right Judge Jerry Black was seated, his large head, with his bushy white eyebrows and weighty frame presenting a marked contrast to Evarts' slight and wiry figure. Justices Miller and Field occupied seats to the left of speaker's desk in front of the republican desks. Among those on the floor of the House were ex-Senator Fenton, of New York, ex-Governor McCormic, of Arizona, General Sherman, Judge Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois, who occupied a member's seat in the rear of hall; Kellogg, looking decidedly as if under a cloud, George Bancroft, the historian; Charles O'Conor, of New York, and Postmaster General Tyner. The front seat of the member's gallery had been reserved for the members of President Grant's family, but Colonel Fred Grant and his wife were the only ones present. Sir Edward Thornton and his daughter occupied seats in the diplomantic gallery, where also Mrs. Secretary Fish appeared.

The scene presented during the counting of the votes was entirely devoid of dramatic interest, and indeed the proceedings were tedious. The certificates from the States were opened in alphabetical order by President Ferry, and as each was opened it was read by the tellers. Morton watched the proceedings closely. His face had the expression of a bulldog whose hold had slipped. The reading of the formal certificates was a very tedious business, and Senator Conkling earned general gratitude by moving to omit the reading of the duplicate returns, sent by mail. No objection to the vote of any state was made until Florida was called. There was a great pile of papers opened by the presiding officer and delivered to the tellers, and the reading thereof would have occupied an hour or more, had not Conkling again interfered with a motion to omit the reading of the largest documents. When President Ferry asked for objections, Mr. David Dudly Field quietly arose and handed in written objections to the republican return from Florida. Then Senator Sargent did the same thing for the democratic return, and finally Mr. Kasson, of Iowa, presented objections to the return made under the recanvass of the vote ordered by the Florida Legislature. The papers in the Florida case then went to the electoral commission, the Senate withdrew, and the House resumed its regular legislative business.

"Kathleen Movourneen," will be put upon the stage by John Picker at Kuhlman's School House, some night next week, Johnny is well up in the dramatic line and with the company assisting him, will give the people of that vicinity an interesting entertainment.

It is stated that when the alarm of fire was give yesterday morning, one of our firemen got to the engine house, when he discovered that he had forgotten to put on his "red shirt" and immediately whirled around and went home after it.

About the meanest specimen of humanity that the Almighty, in his infinite goodness permits to polute the earth with his rascally presence, is the man who will take a newspaper for a year or two and then sneakingly, like any other thief, leave for parts unknown without paying for the same.

We want it distinctly understood that the Courier office will not be the headquarters for loafers. When we have a few apples given us to eat, we would at least like to have one apple or see the rhine of one before they are all eaten up by loafers.

We heard a fellow, who was reading the advertisement of our dramatic company ask a friend at his side, who "Black eyed Susan" was. We would advise him to go to Easley's Hall Saturday night, where he will get a life-sized view of her. He lives at Garrett, and that accounts for his not knowing "Susan."

A. P. Hattle's smoke house was entered one night last week by sneak thieves, and a large amount of smoked meat stolen. It would be well to have a loaded shot gun handy and give the rascals a warm reception if you can find out when they are coming "next-time."

Fremont, Ind, supports a printing office which issues a four column newspaper, called the Fremont News. It acknowledges it is rather small, but says it wishes to begin at the bottom rund of the ladder of fame, and climb up. Better start that way than at the top and climb down.

Harrison Schriber, living four miles east of Auburn, died last Wednesday, and was buried at this place on Friday. Mr. Schriber was a man of about 30 years of age, in the prime of manhood, and was not sick only a month. He was followed to his last resting place by a large concourse of sympathizing friends.

The 14th of February, this year, is devoted to love, religion and politics. It is Ash Wednesday, and St. Valentine's day, on which the blind god makes such havoc with the hearts of the young while it also is the day fixed, upon which the electoral vote is to be counted. Don't forget St. Valentine's day this year.

Just as we expected, the Toledo Blade has run the Ground Hog question into politics, and wants to go behind the returning board, and have a compromise plan agreed upon between the different animals of that kingdom. The Blade don't believe in letting one hog have all the say as regards the weather.

Holloway's Pills—The most powerful existing medicine for the cure of female complaints. Fifty years experience, incontestably prove these remedies unrivalled for the disorders incidental to the softer sex. No family should be without them. They may be taken by young and old, as they will restore health when every other means prove unsuccessful. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Beware of mortgaging your farm to the agents who represent eastern loan companies. The time offered is a procrastinator which will evidently steal your farm.

The above item which appeared in the Courier last week, was taken from an exchange and the proper credit given with a few comments, but in making up our forms all but the above item was left out unknowingly. In the comments we stated that 'we could not see, if a man must have money, why it was not as well to borrow of agents representing eastern firms as to procure the money of home agents. Money is money, no matter where or who we get it of."

FIRE! FIRE!! FIRE!!!

At about three o'clock this morning again the blood-curdling cry of fire was heard on our streets, this time it proved to be Zacher's grocery store. The building was burned to the ground, only a part of the goods being saved. As our forms are on the press we can make but brief mention this week, but will give particulars in our next issue.

We were pained to hear that Capt. Jack Croxton died at Goshen, Ind., on the 25th of last month. Mr. C. will be remembered by the traveling community as the accommodating landlord of the [illegible] House, of the above place, and will be greatly missed by those in a habit of stopping with him. The Captain has been a sufferer for a number of years from wounds received at the Seven Days Fight, while in the army.

We think they said his name was Jack of "Spades," and that after the fire was nearly over, was found sitting on the steps of the engine house waiting for the company, who, by the way, were at the fire, to come and help him draw the trucks to the scene of the conflagration, and when aroused from the slumbers he had fallen into, he shouted, "fire! fire!" at the top of his voice. "Betty and I killed the bear."

We have a few boys in Auburn who attend church in the evening and are perfectly quiet and well behaved during the services, but as soon as church services are over, they take up their line of march for up town, and it seems a delight to them to make the night hideous with their howls, like a pack of half starved wolves fighting over some dead animal. For shame, boys, don't give us cause to call attention to this fact again, or it may be more severe.

Mr. L. Anderson, of the firm of Anderson & Bew, of Angola, and a brother of our fellow townsman, James Anderson, Esq., made up his mind that he could endure single blessedness no longer and accordingly last week took unto himself one of the fairest of Steuben's fair, Miss Kittie Johnson. Although we were not present at the ceremony, yet having been acquainted with the bride for the last six years, we will vouch there were none among the assemblage more handsome than the fair Kittie, and Lem, you have gained a prize of which you may well be proud. That your lives may be as a bright summer's day, is our wishes.

FIRE.

At half past five o'clock yesterday morning, the alarm of fire was sounded on our steets, which proved to be the saw mill on Seventh street owned by T. A. Clark. The fire had gained such headway before it was discovered, that by the time the crowd had gathered the building was completely enveloped and to save anything in the mill was impossible. We have been unable to ascertain how the fire originated or whether there was any insurance or not. This is the second mill that has burned for Mr. Clark, within three years, and this loss will be greatly felt by him.

Sunday School Institute.

Union township will hold a Sunday School Institute, on Saturday, February 17th, 1877, at the M. E. Church, of Waterloo, Ind. The following subjects will be discussed :First, "Teachers Experience, their success and failures," by E. D. Hartman, of Auburn. Second, "Why am I a S. S. teacher, what are my motives and what aim have I," by F. M. Beidler, of Waterloo. Third, "What are the forces within us for doing good, holding fast to the truth and leading a correct life from youth to old age," by Rev. B. Baldwin, of Waterloo. Fourth, "Blackboard and map exercise, by Cosper Altenburg, of Auburn. Institute commences at 9 o'clock a. m. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Death of Geo. A Milnes.

Geo. A. Milnes, Grand Hight Priest, of the Grand Encampment of Odd Fellows of the State of Indiana, died at his home, in Fremont, Steuben county, on Tuesday Jan. 30th aged 63 years, and was buried at Jamestown, on Sunday Feb. 4th under the auspices of the order to which he belonged. A special train was run on the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R. from Fort Wayne to accommodate those wishing to attend the funeral, which was filled with odd fellows and friends from Fort Wayne, Auburn, Waterloo, Summit, Pleasant Lake, and Angola. Upon reaching Fremont, the procession headed by B. F. Foster, Grand Scribe, who conducted the burial and the Angola Silver Cornet Band, marched to the place where the services were to be held. Not one fourth of the people in attendance were able to get into the house, and but about one third of the people were able to find conveyances to take them to the grave. The procession being nearly one mile in length, notwithstanding the large number left behind. It was one of the largest and most imposing funerals ever held in Steuben county. Mr. Milnes has been a resident of Fremont for a number of years and was known throughout the county. By his death he leaves a large family and a host of sympathizing friends.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The receipts of grain have somewhat fallen off for the past week, mainly attributable, we presume, to the "break-up" though prices remain buoyant. The stock trade continues brisk and our shippers are making arrangements for consignments east on Saturday next, The market closed on Wednesday as follows: Wheat, best $1.38 @ $1.28; Oats, 38c; Corn, 50c; Clover seed, $8,00; Potatoes, $1,00; Butter, 16c; Eggs, 25c; Hogs, live weight, 5¼@5½; dressed 6@6½ Hides, green, 6c; Poultry, 5@7c.

The patent-right man is making his [illegible] rounds again, and some of our farmers have been victimized to the tune of one hundred and two hundred dollars each. A short time ago, a man put up at the Imus House, registering from South Bend, Indiana, and claiming to act as traveling agent for the Birdsell Patent Double Cylinder Clover Huller, manufacured at the latter place. It seems that the business of the agent was to hunt up men who were using the Birdsell attachments bought from a Michigan manufacturer twelve years ago. The South Bend firm have issued and injunction upon the former frm, claiming an infringement upon their patent, and having closed in upon their works, are picking up parties throughout the country who are using the Birdsell attachments from the Michigan manufactory. It would be well for our farmer friends to look up this matter before "shelling out" to this agent. It looks like a nice little game.

Mrs. A Rockwell, a daughter of M. J. Stickley, living about two miles south of Corunna, died of consumption on last Thursday.

An indication that our tradesmen are making arrangements for lively trade next seaso. the town has been one run by the irrepressible commercial travelers during the past week.

Dyptheria and scarlet fever prevails to considerable extent in this part of the county. The disease is chiefly confined to children, but we learn of but few fatal cases. Dr. Snyder has been compelled to discharge a number of calls owing to the daily increase of his ride.

Geo. Colwell, a former Corunna business man, hung up his hat with Rev. J. Lipset last Sabbath.

We understand that Messrs Brown & Gringlesparker, of Kendallville, are negotiating for the lease of the Union Hotel.

AUBURN JUNCTION.

Tramps are on the move.

Messrs. Mathews & Link have placed a pin-pool table in their saloon.

Mrs. N. King, of Syracuse, and Mrs. J. Conners, from Albion, are visiting friends and relatives at this place.

From the liesure time our Saloonists are having, business in their line must be very dull.

We saw the smiling face of J. H. Lower, of Hicksville, the other day. He was pounding brass for Osgood, (alias Alphonso,) who took a flying trip to Michigan.

Our friend Jones has left. His coming and going was like a shadow; he left under cover of darkness, and we are expecting to hear of some unpaid bill he has left behind. I guess no one is more glad over his departure than Whittington. You know how 'tis yourself, Hey?

A short time since two ladies, mother and daughter, were waiting in the passenger depot for the eastward bound train when we overheard the following dialogue:

Daughter—"Well, ma, I never did believe in the Darwinian theory before."

Mother—"Darling theory! What's that?"

Daughter—"Not any darling this time if you please, but Darwin, sure. You know Mr. Jones said that the only strong point against the arrangement that the human race are descendents of monkeys, is, that we don't see the change going on now, but eureka, just see that ape write."

Mother—"Why Jennie, that is the fellow who gave us our message, and I heard them call him Alphonso."

Daughter—'Alphonso? That is what Aunt Sally calls her bob-tailed purp; but then, there is nothing in a name; you know what the prophet said, 'he may wear a long frock and sport many beards, yea, though he bear the title of a prince, yet he shall have the form and appendages of a sleary-eyed baboon.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine prescribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe Coughs, Colds settled on the Breast, Consumption, or any disease of the Throat and Lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case, Try it. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

All items intended for publication in the Courier must be handed in by Tuesday noon, as we will have our forms on the press by Wednesday noon. Cnotributors will please bear this in mind.

CONSUMPTION
Positively Cured.

All sufferers from this disease that are anxious to be cured should try Dr. Kissner's celebrated Consumptive Powders. These Powders are the only preparation known that will cure consumption and diseases of the Throat and Lungs—indeed so strong is our faith in them, and also to convince you that they are no humbug, we will forward to every sufferer, by mail, post paid, a free Trial box.

We don't want your money until you are perfectly satisfied of their curative powers. If your life is worth saving, don't delay in giving these Powders a trial, as they will surely cure you.

Price for large box $1, sent to any part of the United States or Canada by mail on receipt of price. Address,

THE TESTIMONY OF THE WHOLE WORLD.
Holloway's Pills.

"I had no appetite; Holloway's Pill gave me a hearty one."

"Your pills are marvelous."

"I send for another box, and keep them in the House."

"Dr. Holloway has cured my headache that was chronic."

'I gave one of your pills to my babe for cholera morbus. The dear little being got well in a day.

"My nausea of a morning is now cured"

"Your box of Holloway's Ointment cured me of noises in the head. I rubbed some of your Ointment behind the ear, and the noise has left.

"Send me two boxes; I want one for a poor family."

"I enclose a dollar, your price is 25 cents, but the medicine to me is worth a dollar."

"Send me five boxes of your pills."

"Let me have three boxes of your pills by return mail, for chills and fever."

I have over 200 such testimonials as these, but want of space compells me to conclude.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDER,

And all eruptions of the skin, this ointment is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Invariably cures the following diseases:

DISORDER OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel or with aches and pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

For Stomachs out of Order, no medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these pills; they remove all acidity occasioned by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasm—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and stomach.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the best known in the world for the following diseases: Ague, Asthma Billious Complaints, Blotches on the Skin, Bowels, Consumption, Debility, Dropsy, Dysentery, Erysipelas, Female Irregularities, Fevers of all kinds, Fits, Gout, Headache, Indigestion, Inflammation, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Lumbago, Piles, Rheumatism, Retention, Stone and Gravel, Tic-Douloureaux, Tumors, Ulcers, Worms of all kinds, Weakness from any cause, &c.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

None are genuine unless the signature of J. Haydock, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills, and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be suspicious.

Sold at the manufacture of Prof. Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable druggists and dealers in medicines throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1. each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

CAWS AND EFFECT.

BY WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

Nine metaphysicians, perched aloft
  On the top of a dry pine-tree,
Have talked all day in a marvelous way
  Of deep philosophy.

No wild Coleridgean ramblers they
  All over the realm of laws—
They stick to their text, however perplexed,
  The doctrine (and practice) of caws.

The biggest crow, on the nearest limb,
  Gave first, with never a pause,
A clear, profound, deliberate, sound
  Discourse of proximate caws.

A theologue in a cassock clad,
  With a choker under his jaws
And a cold in his head, either sung or said
  A treatise of second caws.

A fish-hawk lit on the top-most limb
  [illegible]
[illegible]
  [illegible] efficient caws.

And when, at the close, the congress rose,
  I saw the old crows pause,
And what they said, as they flew o'erhead,
  Had the sound of final caws.

No longer in me, oh Philosophy,
  Thy devotee expect;
In spite of thy laws, here's a chain of caws,
  And not one single effect.
—Harper's Magazine for February.

WHO MADE THE PROPOSAL?

Dr. Gibson, having made an unprofessional visit to Mrs. Kellicott, walked down to the gate with her daughter Matty.

Matty was 20 years old, and the doctor was 30. Her eyes were brown, and his were gray. She "had on" a pink calico dress and a white muslin apron; he wore clean, cool-looking linen clothes and a wide Panama hat.

The gentleman admired the lady's flowers very much, especially the white roses—one of which, by the way, she had tucked under her ear. She inquired with considerable show of interest about the Ruggles children, who had the measles. He told her gravely all about Tommy and Ben, Alice and Kit; and, when he had finished, a silence fell upon them.

Matty was leaning on the gate, looking down the village street. She thought how funny it was for Mr. Scott to paint his new house pea-green with lavender trimmings, and was about to say so to Dr. Gibson, when he stopped her.

He said the very last thing she would have expected to hear. He said:

"Matty, I love you, and want you to marry me!"

The very look in the bright, brown eyes would have told him, without a single spoken word, how thoroughly unlooked-for such a proposal had been. She had never, in all the years she had known Dr. Gibson, thought for a moment of the possibility of his loving her. She was very sorry, she told him, but she didn't love him one bit, at least in that way. But the tears came into her her eyes as she saw the quiet face grow a trifle pale.

"I hardly believed you did care for me," he went on, after a pause. "But I hoped you might yet learn to do it."

"But—but—" said Matty, with embarrassment, "I thought every one knew I was engaged to my cousin Tom."

"Your cousin Tom!" echoed the doctor. It was impossible to mistake the impression which passed over his face. It was not merely personal regret at the fact she announced, but an impartial disapproval of the match.

He made no comment, however, but directly said:

"Matty, I shall never get over this—I mean that I shall always love you, and, if you need a friend or protector, or—or any one, you'll come to me, won't you?"

She promised and held out her hand to him. He shook it warmly, said "God bless you!" and left her hurriedly.

Matty, still leaning on the wooden gate, watched the retiring figure out of sight. She was very quiet all day, and in the evening propounded this absurd question:

"Tom, what would you do if I should jilt you?"

Tom stroked his downy upper lip, and looked pensive.

"Couldn't say," he replied, after some moments of reflection. "You might try and see."

"Perhaps I will," she replied more soberly than the occasion seemed to warrant. Tom stared very hard at her, but immediately forgot the incident.

Nearly a year passed. One day Mrs. Kellicot's "help" rushed frantically into Dr. Gibson's house, and breathlessly announced to that gentleman that "Mr. Tom would be deader'n a door nail long before he got there, if he didn't jump." For two seconds, thinking of him as his rival in Matty's affections, the doctor had half a mind to consign him to the tender mercies of good, stupid old Dr. Wells; but his better nature prevailed, and he started for Mrs. Kellicott's at the very heels of the servant-girl.

When he arrived he found Tom in high fever, and delirious. He pronounced it a severe case of typhoid fever, and privately added a doubt that he would recover. He sent to his own house for changes of clothing, prepared to devote himself to the sick man. Matty too, was unwearied in her work, and, being necessarily much in Tom's room, consequently saw the doctor constantly. He and his patient presented a marked contrast to each other. The latter was captious and peevish to an unheard-of degree, and talked almost incessantly of some unknown being named Kate. On the other hand, Dr. Gibson was so patient and gentle, so strong and helpful, doing so much for Tom, and yet not forgetting one of his accustomed duties, that Matty opened her eyes in admiring astonishment.

One morning, as the doctor prepared a sleeping draught for somebody, and dictated to Matty a prescription for somebody else, she said with real solicitude:

"Dr. Gibson, you will certainly kill yourself if you keep on at this rate; and 'tis my belief that you are overworked, and you ought to take a rest."

"Do I appear to be at death's door?" he inquired, straightening up, and squaring his shoulders, as if proud of his proportions. "No, Matty, he continued solemnly, though with a merry twinkle in the honest eyes, "work, as Mrs. Bowers frequently remarks, is a panacky." Matty understood him and colored crimson.

At last Tom was pronounced out of danger, and now the doctor felt that he must remove himself and his belongings from Mrs. Kellicott's house to his own. Matty, hidden by the honey-suckle-vines over the piazza, watched him go and cried a little.

The morning after, Tom and Matty sat on the piazza; he reading, or pretending to read, while she sewed diligently. Neither uttered a word for more than half an hour.

Presently Matty shook out the muslin cap she was making, and laid it on her work-box, put her little silver thimble aside, and dropped her hands, one over the other, into her lap. Then she looked up.

Tom was staring straight at her. She colored violently, and so, for that matter, did he.

"Tom," she began, "don't be angry. Oh, do forgive me!" She paused, trying to think how she could tell him softly; but she went on bluntly, "I want to end our engagement."

"So do I," rejoined he, with difficulty suppressing a whistle. Then both burst into a hearty laugh.

"You see, Mat," said Tom, when he could speak, "I love some one else."

Matty appeared to be taken quite by surprise at this declaration.

"But I couldn't help it, indeed I couldn't. She is—"

"She is a young lady whose name is Kate, and her eyes are the blackest, and her cheeks the reddest, and she sings 'Under the Stars' with guitar-accompaniment," rattled Matty all in a breath.

It was Tom's turn to stare. "Where did you find all this out?" he asked.

"My dear little bird, etc. I think I'll go and write to my future cousin;" and off she ran, glad to escape the questions which she feared he might propound.

"But you haven't told me—" he called after her.

"And never shall," she returned, whisking into her own room.

In less than an hour she had reconciled her mother to Fate's decree, and written to Miss Kate Spencer, and persuaded Tom to write also, and had done much toward informing the whole village of her altered prospects.

In due time Tom was married, Matty officiating as first bridesmaid.

Matty, after the excitement of Tom's wedding, bethought herself what she should do. There were her summer dresses to be made up, her music scholars to attend to, [illegible] and the flowers; but these occupied neither all her time nor thoughts. There ought to have been Dr. Gibson, too, she could not help thinking; but that gentleman, instead of falling at her feet as soon as he heard she was free, paid her no more attention than before. She waited for him, in growing wonder and worry, an eternity—two weeks—and then took measures to bring him to him to his senses.

She employed only recognized and ladylike means, however. She began by flirting a little with different gentlemen.

There was Will Ellis. This young gentleman had offered himself to our heroine, on an average, four times a year, ever since she was 15. She had invariably refused him, decidedly and emphatically; but they were the best of friends in the world. She now told him in so many words, that she could accept all the attention he would offer her during the next week, taking care to remember that this singular declaration proceeded not from any special regard for him, but was made in pursuance of some occult design on her part. Forthwith the pair embarked upon what seemed to be the stormiest flirtation Skinnersville ever saw. In the long morning they drove or rode together; they dined at Mrs. Killicott's, and immediately after sallied forth on some other excursion. Both were excellent equestrians, and Matty gloried in galloping over hill and dale, on one of Will's handsome horses. (Will, by-the-by, was the son of a rich man.) Then they drank an early tea on the veranda and spent the evening at the piano or in reading. At the hour of 9, Matty always sent Will home, without a particle of ceremony or regret at his departure. In short, what appeared to Skinnersville as a serious courtship was, in reality, a pure business matter, and so understood between the two parties to it.

This state of affairs continued for a week or so, during which time the doctor ignored Matty's existence, except as she was the daughter of his dear friend, Mrs. Killicott. And all the time the girl was raging inwardly at her quandam suitor.

"Why don't he ask me at once again?" she queried, mentally; "I am sure he loves, and any one might see that I love him; but I can't, and I suppose I shall be an old maid."

But the doctor was not to blame. A man of the world would have seen through Matty's stratagem, but he did not; he imagined that she was either trying to drown her disappointment at losing Tom, or had really decided to marry the enamored Will.

The truth occurred to Matty at last. She could hardly believe such stupidity existed in the mind of man; but she determined to try what modest and retiring behavior would effect. So she dismissed Will, and became, to all outward resemblances, a little nun. Still no advance on the doctor's part. He came and went constantly to the house, however. Matty gave up all hope, finally, of ever coming to a better understanding with him, when something happened.

Dr. Gibson "dropped in" one morning, when Mrs. Killicott sat sewing on the pleasant veranda in the cool, refreshing breeze.

"You musn't come here," she called, as he tied his horse to the hitching-post. "My work requires my undivided attention; besides, you'll step on the ruffles. You may go and help Matty, if you like."

That young woman was making pies in the kitchen. She saw the doctor coming round the corner of the house, gave a hurried glance at the bright bottom of a tin pan she was holding, found herself presentable, and greeted him composedly. She was very glad to see him, she said. Wouldn't he come in.

No, he wouldn't come in, the day was so beautiful. He would just stand on the little brick pavement under the window, and lean over the sill.

So there he stood under the grape-vine trellis, with a little golden sunshine falling over his hair and shoulders. Matty observed that he looked thoroughly unloverlike, and concluded that he didn't intend to propose. She also noticed a rip in his coat, and wondered who would mend it for him.

Someway the talk veered round from the weather to woman's rights.

Matty, on this, spoke up.

She didn't at all believe in the second-hand influence which reached the ballot-box through the agency of husbands and brothers. "When I vote," she said, "I want to march to the polls and put in my own vote my own self."

"What a pretty spectacle you'd make, Matty, with that rolling-pin in your hand, and—"

"I'm not at all sure that I want to vote," she interrupted. "But I just would like to make some laws, that's all."

"Well, you might petition the Legislature," suggested the doctor, gravely.

"Oh, they're not legal laws; only social customs and usages. I'll tell you just what I mean." She laid the rolling-pin aside with an emphatic bang, placed her floury arms akimbo, looked very earnest and determined, and quite regardless of the fact that she and Dr. Gibson were in love with each other. "Now, at a party, when a lady sits alone in a stuff chair all the evening, not dancing, simply because she hasn't any partner, and can't ask any one, oh, you know, Dr. Gibson, you know—"

"How it is myself?" interpolated he.

"How it was at Mrs. Campbell's the other night. If I had been Anna Radcliffe, or Dora Collard, I'd have asked some of you men to dance with me."

"Then you think women should have the privilege of asking for whatever they wish?" he retorted, with half a smile.

She answered that she thought just that.

"Well, Matty, I quite agree with you. I not only think they should have this right in such a case you mention, but also in more serious affairs. For instance, women might, with perfect propriety, make proposals of marriage."

Now, such an idea had never entered Matty's foolish little head, and she siezed the sugar-box with great embarrassment. The doctor went on, with much gravity

"I am aware that it would be a very unconventional proceeding, and I am afraid that no woman will ever be wise enough to take the initiative; and yet I am persuaded that in many instances it would be the most natural and beautiful thing she could do."

He was looking unconsciously up at the blue sky shining through the filagree work of vine-leaves above him. It was evident he was thinking in the abstract only, but a faltering little "Dr. Gibson" recalled him to the concrete. And there stood Matty smiling, blushing, dimpling, ready to extinguish herself in her brown gingham apron.

"Dr. Gibson, I like you ever so much!" she faltered, bravely, but breathlessly.

The doctor jumped through an open window, and made his proposal over again.—Portland Sunday Times.

Rapid Transit in London.

London is served by three rapid-transit roads—the North London railway, which traverses the northern suburbs above the houses, and is twelve miles long; the Metropolitan District railway, seven miles long underground; and the Metropolitan railway (the first built), which is thirteen miles underground. There are a few branch lines in addition to these, and the main lines are connected with the principal lines of railway running into London at the several large termini. The Metropolitan cost $3,000,000 a mile, or $39,000,000 in all. The Metropolitan District cost $3,700,000 per mile, or $25,000,000 for the whole road; and the North London the smaller sum of $1,560,000 per mile, or $18,720,000 in all. Thus the three roads, running thirty-two miles, cost $83,620,000. The bulk of the passengers on all these lines are third-class—that is, artisans, laborers, and the poorer classes going to and returning from their work. In the aggregate the percentage of passengers is one-tenth first-class, one-fifth second-class, and seven-tenths third-class. The working expenses of each line vary—the highest, an underground line, being 55 per cent. of the receipts, and the lowest, also an underground, being 39 per cent. This latter is the first railway of the kind built, and pays about 4 per cent. on its capital. The highest pays 4½ per cent., the lowest about 2 per cent.

Not Ready to be Buried.

A few days ago a resident of Buckingham county, named Bejamin Winter, who has an unusual propensity for taking medicines of various kinds for real or imaginary diseases, swallowed a dose of opium, mixed with some other drugs, and when found by his wife was believed to be dead.

Accordingly, the usual preparations were made for the burial, but owing to the weather the supposed corpse was kept unburied longer than is customary. Finally, however, the coffin was followed to the grave by a procession of friends and neighbors; and, in obedience to an expressed wish of some person present, who desired once more to behold the face of the departed, the lid of the coffin was removed.

A wonderfully unexpected scene was the result, for as soon as the cold air touched the body the eyes opened, and the supposed corpse was found to be alive. It is further stated that Mr. Winter actually walked back home!—Lynchburg (Va.) News.

The Traversing Thread.

The one sole thread which traverses all the windings of the labyrinthine imbroglio properly called the Eastern question—which affords a clue to it, renders it intelligible, and gives it a presently interrogative shape—is a Russian thread. Thus, without the ambition of Russia, there would be no Eastern question, any more than there was a Roman question during the decline of the Byzantine Empire, or a Spanish question when the power of the Moors was fading out of Spain.—Levant Herald.

SIOUX AGAINST SIOUX.

Gen. Crook's Plan for Closing the Indian War—What is Likely to Happen.

(Cheyenne Cor. New York Sun.)

Since the return of the last expedition against the Sioux, and principally the hostiles under Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse, the headquarters of the Department of the Platte in the field have temporarily been established at this point. To-night they were somewhat startled by the intelligence that the Indians had run off over twenty-five head of stock, mostly horses, from the ranches of Maxwell and Phillips, on the Chug, and between Cheyenne and Laramie. Neither the Black Hills stage line nor the Government transportation have been molested, but fears are entertained that these marauders will not rest satisfied with mere theft. A few days ago Sergt. Berry and two privates from the garrison of Fort Laramie were attacked by Indians, badly wounded, and their horses killed. Truly, the Sioux do not appear to be so nearly subjugated as has been reported, but, on the contrary, seem spoiling for a fight.

Present appearances indicate that the operations of last summer—God grant without the horror of another Custer massacre!—are to be repeated. Fruitless, or at least indecisive chases, worn-out and starving troops, and exhausted horseflesh—these are the expensive hardships of Indian campaigns. They will not vary for at least two or more decades. As soon as his services as witness before this court martial can be dispensed with, Gen. Crook will proceed via Fort Laramie to Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies to organize another expedition against Crazy Horse. It is said that Maj. Mason, Third Cavalry, will command, and that his force will be composed largely of volunteer Sioux—Ogallallas, Kiocies, Brules, etc. Indeed, Spotted Tail has proposed and asked to go out with his entire individual band. The President, it will be remembered, conferred upon him the title of Grand Sachem of the Sioux Nation, but his are a troublesome people, and unfortunately there are some who fear neither him nor the Great Father. Frank Gruerd, the noted scout of Gen. Crook, will again accompany him. It seems to be the policy of the latter to fight Indian with Indian, or, in other words, to inflame the various bands against each other. This plan he pursued in his campaigns against the Apaches in Arizona, and it was eminently successful.

The Sioux difficulty is likely to be yet settled by those who caused it. The early spring will see an influx of miners into the Black Hills that nothing can stay. Even now they are assembling and outfitting at this and other contiguous points. There will not be sufficient gold to supply the demand, and thousands of unsuccessful men will either return or devote their attention to agriculture and stock. Towns will spring up with better ingredients of stability and success than mere mining settlements possess, and the Sioux will be forced to retire from their hunting grounds. The Northern Pacific railroad may be built; and, whether it be or not, the country immediately north of the Black Hills and about the Big Horn mountains will become great and populous regions because of their intrinsic value.

Vanderbilt's Whist.

The great passion of which he was possessed was card-playing. In former years the games were always played at either the Union or Manhattan Clubs, and consisted only of whist, of which he was very fond. Those who have played many games with him state that he was a very adroit and clever player. He had a most remarkable and wonderful memory of the cards after they had been played. He always received a poor play with a frown, and praised a good one. He once had for a partner William Cooke, a railroad man of Bridgeport. He declared that Mr. Cooke made the best play he had ever seen during his long experience in the game. Hearts was trumps, and the Commodore's long suit was spades, the whole of which he held, with the exception of the king and a card of smaller denomination, which were held by Mr. Cooke, without the Commodore's knowledge. It was the Commodore's lead, the trumps having been exhausted, and he was debating in his mind how to capture or get rid of the king, so as to run out his suit. He at length led the ace, on which his partner played the king, thus giving the Commodore the control of the suit. If the small card had been played, his partner would have had the leading card in the suit, and would have been unable to return the suit afterward. The Commodore often referred to this play, and declared it was the finest he had ever seen. —New York Tribune.

Second-Hand Air.

There are some things, says the New York Tribune, that are almost as good at second-hand as when bought new. Furniture, for instance, that has been carefully kept, is more prized by many people than that which is fresh from the shop. Diamonds do not lose their luster or their value by being handed down through generations of fair women. Fine laces are treasured as among the most precious of heir-looms. Even food served up the second time might be quite as savory and nutritious as when first brought on the table, and a nice garment made over new is not despised; but second-hand air—is it to be for a moment tolerated? What is second-hand air? It is air that has passed through one, two, or more pairs of lungs, to which it has largely given up its most precious element, and from which it has received a load of effete animal matter in the shape of carbonic acid gas, one of the most poisonous of gases. It has also received the exhalations of the body, and has become to a greater or less extent loaded with excrementitious matter, and more fitted to fertilize barren land than to sustain life.

A New England Oath.

"I swanny" does such universal duty as an oath throughout New England that the expression merits some attention as a philological curiosity. No one can sojourn among rural New Englanders for any length of time without being driven to speculate as to the origin of the phrase. Could it have come down through ages of gradual elimination from some highly respectable pagan formula, such as "I will swear by any of the gods," for instance? This seems a not wholly incredible supposition, and lifts the seeming vulgarism at once to the level of a "condensed classic."—Scribner.

Captive of the Sioux for Nine Years.

(From the Pittsburg Chronicle.)

Yesterday afternoon a young girl, aged about 17, arrived at the Union depot, by Chicago express, on her way to relatives at Lockport. Her name is Lizzie Smith, and she has been captive to a tribe of the Sioux who live north of the Black Hills, for nearly nine years. Her father resided in Philadelphia, and was engaged in a dry goods store. She and other members of the family were visiting in Western Iowa, when the Sioux raided the place, capturing her and others, and killing her little brother. She was taken to their hunting grounds, and was, she says, treated well generally, but maltreated at times, because of her inability to learn their language. Another girl, a year or two her senior, was captured with her, and the two, by conversing together, succeeded in retaining their knowledge of the English tongue. Her companion was a Miss Stewart, who was rescued at the same time and sent to her friends at Omaha.

Miss Smith states that a party of five trappers discovered them some weeks since and persuaded them to make an escape. This they consented to do, and the party stealing Indian ponies, left for the white man's country. They were pursued four days by the Sioux, but got off, and in time to reach Rock City, on the Union Pacific. There they were supplied with clothing by their rescuers, Messrs. Welsh, Schwartz, Wolf, Botmeyer and one other whose name Miss Smith cannot recall. The railway company passed her via Chicago, boarding her in transit and treating her with the greatest kindness. The agent of the Pennsylvania railway did similarly here, and the young woman was sent to her uncle at Lockport, on the 4:30 train yesterday afternoon. Miss Smith has been so long with the Indians that she has acquired a few of their peculiarities, and to the reporter seemed to have some of the prominent features of the savages. She is intelligent, considering her disadvantages, and quite prepossessing in appearance, notwithstanding her bronzed complexion.

George Eliot.

Somebody who has been in London recently, intent on learning the prices which authors get for their work, claims to have discovered that George Eliot has not been paid so handsomely as has been generally supposed. He appears to have been very busy gratifying his curiosity. He declares as by authority that, up to a late date, the lady had received for "Scenes of Clerical Life," $5,000; for "Silas Marner," $7,500; for "Adam Bede," $17,500; for "Mill on the Floss," $20,000; for "Romola," $15,000; for "Felix Holt," $22,500; for "The Spanish Gypsy" (poem), $2,200; for "Middlemarch," $40,000; for "Legend of Jubal" (poem), $2,000, and for "Daniel Deronda," $30,000, making in all $162,000. As it is eighteen years since she produced her first original work, she has earned only about $9,000 a year, and those who know her declare that she toils terribly over her MSS., or rather over her, characters, and incidents of her stories before she begins to write. This is certainly no extraordinary compensation for a woman believed to be the most gifted of her sex, and the greatest of living novelists. Hack writers in London often earn more; so that genius does not appear to be such a coiner of gold even when it has been universally recognised. George Eliot, by the by, is said to have been sorely disappointed at the general opinion that "Deronda" is neither so able nor so interesting as "Middlemarch," because she considers it by all odds her masterpiece. She has, we hear, already begun to outline another novel, which she is determined shall exceed anything she has yet done. Although in her 57th year, she does not believe she has reached the summit of her powers, and she expects to prove it by her next performance.—New York Tribune.

Brain-Workers.

There is as much danger of hurting the brain by idleness as by overwork, according to Dr. Farquharson's theory, as he gives it in the Popular Science Monthly. He argues that intellectual power is lessened by the listlessness in which the well-to-do classes generally spend their lives. Under such conditions the brain gradually loses its health, and, although equal to the demands of a routine existence, is unable to withstand the strain of sudden emergency. So, when a load of work is unexpectedly thrown on it in its unprepared state, the worst consequences of what may be called overwork show themselves. Similarly, a man accustomed to sedentary pursuits is liable to be physically injured by taking suddenly to violent exercise. As to the amount of mental work that may safely be done, Dr. Farquharson says "So long as a brain-worker is able to sleep well, to eat well, and to take a fair proportion of out-door exercise, it may safely be said that it is not necessary to impose any special limits on the actual number of hours which he devotes to his labors. But when what is generally known as worry steps in to complicate matters, when cares connected with family arrangements, or with those numerous personal details which we can seldom escape, intervene; or when the daily occupation of life is in itself a fertile source of anxiety, then we find one or other of these three safeguards broken down."

Appalling Darkness.

Referring to the extraordinary storms that prevailed lately in Spain and Portugal, the Manchester Guardian says:

"For nine days a pall of black cloud hung over Madrid, and the darkness by day was like the darkness of night, and the rain poured in torrents night and day long. On the coast and in the interior the storm raged with a violence almost without parallel. From Lisbon accounts of the same tenor have been received."

POOR Jim Nye used to say: "My people liked me better than they do Jones; but Lord! I can't run against a silver mine."

THE PALÆOCRYSTIC SEA.

Oh, Captain Nares was a sailor bold
  Of England's grand Navee,
And he sailed to the land of perpetual cold
  That borders the Arctic Sea.
"Hi'll heasily beat them fellers," he said,
  "That [illegible]
And show the way to the Arctic Pole
  To all that come after me."

So he sailed away to the frozen North,
  And by Smith Sound went he;
Till at last he came to the end of his rope
  In latitude eighty-three.
"Hit's awful cold hup 'ere in the hice,"
  Said this Captain bold, said he—
"But I shouldn't go back since that feller 'Ayes
  Came nearly as far as me.

"Hi'll mark his latitude twenty back
  And say a mistake made he,
And call his blasted Hopen Pole
  My Palæocrystic Sea.
There's more in a name than Shakespeare thought,
  Though a poet grand was he,
And the R. G. S. will a medal [illegible]
  For my Palæocrystic Sea."

So he hauled his sheet and bore away
  And quickly home came he,
With many a story dark and dread
  Of his Palæocrystic Sea.
And now it is left for some Hall or Hayes,
  Whoever he may be,
To sail with some little American ship
  Through the Palæocrystic Sea.

Pith and Point.

IT is the want of motive, says George Eliot, that makes life dull and makes men feel old.

HIS LAST words to her in the morning were: "Wrap up warmly, darling, if you go shopping to-day; the weather is very cold." She said she would, and before she went out she had all her bustles weighed and put on the heaviest one. What will not a woman do for the man she loves!

THE goldsmith of the New York Herald hammers out of the finest metal this beautiful and eminently sound reflection: "Mr. Moody sensibly says that pretty girls should not permit men to kiss them at church fairs for 25 cents. THE FIRST KISS.

For twenty years the elder had the sister
Courted, and yet he'd never kissed her;
Till, growing bold with long delay,
He thus proposed to her one day:
"I think, my dear, we'd better kneel and pray
That Heaven above will judge it not amiss
If we partake of, ere we part—a kiss."
And so with due solemnity the pair
Did for the osculation thus prepare,
And then—a rousing smack disturbed the air.
"'Tis good," said she, as they the nectar drank,
"'Tis good," the elder said, "let's kneel and thank."

"It is time you were in bed, my son."

THE merry jingle of the sleigh-bells, the sparkle of the crystal snow in the lambent light of the moon, and the confiding creature that nestles closely to him beneath the buffalo robes, tenderly clasping his left hand in hers while his right holds the reins, constitute the winter night's poem that is floating through the doting lover's soul and leaving him in doubt whether to let go long enough to get his handkerchief out or draw his coat sleeve across his nose.

Emigration.

The number of passengers landed at New York during 1875 was 75,085. Of these 60,306 were aliens, 2,357 were born in the United States, and 12,376 had previously landed at New York or other port in the United States. Of the whole number of aliens who arrived, 21,035 were from Germany, 13,814 from Ireland, 8,447 from England, 2,249 from Scotland, 5,636 Russia, 2,618 Italy, 3,693 Sweden, 2,114 Norway, 1,218 Denmark, 2,168 France, 1,210 Austria, 2,721 Bohemia, 496 Hungary, 1,292 Switzerland, 588 Holland, 292 Belgium, 451 Wales, 83 Luxemburg, 465 West Indies, 260 Spain, 186 South America, 106 Central America, 154 Canada, 29 Australia, 31 Africa, 192 China, 33 East Indies, 21 Greece, 43 Mexico, 67 Nova Scotia, 32 Portugal, 24 Turkey, and 86 from various other countries.

SOME one says: "Put 2,000 men together on an open prairie, and if they are panic-stricken they will trample one another to death. They will rush like a herd of frightened buffaloes, and you might as well think of reading the ten commandments to stop them as to control their flight."

BRUTAL BUTCHERY.

Statement by the Survivor of the Late Indian Massacre.

Brief mention has been made by telegraph of an Indian butchery which occurred on the road to the Black Hills, about 100 miles from Fort Laramie. A recent arrival from the Black Hills has kindly furnished the following details of the affair. They will be read with some degree of interest by the many in this section of country now preparing to make a trip to the hills. The scene of the massacre was the edge of a fringe of scrubby cottonwood and box elder, which fringe the banks of a shallow and very crooked creek, about forty miles northwest of Red Cloud Agency. It appears that a small party of Black Hillers, with one or two wagons loaded with provisions, were encamped upon the banks of this creek, which goes by the name of Indian creek. About 9 o'clock at night, just as the men were settling down to pass the night, the Indians stole into the camp. They fired their first volley into a wagon in which a lighted lantern was hanging from the wagon bows. A man named B. C. Stewart, of Salt Lake, who was seated beneath the wagon cover, received twenty-nine bullets in his body, and fell dead. Two Colorado men were standing by a camp-fire, and offered a fine target for the Indian bullets, but, strange as it may appear, the shower of bullets all missed them. One of these men, a man named Frederick Bartel, of Boulder county, Col., ran to his wagon, and was shot dead instantly. The other man ran away into the darkness and laid down upon his face. Two other men followed him. One of these men, Walker by name, kept on running, and although undressed and in his bare feet, made his way over the plain through eight miles of prickly pear and reached a camp on Hat creek in a pitiable condition, his feet filled with the sharp needles of the cactus, and his person almost frozen. The men killed were not scalped. One of them was found next morning with an ax sunk into his head and frozen there. The stores in the wagons were plundered, and the corn and flour were scattered over the ground. A lot of poultry in barrels was left untouched. Two guns were broken and left on the ground. If this is the way Spotted Tail's relations are keeping the peace in Wyoming, it would not do to trust them too far after they have been transferred to the proposed settlements southwest of this city.—Kansas City (Mo.) Times.

Interesting Statistics.

Maine owes $5,129,157.

New Orleans has 191,418 inhabitants.

The city debt of St. Louis is $16,367,000.

The valuation of Texas is $200,000,000, and the State owes $25,210,000.

Rhode Island received last year $259,396.55, spent $671,853.29, and owes $2,182,754.10.

Indiana received last year $4,570,948.71, and spent $3,983,777.97. She owes $5,000,000.

Virginia received last year $3,816,237.78, and spent $3,778,501.69. She owes $25,904,343.53.

The American Colonization Society has sent 48 emigrants to Liberia the past year, at a cost of $17,671.

The Irish people of Connecticut number 150,000, but there are only two Irishmen in the State Legislature.

Maryland received last year $2,040,133.62, and spent $2,676,810.66. She owes $10,730,525.46, a reduction of $677,088.86 during the year.

Richmond has a population of 75,000—white, 48,230; colored, 32,170. The valuation of the city is $41,931,118, and the city owes $4,492,195.

Manchester is the wealthiest city in New Hampshire, having property assessed at $19,642,420. The total valuation of the State in 1876 was $1,981,660,353.

Massachusetts savings banks have $243,340,732 on deposit. The valuation of the State is $1,769,433,514, and its debt $33,550,464, which has been reduced during the year $336,000.

The submarine and land telegraph lines now in operation measure a distance of more than 400,000 miles, and employ 1,000,000 miles of wire. At present there are 31,000 telegraph stations, sending in the aggregate 80,000,000 messages per annum.

The pig-iron production in 1876 was 2,050,000 tons, against 2,266,000 in 1875, and 2,868,000 in 1873, the highest ever reached. New England only produced 18,000 tons, or one-half the product of the previous year, and New York fell off one-third. Pennsylvania, Ohio, and some of the Southern States increased their yield, and Pennsylvania has a larger stock on hand now than a year ago. The total stocks in the country are 100,000 tons less. Pennsylvania produced 989,000, or nearly one-half, and Ohio ranks next with 383,000 tons.

Was Farragut Lashed to the Rigging?

A writer in Scribner for February, who was an eye-witness of the battle in Mobile Bay, takes the negative of the above question as follows:

When the fleet had crossed the bar and was inside of Sand Island, and had approached to within about one mile and a quarter of Fort Morgan, Admiral Farragut coolly and deliberately ascended the starboard main rigging and halted just beneath the top. Passing his arm up through the "lubber's hole," he seized the foot of the pilot, Martin Freeman by name, who was standing in the maintop, giving orders to the helmsman. The Signal Quartermaster, in obedience to the orders of Capt. Dayton, took up a hammock-lashing to secure the Admiral to the shrouds, so that in case he should be killed his body would not fall overboard or on the deck, but by Freeman's advice the Admiral would not allow it to be passed around him. The Quartermaster returned with his lashing to the deck; and Farragut, the brave, passed the long line of torpedoes and the Confederate forts and fleet unscathed—while still clinging to the foot of his trusty old pilot, Martin Freeman. This is the truth which the historian should receive and record, if he chooses to make note of what was but an incident in that terrible action. Many survivors of that day will vouch for the above account. As for Martin Freeman, he still lives in the immediate vicinity of the bay where the battle was fought—being the principal keeper of Horn Island lighthouse in Mississippi sound. Should any one chance to question this writer's assertion in regard to the above matter, he is respectfully referred to Mr. Freeman, who was probably better acquainted at the time with the movements of Admiral Farragut than any other individual in the fleet—Capt. Percival Drayton, perhaps, excepted—and he is known as the heroic and loyal son of South Carolina, and Fleet-Captain of the West Gulf Squadron. The philosophy of Admiral Farragut's chosen position is easily explained. During the noise of the battle, he naturally desired to be so stationed that when no human voice could be heard aloft, should it be necessary for him to communicate with the pilot, by tightly grasping the foot of that person the signal would be noticed; and, as a fact, Mr. Freeman did respond, and, by bending down, lent his ear to the "lubbers' hole" for such orders as the Admiral wished to give him.

A Paper Menagerie.

The exchanges have restocked their menageries, the band has begun to play, and the printer's devil about the monkey's cage had better keep away. A large petrified rattlesnake, with a perfect set of rattles, has been found by a temperance man near Red Bluff, in the far West. An absent-minded gentleman, who recently emigrated from Fayetteville to Williamton, N. C., has received by express two large and superannuated cats of his own sex, which his considerate neighbors had boxed up and sent to his address. A panther eight feet long has been shot near Gloversville, N. Y. An epicure in Sedalia, Mo., has restricted himself to thirty quail in thirty days. From fifteen to twenty 'coons are killed near Marble Hill, Mo., every day. German scientists have sent an order to a Buffalo agent for fifty specimens of the Monopoma Alleganiensis, or "hell-bender," and the mud banks of Olean county, N. Y., are now being ransacked for these curious little half-alligators. Bears everywhere; also dogs. A lass of 18 was sitting with her lover in the kitchen of her home at Osceola, Mo., one evening, when she noticed that the fire was low. Rising to replenish the fuel her foot struck what she supposed was a piece of rope, and stooping to pick it up she received the venomous fangs of a large rattlesnake in her thumb. The girl simply turned the light up, asked the young man to kill the reptile, and seizing a large case-knife severed the thumb from the hand, thus preventing the poison from getting into her system. The snake measured four feet and two inches in length. All of which is a remarkable instance of presence of mind and of—snake. The circuit of the exchange menagerie is complete—beginning and ending with snakes.

Startling Revelations.

"Some startling revelations," says a recent writer, "have been made in reference to what is known as vulcanized india-rubber. This substance is ordinarily composed of india-rubber mixed with from 10 to 20 per centum of sulphur at a temperature of about 300 degrees Fahrenheit. It is customary, however, to add a certain proportion of lead or zinc oxide, by which means the vulcanite acquires additional weight and solidity. Now, these oxides act most injuriously on the human system when absorbed, and it was in consequence of the complaints which were everywhere made some time ago that caoutchouc suckers containing zinc have been almost universally discontinued in the manufacture of sucking bottles for infants. A case, however, has recently come to light in Berlin which shows that a similar danger attends the use of any sort of toy made of caoutchouc. A child had received a rubber doll, and, from holding it a great deal to his mouth, was taken ill. The doll, when placed in vinegar, became coated with incrustations which proved to be acetate of zinc. On close examination it was discovered that 60 per centum of the substance of which the doll was composed consisted of zinc oxide! Another doll, which came from Brunswick, and was said to be quite 'harmless,' yielded as much as 57½ per centum of ashes, consisting of zinc oxide, with small traces of impurities, such as lead, iron and lime."

A Thousand to One.

A New York paper publishes an account of a rather remarkable pair of bets made by the eccentric and opulent Earl of Dudley. The bets in question were made on board a steamer in the Thames after an animated discussion over the prospects of Imperialism in France. The Earl offered to bet £1 to £1,000 that the Prince Imperial would never in his (Lord Dudley's) lifetime be recalled to the French throne. Such odds could not be resisted by mortal man, and Gen. Richard Taylor, of Louisiana, who was one of the company, at once took the bet, paid his sovereign and "booked" it. The Prince of Wales followed suit, and there is no saying how many takers might have been had if the Earl had not promptly closed the business.

A New Breed of Domestic Cattle.

It is stated in the Turf, Field and Farm, that the farmers in Nebraska have commenced the domestication of the buffalo. The wild animals, while young, are introduced among herds of the tame stock; of course, only one or two at a time. Half and quarter breeds are found to be very hardy, and in the yield of milk the cows of mixed stock give even more than the average yield of rich milk. The experiment promises well, as the endurance of the wild animals is imparted to the domestic stock. In this way the extermination of the species will take a new form, and when buffaloes become legendary creatures, the progeny of the race will still exist in modified, though probably more useful forms.

A young Baltimore man told his wife that he had embezzled several hundred dollars of his employers' money, and she said that by close economy they could save enough to refund the amount, and thus save his credit. When they had, by hard pinching, accumulated the required sum, the husband added that to the stolen money, and eloped with a girl, as he had intended to do from the first.

PARDON OF A LIFE CONVICT.

The Most Famous Struggle Ever Exerted for Executive Clemency.

A few days before the expiration of his term of office as Chief Magistrate of Indiana, Gov. Hendricks pardoned Leander B. McKinney, a once noted desperado, who was sent to the State Prison South twenty years ago from Bartholomew county for murder. "Never in the history of the Southern Prison," says the Jefferson News, "has there been a convict who had so many and such influential friends to intercede in his behalf. The efforts to obtain the benefit of executive clemency for 'Buck'—so called familiarly—go back to the beginning of the late war. The first move was made by Gen. Rousseau, now deceased. Buck had served with the General in the Mexican war, and when Gen. Rousseau was assigned to his command in Camp Joe Holt he met his old comrade in arms. He knew he was a good man, with one exception, and he commenced a move for McKinney's pardon. Since that time the friends of McKinney have been untiring in their efforts to relieve him from his long and weary confinement. Buck was a general favorite, and has been called upon at the prison by Governors, Senators, Congressmen, and other public men, who deemed it no degradation to take him warmly by the hand. Gov. Willard, previous to his visit to Wisconsin, where he died, had signified his intention of pardoning McKinney, but never had a chance of redeeming his promise. Lieut. Gov. Hammond, who succeeded Willard, made a similar promise, but we presume he yielded to the strong pressure which always came up from Columbus, protesting against the pardon. Gen. Rousseau's move would have succeeded but for a Columbus man accidentally hearing of it at the depot in this city. He hastened to that place, and upon giving the information the fire-bells were rung, calling a public meeting, which sent up strong resolutions denouncing the project to free McKinney. Gov. Morton was considering the pardon in a very reasonable light, but the public indignation put an end to it, and sealed McKinney's fate for a term of years longer. His case was laid before Gov. Baker, but, despite all McKinney's influential friends, the protest of Bartholomew county again defeated it. Ever since Gov. Hendricks' inauguration McKinney's friends have renewed their exertions, but they have had the same obstacles to contend with all along until this fall. They seemed to feel the necessity of success this year, and felt it was now or never. They were fortunate in securing the withdrawal of the opposition of all but two persons, but still Gov. Hendricks hesitated, and on Tuesday week laid away the papers, determined to refuse the pardon. Time ran on until the last day of Hendricks' term, during which McKinney was in the most intense suspense, neither resting by day nor sleeping at night. McKinney abandoned all hope Saturday night. On Monday morning Col. Keigwin went to Gov. Hendricks' office and said to him, 'Governor, I think about the last official act you do ought to be to pardon Buck McKinney.' The Governor looked up, without a twinkle in his eye, and said, 'That can never be.' 'That is mighty hard,' said Col. Keigwin. 'Buck McKinney can never be pardoned out of that Penitentiary.' 'I am mighty sorry,' said the disappointed Colonel. At this Gov. Hendricks thought he had tortured Keigwin sufficiently, and he added: 'It can't be done, because it's already done, and there is the document. I have just signed it.' Thus ended perhaps the most famous struggle ever exerted for executive clemency. It extended through the terms of four different Governors, and included in its adherents a larger list of friends than any convict ever previously had interested in his behalf."

Imports of Steel and Cutlery.

A suggestive commentary on our growing independence of European manufactures is found in the fact that not a single pound of railroad bar steel was imported at New York during the past year, while during 1875 there was entered at the Custom House 13,164,002 pounds, valued at $419,537. Either all this material is now made in this country or there was no use for the article by the railroad companies. The importation of cutlery for 1876 foots up $771,945, against $1,047,159 for 1875. The importation of silk goods during the past year amounted to $21,234,300, against $23,161,312—a falling off of $2,927,012.

Cloud Banners of the Alps.

Among the most exquisite scenes which delight the eye of the European traveler are those wonderful rose-colored cloud-banners, floating from the Alpine cliffs. But it is only in the sunlight that Nature hangs out these beautiful tokens. So it is only in the glow of health—the sunlight of our inner being—that Nature reveals these physical cloud-banners, the "rosy cheek" and "cherry lip," to praise which every poet of the earth has invoked the Muse to aid him. But they are as rare as the cynical Hood conceived Christian charity to be. Woman, eager to retain this charm, resorts to French art and rouge. The effect is similar to that which would be produced by substituting auctioneers' flags for the delicate glowing cloud-banners of the Alps. If woman would aid Nature instead of adopting art, would seek health instead of vainly trying to mask disease, she would not only win the greatest charm of womanhood—health—but she would avert much misery both from herself and others. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has received the highest praise from thousands of pale, [illegible], suffering women. One bottle often affords more relief than months of treatment by caustics and other medicines. It is harmless in any condition of the system, and its use often renders the modest invalid exempt from that most trying of ordeals—a personal consultation with a physician. It is the duty of every woman to become familiar with the causes and symptoms of the many diseases to which her peculiar organization renders her liable, and also to learn the proper means of preventing these maladies. The People's Medical Adviser contains an extensive treatise upon "Woman and her Diseases." The author also advises courses of domestic treatment, which will often render the services of a physician unnecessary. Every woman should read it. A copy of the Adviser can be obtained by addressing the author, Dr. R. V. Pierce, at Buffalo, N. Y. Price $1.50 (postage prepaid). Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES.

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on the increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

TEAS! TEAS!

The reduction of 10 per cent has placed teas so low that now they are as cheap as before the war We have a good tea at 25 cents and the very best Gunpowder or Young Hyson at 60 and 90 cents.

Most persons who have any acquaintance with the literature of chess have heard of the games said to have been played in the middle Ages with living chessmen. Lord Lytton revived this amusement in India. During his visit to Mooltan, last month, his lordship, after receiving and replying to an address from the municipality of the city, engaged, we are told in a novel game of chess with Col. Millett. The board, if such a term may be allowed to be a carpet of red and white calico with checkers a yard square, having been spread in front of the hall, chessmen, men and boys, dressed in opposing red and white uniforms appropriated to the various pieces, were marched in and took their places. Then by word of command each piece moved to the square indicated, and a very lively game ensued, ending in an easy victory for the Viceroy. An Emperor of Morocco who once indulged in similar amusement is said to have added a terrible realism to the game by causing all the pieces taken during its progress to be beheaded.

A Fast Nag.

Uncle Pete, who flourishes in the mountains of Vermont as a horse-dealer, was called upon the other day by an amateur of "equine" who was in search of something fast. The result is told as follows:

'There,' said Uncle Pete, pointing to an animal in the meadow below the house, 'there, sir, is a mare who would trot her mile in two minutes and seventeen seconds were it not for one thing.'

'Indeed!' cried his companion.

'Yes,' continued Uncle Pete, 'she is four years old this spring; is in good condition; looks well; is a first rate mare, and she could go a mile in two-seventeen were it not for one thing.'

'Well, what's that?'

'That mare,' responded the jockey, 'is in every way a good piece of property. She has a heavy mane, a switch tail, trots fair, and yet there is one thing only why she can't go a mile in two-seventeen.'

'What in the old Harry is it then?' cried the amateur, impatiently.

'The distance is to great for the time,' was the old wag's reply.

Nothing High Toned About Him.

'Keep good tobacco here?'

He was a stranger with faded eyes and straw in his hair, and a general smell of sleeping in hay stacks about his clothes. 'Keep good tobacco here?' he said, smilingly, to Milt.

'Best in the city,' replied that slothful skeleton, unblushingly. 'Plug or fine cut?'

'Young man,' retorted the faded traveller after a moment spent in indignant silence. 'Look me in the eye. Do I look like a man as wears spring bottom pants?'

'N-no.'

'Or a shirt as opens down the back?'

'I think not.'

'Or swets the coler out of seven dollar silk stockings? Or is haughty to the poor? Or wears underclothes? Or refuses plain whiskey because he is used to champaigne Or sets up a box of cigars every time there is a new baby at the house?'

'Hardly,' replied the cigarist, pushing back his straight dark hair from his forehead in an embarrassed way.

'Well, then, don't talk about fine cut to me. Gimme five cents worth of your strongest plug and slate it.'

Some inhuman wretch endeavored to perpetrate a wholesale murder recently at Albany, Oregon. One of the gentlemen connected with the Court-house discovered a bag of arsenic fitted to the pump in such a manner that when drawing the water it would percolate the sack and poison the liquid, and be the cause of wholesale slaughter, as the central school is supplied with water from the well. What induced the unknown wretch to commit so great a crime can not be imagined.

HOTEL CARS.

Another Grand Improvement to be made by the "Pioneer" Line

DESCRIPTION OF THE SUPERB CARS NOW BEING CONSTRUCTED.

For some time we have heard hints of a line of hotel cars for the Omaha and California line of the Chicago & North-Western Railway. When asked about their cars, the officers have uniformly evaded a direct reply. Our "reportorial instincts" taught us to investigate for ourselves. We have done so, and are now enabled to state positively that such a line will be started in the early spring, and that the cars are now being built. The fact will no longer be a secret after this day's paper gets before the public.

Four of the most magnificent hotel cars have been built anywhere are now being constructed by the Pullman Palace Car Company expressly for this line. These cars will be sixty-six feet long, ten feet wide, and ten feet high, with twelve sections, one drawing-room (with table room for six persons), and one state room besides the kitchen, china closet, dressing room, etc. The interior will be finished with black and white walnut, mahogany, French ash, and curled maple, the place of the usual head-lining being filled in with forign polished woods; the panels between the windows will be of California laurel and other California woods; the lamp fixtueres, window fastenings, door hardware, etc., will be of triple plated silver. The upholstery of the seats is to be of rich but plain reps, corresponding and harmonizing with the wood finish of the sides and roof of the cars. Between each set of seats is space for a table that will accommodate four persons comfortably, but as a rule are not expected to seat more than two persons. The glass and chinaware for the tables are now being made at Dresden, Germany, from patterns selected from the Royal Dresden exhibit that was at the Centennial Exposition and so greatly admired. Each piece of silver-ware and china-ware will have the monogram of the Chicago & North-Western road marked thereon. The kitchen will be so arranged that no fumes from the cooking viands can reach the occupants of the berths. On each car will be a steward, two cooks, three waiters, and a chambermaid to wait upon lady patrons. It is the intention of the company to furnish the best meals that money can buy, and choice wines and cigars will be attainable by those desiring those luxuries.

These hotel cars will leave chicago on the "California Express," and run through to the Missouri river. On the west-bound train, dinner, supper and breakfast will be served. The east-bound hotel cars will leave Omaha on the "Atlantic Express" each day, in the afternoon. On this train supper, breakfast and dinner will be served. Thus passengers bound in either direction will be enabled to have all their meals en route and yet not leave their palatial traveling parlor.

The only objection that has ever been raised against the use of hotel cars has been connected with oders of the kichen. As we said before, this, in these cars, will be entirely obviated; no person, no mater how particular he or she may be, will have no cause to make any objections on this score. In the dining car you merely get your meals, and as soon as you are through eating you are shoved and started for the coach or sleeper, so as to make room for some other traveler who desires to take your place. While in these hotel cars your berth will be secured though, you will own it absolutely for the length of your trip, and it will be your own for lounging, sitting, sleeping, and eating purposes, as much your own seat in your own house. As it is not generally known, dining cars are never run over the entire length of any route; they are taken on and set off of the train at stated meal times, while the hotel will be made a part of the train and run through in the same way as the regular sleeping car.

On the admirable steel rail that is now being laid on the Chicago & North-Western Railway, these elegant, sixteen-wheeled hotel cars will ride as easy and with as little noise or oscillation as a balloon that floats serenely through the air; and we believe it will be found to be a result that thousands will flock to this "Pioneer Line," who have hitherto gone by some other route.

With these and other improvements the people are very largely interested and we believe will join with us in congratulating the progressive management of this great line in this its most advanced step; and unite with us in saying, the Chicago & North-Western Railway has become the foremost road in all the west.

These hotel cars will placed in service about March the 1st, 1877.

Who are the Blessed.

Blessed is the man who minds his own buisness.

Blessed is the woman who never says to her husband, "I told you so."

Blessed is the man who can sew on his buttons when the baby is crying.

Blessed is the woman who won't marry a widower—providing he's your father.

Blessed is the mother-in-law who never reminds you that you married above your station.

Blessed is the rich relations who never looks down on you—when you are in the gutter.

Blessed is the poor relation who never looks up to you—for money.

Blessed is the old maid that don't hate old people and children.

Blessed is the old bachlor that don't hate cats and pincushions.

Blessed are the married people that don't wish they were single.

Blessed are the single people that are contented to remain so.

Blessed is the husband who never says his mother's pies were better than his wife's are.

Blessed is the wife (formerly a widow) who never calls up the virtues of the "dear departed" for No. 2 to emulate.

Blessed is the man who gives his wife ten cents without asking what she is going to do with it.

Blessed is the woman that don't scold when the stove pipe falls down on the dinner table and—blessed is the man that can fix it up without swearing.

Blessed is the friend who never requires the loan of your umbrella.

Blessed is the neighbor who is so busy about his own affairs that he has no time to pry into yours.

Where are the "blessed?"

Echo answers, "Where?"

How She Loved Him.

The other evening as a patient policeman was pacing his beat on Howard Street a young man passed him and ran up a flight of stone steps and rang the bell. The officer heard the door open, a young lady's voice sing out, and he said to himself:

'Tis love's young dream.'

He was just moving on when another young man approached, looked up at the house, and in a sheepish way asked the officer if he had seen any one go in. He was informed of what had occurred a moment before, and he gasped.

'It was that sneaking chap from Cass Avenue.'

He walked on, and the officer walked; but ten minutes later the young man climbed the steps with a pail of water in his hand and emptied its contents over every stone. He was sitting on the horse-block opposite as the officer came back, meaning to stay there until his plan unfolded or until he froze to death. He didn't freeze. In about ten minutes the door opposite opened, two voices were heard for a moment, and the young man from Cass Avenue came down the steps on his ear, his elbow, his shoulder-blade, his heel, or on most any part of the human make-up. He struck the side-walk, shot across it to the gutter, and came to a stand still with his head in the snow. There was a peal of laughter from the house as the door shut, and the watcher on the horse-block chuckled and remarked:

'That heartless laugh was not uttered by a woman who loves—I'm hunkey!' Five minutes later he crawled up the icy steps, and the good policeman heard him cordially greeted, and mused:

'Well, if there ain't mor'n seventeen different ways of finding out if a girl loves you!'

Two Wife-Beaters.

"Olive Haggarty, you have whipped your wife."

'She is mine.'

'But you have no right to whip her.'

'I'm the only man that can.'

'That's no excuse.'

'I want no excuse. I do as I please.'

'No man can do as he pleases in this country when by doing so he violates a law.'

'She violated me.'

'How so?'

'I told her to clear off the snow, saw the wood, mind the kids, and then have things pleasant when I came home. She didn't do it. I licked her, and that's all there is to it.'

'Two dollars and the costs, and if you ever come here again on a charge like this you will think the last day of the year had come.'

Patrick Eagen was another wife-beater. His honor said that the frequency with which men were induging in such pastimes on the west side led him to think that there was a conspiracy against the frail sex and hoped this would not become universal.

'Where did he hit you, Mrs. Eagen.'

'Below the bosom.'

'You mean below the belt.'

No I don't mean anything of the kind. I don't wear any belt only when I get lean.'

'What did he strike you for?'

'I don't want to tell.'

'You should tell.'

All right, your honor. If you can't guess what it was about, and don't want to do anything with him turn him out. I'll see whether I can't keep him quiet the next time. But don't blame me if he comes back here without ears and nothin' but gums in his. If you can't fix him, I'll try.'

His honor thought it advisable to put a guard about Pat for three months.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables, routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

APPLICATION has been made to Judge Hare, of the Philadelphia Common Pleas Court, for an injunction to restrain the vestry of St. Mark's Episcopal Church from ringing the church bells. The church is in one of the most fashionable neighborhoods in the city, and the wealthy property-holders object to the ringing of the bells, claiming that it is a serious annoyance, and consequently injurious to the value of property.

NEW YORK papers chronicle the death of John O'Mahoney, the well-known Fenian leader.

THE WEST.

THE Minnesota Legislature has voted $500 each to the two citizens of Northfield who killed the two members of the Younger gang, last summer....John Pierson, a prisoner confined in the Bloomington (Ill.) jail, has made a confession that he murdered Gen. Murray McConnell, of Jacksonville, Ill., in February, 1869. He says that on the night previous to the murder he stopped at the Ayers House, Jacksonville, registering as John Wilson. In the morning, being penniless, he went to McConnell's house and asked for money, when McConnell refused it, saying, "Get out, you ——," and other abusive words. In a fit of anger Pierson seized a poker and struck McConnell several times, knocking him down, bleeding. Pierson then fled, stopping the first night with a farmer near Jacksonville, and not resting in the journey until he reached Sedalia, Mo.

ONE span of the Toledo, Wabash and Western railroad bridge, 150 feet in length, crossing the Wabash at Logansport, Ind., was entirely carried away one day last week, by the heavy floating ice. The bridge was being rebuilt of iron. A portion of the iron for the new bridge was also swept away.

BEFORE the Burlington (Iowa) Board of Trade, the other day, a bottle was exhibited containing twenty-five or thirty young grasshoppers. They were hatched in one nest in the neighborhood of Prescott, Adams county, in the western part of the State, and the gentleman who sent them in writes that in every square foot of ground there are between 100 and 200 nests. The recent warm weather has hatched them out by the million, but the cold weather, it is thought, will kill them between this and spring.

WASHINGTON.

THE President has appointed Channing Richards United States Attorney for the Southern District of Ohio....J. H. Maddox, the Treasury Agent, who testified in the Louisiana case, has been removed by the President.

By the suspension of Congressional work at the office of the Public Printer about 600 persons are thrown out of employment. The Public Printer has no money other than unexpended balances of appropriations to the departments and Congressional Library, and for printing proceedings and debates of Congress.

THE SOUTH.

A SHIP drawing nineteen feet of water has passed through Capt. Eads' jetty channel at the mouth of the Mississippi river. There is now a good straight channel through the shoal at the head of South Pass, with a minimum depth of twenty-two feet.

THE following dispatch has been received at the Internal Revenue Office, at Washington, from Revenue Agent Wagner, dated Greensboro, N. C.: "Deputy Marshal Robertson, of South Carolina, just reports two men killed and several wounded by illicit distillers raided on by him without troops. Am hurrying to provide Maj. Stewart with horses, so we can stop this resistance."

POLITICAL.

J. MADISON WELLS, President of the Louisiana Returning Board, appeared before the House prerogative committee on the 5th inst., for the purpose of testifying in his defense regarding the charges of Pickett, Littlefield and Maddox. He denied ever having given Maddox or any one else authority to negotiate for the payment of any money to himself or any other member of the board, and characterized the whole story as false from beginning to end. When questioned regarding the destruction of the returns from certain polls in Vernon parish he became excited, and said, "The man who swore so was an unmitigated liar." He said the ordinary papers did not accompany the returns from Vernon parish, and denied all knowledge of the transfer of votes in the case of that parish. Wells was examined by Mr. David Dudley Field touching certain passages in a letter to Senator West, written in November.

Question by Mr. Field—"Our duties as returning officers have augmented to the magnitude of controlling the destiny of the two great parties—may I not say the nation?" What did you mean by that? Answer—I meant by that that the Presidential election hinged upon the result of the election in Louisiana.

Mr. Field—Have you stated that you did not know what parties had carried the State at the last election until you actually made the returns?

Witness—I have said so. I will explain that the results throughout the States had been known so far as those States were concerned where there was no trouble or difficulty, no murdering of people because they had attempted to vote, but the result in the three Southern States was in doubt.

Mr. Field—Do you mean that the result of the Presidential election hinged on the result in the three Southern States? A.—I mean Louisiana, together with two other Southern States.

Mr. Field—Oh, yes.

Witness (interrupting)—Mr. Chairman, I am not a lawyer, and I don't wish a gentleman to say for me what I did not want to say myself. I am no sharp practitioner, and I want no sharp practice upon me in this committee. I ask to be protected and (excitedly) if the committee does not protect me I will protect myself.

Q.—You also say here, "as well as my duty to the greatest living General, U. S. Grant." What duty had you, as returning officer, to Gen. Grant? A.—Gen. Grant had sent or requested gentlemen to go down there to witness the count, and I felt it my duty to make a fair, legal investigation and count of the entire vote of the State of Louisiana in the presence of those gentlemen, to satisfy them that the board was correct in regard to its actions—if it should not happen to be pleasant to them, let the decision fall as it may.

Q.—I read further from this letter: "And not with my consent shall this oppressed people be governed by his paroled prisoners, aided by their white-livered cowards of the North." What had that to do with your duties as an honest member of the Returning Board? A.—It had a good deal to do with it.

Q.—Explain it. A.—The condition of our country is very different from that here. The people are forced with the bullet, the ballot is swapped for the bullet, and I determined wherever that was done it should not be tolerated where I had a voice in the matter. I said there "his paroled prisoners." By that I meant that the Confederate soldiers, together with their associates, should not control the destiny of the oppressed people by violence and intimidation. That is my answer.

Q.—But what had that to do with your duties as a member of the Returning Board? A.—Well, this was merely writing a letter, and these ideas going in as a matter of course transmitted to paper.

Q.—What had that to do with your making an honest count of the votes? A.—It had nothing to do with an honest count.

Q.—Then why are the two things brought into connection in this way? Why did you speak of your consent to this letter? A.—That I would not approve anything that I conceived to be illegal or improper.

Q.—Had any such thing been proposed? A.—I anticipated it, sir.

Q.—Never mind anticipating. Had any such thing been proposed? A.—By the Hon. Duncan F. Kenner, a very wealthy gentleman in the State of Louisiana.

Q.—What did he propose? A.—He proposed to give me $200,000 to change the vote for Mr. Tilden. He made the proposition in his own office, on Sunday, the 19th of November, between 10 and 11 o'clock in the morning.

Q.—Was that the reason why you said you would not consent to deliver over Louisiana to the paroled prisoners? A.—My reason, sir?

Mr. Field—Can't you answer me?

The witness (emphatically)—No, I won't do it.

Mr. Field—You won't do it?

The witness—I won't do it. I will answer it in my own way. You will have it my own way or you won't have it at all.

Mr. Field—Well, give it your own way.

The witness—Very well. My meaning, as I stated awhile ago, was that if the election was fairly conducted, and there was no bribery, no intimidation, and no frauds, then I had no objection to either party controlling it.

GOV. WELLS was again before the House Committee on the 6th inst., and, in answer to a question by David Dudley Field as to whether, in canvassing the Louisiana returns, he had altered any figures or destroyed any returns, stated that he declined to answer any question touching the action of the board until the House gave him his liberty and relieved him of his disability. He wanted to know "whether he was the peer of any member of the committee, or a mere vassal." A number of questions were put to the witness concerning his action as a member of the Returning Board, to all of which he declined to answer until relieved of the sentence imposed by the House, which holds him in duress. Charles S. Abell, Secretary of the Returning Board, was also examined. He said he dined with the board on Sunday, Dec. 3, at which time Littlefield told him he had destroyed the Vernon parish papers. No one ordered him to destroy them. Witness said he certified to 178 votes for the Republicans from that parish, having full confidence in the clerks; knew nothing about the transposition of votes. Judge Davis, Chief Clerk of the board, gave testimony similar to that of Abell, so far as it affected Littlefield. Duncan F. Kenner, of New Orleans, denies that he offered J. Madison Wells $200,000 to give the vote of Louisiana to Tilden. He says Wells asked for $200,000 to count the vote of the State as actually cast in the ballot-boxes, and has asked to be summoned to Washington.

LOUIS M. KENNER, a member, and T. W. Eaton and York A. Woodward, clerks of the Louisiana Returning Board, testified before the Congressional committee on the 7th inst. Kenner said he had no knowledge of any alterations having been made in the Vernon parish return, or of any papers having been burned or destroyed, nor did he know of any proposition for receiving money for any act in connection with the electoral vote; the Returning Board, he said, did not feel safe—felt intimidated—hence the necessity for troops to protect them. Eaton testified that he did not see Littlefield or any one else make erasures in the original returns; Littlefield never asked him to assist in making any alterations. Woodward, in his testimony, said he worked with Littlefield on the returns the night of Dec. 3, when the alteration is alleged to have been made, but did not see him making any erasures; first heard of the Vernon parish transfer when he came to Washington.

FOREIGN.

TURKEY affects great moderation in her demands upon Servia. She does not ask "material guarantees," such as the garrisoning of Servian fortresses, but will be content if Russia and the other great powers will enter into bonds that the turbulent Servians shall keep the peace. The main difficulty will be about getting signatures to this bail-bond. Russia does not want peace kept, and will not have it if she can prevent; and while fighting continues to be as natural as eating to the Serbs, the other powers will not care to give bond for their good behavior.

AT the recent annual meeting of the Sheffield (Eng.) Chamber of Commerce, the President said the Sheffield manufacturers and workmen had only themselves to blame for the loss of trade with America and the successful American competition with foreign countries. Sheffield workmen had not come up to the make and style required by customers. Mr. Mandella, member of Parliament for Sheffield, said American competition was successful because the Americans excelled in the rapidity of their adoption of labor-saving machinery. Mandella referred to the importation of American beef as a great benefit to England, and a striking instance of what enterprise and invention could do.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch announces that Midhat Pasha has been dismissed from the office of Grand Vizier. Edhem Pasha, Turkish Plenipotentiary to the conference, and noted for his violent opposition to the proposals of the European powers, has been appointed Grand Vizier.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch says the dismissal of Midhat Pasha is attributed to his schemes of constitutional reform, which are regarded by the Sultan as encroaching on his imperial prerogative; also to the discovery of a conspiracy to dethrone the Sultan and replace him by ex-Sultan Murad....The ravages of small-pox are again increasing in London....There is much suffering among the silk workers of Lyons, France, 50,000 operatives having been thrown out of employment by the stoppage of the factories.

THE peace proposition submitted by the Porte to Servia embodies liberal conditions which the latter Government can easily accept, and the successful conclusion of the negotiations is regarded as extremely probable. Waiving its former claim for substantial guarantees, the Porte requires of Servia the right of diplomatic representation at Belgrade; the protection of Jews and Christians equally with native Servians; the prohibition of armed organizations and of secret societies; Turkish territory to be guarded from Servian violation; forts on the Servian frontier to be kept in good repair, and the Turkish flag to float above them along with the Servian emblem.

PETER P. WINTERMUTE, who shot and killed Gen. McCook at Yankton, Dakota, two years ago, died last week of consumption at his father's home, in Chemung county, N. Y.

JOHN F. CHAMBERLAIN, the sporting man, whose gambling-house is one of the most frequented places in Long Branch, has gone into bankruptcy. His liabilities are $215,000.

A NEW YORK dispatch says hope is well nigh abandoned of the safety of the steamship Colombo, now forty-six days overdue at this port from Hull, Eng.; of the George Cromwell and George Washington, from Halifax for St. John's, N. The Iron Product.

The pig-iron production in 1876 was 2,050,000 tons, against 2,266,000 in 1875 and 2,868,000 in 1873, the highest ever reached. New England only produced 18,000 tons, or one-half the product of the previous year, and New York fell off one-third. Pennsylvania, Ohio and some of the Southern States increased their yield, and Pennsylvania has a larger stock on hand now than a year ago. The total stocks in the country are 100,000 tons less. Pennsylvania produced 989,000, or nearly one-half, and Ohio ranks next with 383,000 tons.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, Feb. 2.—Senate.—A bill was passed relating to public accounts. It debars all claims against the Government, unless presented within six years from the time the same accrued....Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill to enable Indians to become citizens of the United States....Several bills of minor importance were passed.

House.—The House devoted a considerable portion of the session to the Legislative Appropriation bill. An amendment reducing the salaries of members from $5,000 to $4,500 was defeated....Mr. Wood introduced a bill repealing all taxes on bank capital.

SATURDAY, Feb. 3.—Senate.—The credentials of Messrs. Davis, from West Virginia, and Saunders, from Nebraska, were presented and filed....The joint resolutions of the Minnesota Legislature, in favor of a law giving a bounty for the destruction of grasshoppers and their eggs, was referred....A resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill making an appropriation for the support of the Government printing office was defeated....Mr. Hamlin reported a bill authorizing the Postmaster General to pay the rent of premises occupied by Postmasters of the third class; he also submitted an amendment to the Postoffice Appropriation bill appropriating $100,000 for steamship mail service between San Francisco, Japan and China for one year, and authorizing a contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for transporting a monthly mail between the ports designated; he also submitted an amendment appropriating $250,000 from the revenues of the postoffice to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines for railway postoffice service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

House.—The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President on the financial question, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means....The day was devoted, in committee of the whole, to the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill. The action of the committee in cutting down the salaries of the President and Congressmen to $25,000 and $4,500, respectively, was non-concurred in, and after restoring the old figures—$50,000 and $5,000—the House passed the bill.

MONDAY, Feb. 5.—Senate.—Mr. Howe submitted a resolution instructing the President of the Senate to issue his warrant to arrest, and bring to the bar of the Senate the body of J. F. Littlefield, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, in refusing to obey a summons to appear as a witness before the Senate Committee on Elections. Agreed to....Several bills of a private nature were passed.

House.—The session was exceedingly brief, and little or no business was transacted.

TUESDAY, Feb. 6.—Senate.—Mr. Cameron reported a bill from the Committee on Foreign Relations to promote telegraphic communication between this country and Europe....The bill for the relief of settlers upon public lands under the Preemption laws was passed....Mr. Windom, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported adversely on the House bill to pay Capt. Eads $500,000 on his jetty contract....The Senate refused to pass the bill abolishing the Washington Board of Police Commissioners over the President's veto. The vote stood 33 to 21—not two-thirds.

House.—The House devoted the most of the day, in committee of the whole, to the consideration of the Deficiency Appropriation bill....A resolution was adopted ordering the printing of the testimony taken before the House committee on Louisiana affairs.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 7.—Senate.—The Senate insisted upon its amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill, and a committee of conference was ordered....Mr. Ingalls reported with an amendment the Senate bill to enable Indians to become citizens....Messrs. Hamlin, Dorsey and Davis were appointed the new conference committee on the part of the Senate on the bill involving the restoration of the fast mail trains and the franking privilege.... The Senate discussed, without action, the bills to pay Capt. Eads $500,000 for his jetties, and to amend the Pacific Railroad acts so as to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the indebtedness due the Government by the Union Pacific....The Senate refused, by a vote of 20 yeas to 38 nays, to concur in the House amendment to the Deficiency bill ordering a reduction of the price of composition in the Government Printing Office.

House.—The House considered the Deficiency Appropriation bill. An amendment was adopted prohibiting the Congressional Printer from paying more for composition than the average paid in New York, Baltimore and Philadelphia. Mr. Blount, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Naval Appropriation bill. The bill appropriates $12,494,753.

THURSDAY, Feb. 8.—Senate.—The credentials of Senator-elect Garland, of Arkansas, were filed....The bill to pay Capt. Eads for his Mississippi jetties was indefinitely postponed....The Indian Appropriation bill was discussed, amended and passed.

House.—Mr. Hale read a letter addressed to him by the members of the Louisiana Returning Board, stating that they were confined in a dark, damp dungeon of the cellar of the Capitol, and offered a resolution directing that they be removed to better quarters, where their health may not be endangered. After a lengthy discussion, the resolution was referred....The Deficiency Appropriation bill was under discussion when the House adjourned.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

FRIDAY, Feb. 2.—The Florida case was opened before the commission by four hours of argument from the objectors to the conflicting sets of returns. The Democrats had the floor first, Mr. Field speaking an hour and a quarter, and Mr. Tucker filling up the rest of the two hours allowed. They argued that there was gross and inexcusable fraud in the counting of the Florida returns, particularly in Baker county, and that the commission should examine into the facts. They claimed that the vote of Florida was legitimately cast for Tilden and Hendricks, and that it was the right and duty of the commission to go behind the Governor's certificates and so decide. Messrs. Kasson and McCrary followed on behalf of the Republicans, who argued against the power of the commission to constitute itself a national returning board, go behind the returns, and overturn the electoral vote of a State, when cast in accordance with the constitution and laws of that State. At the close of the arguments Justice Clifford inquired whether the counsel proposed to offer evidence before proceeding to the final argument of the case. It was replied on behalf of the Democrats that they expected to offer evidence. Mr. Evarts, for the Republicans, said they had none to offer unless it shall be decided that evidence shall be admitted. Adjourned.

SATURDAY, Feb. 3.—The day was devoted to hearing arguments of counsel upon the power of the court to go behind the returns from Florida, the Tilden lawyers taking the affirmative, of course. Mr. Merrick opened the argument, maintaining that the commission had the power to go behind the returns and take evidence as to frauds in the election. He was followed by Judge Matthews, of counsel for Hayes. He said that the election of President is not a popular election, according to the constitution, and that it is a mistake to suppose that electoral bodies are delegates representing the State, or the people of the State, as agents to accomplish their will. When the electors completed their work by casting their votes, then the transaction passed beyond the limits of State control, and it became a Federal act, one of those things which passed to the jurisdiction of Federal power. The body of electors which has an apparent right and title, and which is in exercise and possession of the functions and franchise of an office and actually exercise the powers of the office, is, for the purposes of this tribunal, the lawful body to cast the vote, and their vote must be counted. Judge Black followed in behalf of the Democrats. He said there had been much talk there about going behind the action of a State. He believed firmly in the sovereign power of a State to appoint any person an elector, provided it was done in the manner prescribed by her Legislature, and he believed after the appointment was made in that manner no man had the right to go behind it and say it was not an appointment fit to be made. Anybody, whether an officer of the State or an officer of the General Government, who undertook to set aside such an appointment as that would be guilty of usurpation of authority, and his act would be utterly void. Therefore, if the Governor of Florida in this case, after the appointment of these electors was made by the people, undertook to certify that they were not elected, and to put somebody else in their place, that act was utterly void, false, and fraudulent. They were not going behind the act of the State in the case. They were only going behind the fraudulent act of an officer of the State, whose act had no validity whatever in it. Mr. E. W. Stoughton, of counsel for the Republicans, argued that the court had no power to go behind the returns, after which the commission adjourned.

MONDAY, Feb. 5.—The entire public session of the court was occupied in hearing speeches by Messrs. Evarts and O'Conor, which closed the arguments of counsel upon the question of the power of the commission to go behind the returns. At the conclusion of Mr. O'Conor's address the court went into secret session for the purpose of consultation.

TUESDAY, Feb. 6.—The Commission was in secret session the whole day, debating the question of the admissibility of evidence in the Florida case.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 7.—On motion of Justice Miller, ordered that no evidence will be received or considered by the commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two houses by the President of the Senate with different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the electors. The vote is as follows: Yeas—Bradley, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton, Strong—8. Nays—Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, Thurman—7. On motion of Mr. Abbott, resolved that in the case of Florida this commission will receive evidence relating to the eligibility of Frederick C. Humphreys, or of persons named in certificate No. 1 as elector. Yeas—Abbott, Bayard, Bradley, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, Thurman—8. Nays—Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton, Strong—7. The Secretary of the commission was ordered to inform counsel that it will be prepared to-morrow to hear argument touching the eligibility of Humphreys.

THURSDAY, Feb. 8.—The commission heard testimony upon the question of the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the Florida Republican electors. Humphreys testified that he resigned the office of United States Commissioner on the 5th of October, and produced a letter from Judge Woods, of that date, written at Newark, O., accepting the resignation. Argument upon the case was then opened, Judge Hoadley, of Democratic counsel, leading off. He was followed by Messrs. Shellabarger and Evarts on the other side, Mr. Merrick closing the argument on behalf of the Democrats.

THE RESUMPTION PROBLEM.

The President Thinks it Can be Solved Forthwith—His Message to Congress Suggesting Legislation to Bring About Specie Payments.

The President last week sent to Congress a message upon the subject of the resumption of specie payments. The following is the full text of the document:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: By the act of Congress approved Jan. 14, 1875, to provide for the resumption of specie payments, the 1st of January, 1879, is fixed as the date when such resumption is to begin. It may not be desirable to fix an earlier date when it shall actually become obligatory upon the Government to redeem its outstanding legal-tender notes in coin on presentation, but it is certainly most desirable, and will prove most beneficial to every pecuniary interest of the country, to hasten the day when the paper circulation of the country and gold coin shall have equal values. At a later day, if currency and coin should retain equal values, it might become advisable to authorize or direct resumption. I believe the time has come when by the simple act of the legislative branch of the Government this most desirable result can be attained. I am strengthened in this view by the course trade has taken in the last two years, and by the strength of the credit of the United States at home and abroad.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, the exports of the United States exceeded the imports by $120,213,102, but our exports include $40,569,621 of specie and bullion in excess of imports of the same commodities. For six months of the present fiscal year, from July 1, 1876 to Jan. 1, 1877, the excess of exports over imports amounted to $17,544,869, and the imports of specie and bullion exceeded the exports of precious metals by $6,192,147 in the same time. The actual excess of exports over imports for the six months, exclusive of specie and bullion, amounted to $13,737,040, showing for the time being the accumulation of specie and bullion in the country amounting to more than $6,000,000, in addition to the national product of these metals for the same period, a total increase of gold and silver for six months not far short of $60,000,000. It is very evident that unless this great increase of precious metals can be utilized at home in such way as to make it in some manner remunerative to holders it must seek a foreign market as surely as would any other product of the soil or manufacture. Any legislation which will keep coin and bullion at home will, in my judgment, soon bring about a practical resumption and will add the coin of the country to the circulating medium, thus securing a healthy inflation of sound currency, to the great advantage of every legitimate business interest.

The act to provide for resumption of specie payments authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds of either of the descriptions named in the act of Congress approved July 4, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," for not less than par in gold. With the present value of 4½ per cent. bonds in the markets of the world they could be exchanged at par for gold, thus strengthening the treasury to meet final resumption, and to keep the excess of coin over the demand pending its permanent use a circulating medium at home. All that would further be required would be to reduce the volume of legal-tender notes in circulation. To accomplish this, I would suggest an act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue 4 per cent. bonds, with forty years to run before maturity, to be exchanged for legal-tender notes whenever presented in sums of $50, or any multiple thereof, the whole amount of such bonds, however, not to exceed $150,000,000. To increase the home demand for such bonds, I would recommend that they be available for deposit in the United States treasury for banking purposes under the various provisions of law relating to the national banks.

I would suggest further that national banks be required to retain a certain per cent. of coin interest received by them from bonds deposited with the treasury to secure their circulation. I would also recommend the repeal of the third section of the joint resolution for the issue of silver coin, approved July 22, 1876, limiting the subsidiary coin and fractional currency to $50,000,000.

I am satisfied that if Congress will enact some such law as will accomplish the end suggested, they will give relief to the country instant in its effect, and for which they will receive the gratitude of the whole people.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Feb. 8, 1877.

Astonishing Feat at Beer-Drinking.

On Christmas day an aspiring German won for himself fame as an industrious beer-drinker. Some time since a question having arisen as to the capacity of this individual, he set all doubts forever at rest by drinking the contents of a lager-beer keg within the prescribed time of three hours. Prior to undertaking this feat he ate a half pound of newly-made butter, and while engaged in the act of drinking was reclining in a bath-tub filled with lukewarm water. After drinking the last glass he was to appearance as sober as when he commenced the task. There are 100 glasses of lager in a keg.—Hartford Post.

ONE of the latest Parisian toys is called the "Eastern Question." It is a steel crescent, around which hang a certain number of rings strung together. The problem is to bring order out of confusion, but the more one tries to arrange them the greater is the confusion. In the end the toy-seller divides the crescent into several pieces, and the rings arrange themselves in the simplest way imaginable.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, Feb. 2.—SENATE.—The Senate, in committee of the whole, discussed the interest question, and reported without recommendation.... The rest of the day was consumed by the reading of bills a second time and listening to committee reports thereon.

HOUSE.—The bill giving husband and wife the right to testify for or against each other, private communications excepted, was reported back by the Judiciary Committee and recommitted to the Committee on Rights and Privileges.... The bill providing for the redemption of lands sold for taxes by paying a penalty of 25 per cent. and 8 per cent. interest was passed.... A bill providing for a new election law was offered. The principal change it makes in the present law is that it requires judges and inspectors to be resident householders and freeholders one year previous to the election, and allows two representatives of each party to witness the count, and requires voters to remain within the boundaries of their precincts, where there are more than one in any township.... A bill was passed providing that the question of the propriety of calling a constitutional convention be submitted to the people at the general election in 1878.... A number of joint resolutions were passed, among them the following: To amend the constitution by striking out the whole of article 13, requiring a residence of sixty days in the precinct in order to vote; for holding general elections on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, and requiring a receipt showing poll-tax to have been paid before voting.

SATURDAY, Feb. 3.—SENATE.—Reports were received from committees recommending that the bill providing for the creation of a State Board of Health and a State Board of Engineers lie on the table, and recommending the passage of the bills relating to the powers of cities over harbors, and exempting the benefits of widows and children in benevolent associations from execution.... Bills were offered amending the Landlord and Tenant law; for the stay of execution for one year; for the concentration of records of land in the Auditor of State's office; dividing the counties into Commissioners' districts; reimbursing certain counties for taxes illegally collected.... A resolution was passed instructing the Committee on Public Buildings to inquire into the steps heretofore taken in reference to building a State House, and the liability incurred by the State.

HOUSE.—After hearing several reports from committees on bills of minor importance, the balance of the session was taken up by listening to addresses by Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Mrs. Gov. Wallace, and Mrs. Thomas, of Richmond, Ind., on the woman's rights question. At the conclusion of the addresses Representative Swasee, of Grant, acknowledged himself a convert to woman's rights. A vote was taken on the resolution declaring it to be the sense of the House that the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the constitution confer the right of suffrage upon all citizens alike, regardless of sex, and it was overwhelmingly defeated, the vote standing—ayes, 23; noes, 61.

MONDAY, Feb. 5.—SENATE.—A bill was introduced providing for the erection of a new State House, and levying a tax for that purpose. It provides for four Commissioners to be appointed by the Governor. He to be the fifth. The building is to be commenced in 1877, and finished by 1882. It takes the votes of four members to decide upon a plan and let a contract.... A joint resolution was offered to so amend the constitution as to issue $2,000,000 State-House bonds.... New bills were offered relating to elections; authorizing special taxes; making only owners of taxable property voters; allowing husband and wife to testify for or against each other in cases of agency in matters within the scope of their agency.

HOUSE.—The vote on the Gravel Road bill, defeated last week, was reconsidered, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Roads, with instructions to amend.... The bill repealing the section of the Assessment law exempting from taxation bona fide indebtedness was laid on the table.... A bill for the reapportionment of the State was introduced by Mr. Givan. It provides that the following counties shall each elect one Representative: Posey, Gibson, Warwick, Pike, Spencer, Perry, Sullivan, Knox, Daviess, Green, Harrison, Floyd, Clark, Washington, Jackson, Lawrence, Bartholomew, Jennings, Jefferson, Ripley, Rush, Decatur, Owen, Clay, Morgan, Johnson, Putnam, Hendricks, Polk, Vermillion, Warren, Fountain, Lake, Porter, LaPorte, St. Joseph, Kosciusko, Fulton, Whitley, Elkhart, Noble, LaGrange, Steuben, DeKalb, Wells, Huntington, Wabash, Grant, Miami, Howard, Cass, Carroll, Hamilton, Tipton, Clinton, Boone, Montgomery, Madison, Delaware, Jay, Randolph, Henry, Hancock, Shelby, Dearborn, Franklin, Marshall. The following counties shall elect one joint Representative: Martin and Dubois, Crawford and Orange, Clark and Scott, Monroe and Brown, Switzerland and Ohio, Putnam and Hendricks, Benton and Newton, Jasper and White, Marshall and St. Joseph, Pulaski and Stark, Allen and Adams, Huntington and Wabash, Grant and Blackford, Cass and Carroll, Henry and Madison, Fayette and Union, Marion and Shelby, Noble and Elkhart, Howard and Miami. The following counties shall singly elect two Representatives: Vanderburgh, Vigo, Allen, Wayne, Tippecanoe. Marion county shall elect four Representatives.... A similar bill has been introduced in the House by Judge Carlton, of Vigo.... Mr. Reeve introduced a bill providing that in all elections held to test the sense of the people in regard to voting money for any purpose that will require a special tax-levy, all persons who own taxable property may vote including women. Guardians may cast a vote for minors, and trustees for the benefit of the trust.

TUESDAY, Feb. 6.—SENATE.—New bills were offered prohibiting candidates from giving valuable considerations in electioneering for themselves; limiting grand larceny to sums of $25 and upward, and amending the act for locating, opening and vacating roads.... The remainder of the session was consumed in discussing the bill concerning the rights, powers, obligations, duties and separate property of married women.

HOUSE.—A communication was received from the Auditor of State in relation to the losses sustained by the school fund.... The substitute for Henderson's bill in regard to the redemption of property sold for taxes was passed. It provides that property redeemed within six months shall be subject to a penalty of 15 per cent.; one year, 25 per cent.; two years, 40 per cent.... The Senate bill which declares Congressional school lands taxable after they have been sold and before deed is made, and legalizing all assessments, levy and collection of taxes heretofore made, and prohibiting the refunding of taxes, was passed.... The remainder of the session was consumed by hearing committee reports.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 7.—SENATE.—A communication was received from the Governor announcing the appointment of Barnabas C. Hobbs as Trustee of the State Normal School at Terre Haute.... Bills were passed providing for the enumeration of colored male inhabitants, and abolishing the Floyd Criminal Court.... Bills to change the time of electing Directors of the Evansville and Crawfordsville railroad; exempting benefits and claims of widows and children of members of Masonic or other societies, and policies of life insurance from claims of creditors; and to provide for the election and appointment of Supervisors of Roads, were read a second time.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced to fix the fees of County Auditors and Treasurers in managing the school fund; amending the act authorizing the formation of counties; authorizing each Judge of the Supreme Court to hire a Clerk; providing for the election of County Superintendents; for the building of a new State Prison at Seymour, and abolishing the prison at Jeffersonville; relating to the powers and duties of life, health and accident insurance companies; making contracts made in this State with agents of insurance companies valid; creating the work of civil engineers, contractors, sub-contractors and laborers liens on railroads; and providing for uniform rules for the making and collection of promissory notes and bills of exchange.... Commissioners reported favorably on the bill allowing Boards of Underwriters to establish fire patrols, and regulating foreign insurance companies doing business in this State.... A bill was also introduced for the establishment of an Asylum for Feeble-Minded Children.

Pork Packing.

The number of hogs packed from Nov. 1 to Jan 25, at the six principal cities, with comparisons, is shown in the following:

	To Jan. 25, 1877.	Same date, 1876.
Cincinnati	475,000	495,000
Chicago	1,330,000	1,196,000
St. Louis	336,000	280,000
Louisville	209,000	273,000
Milwaukee	215,000	180,000
Indianapolis	267,000	270,000
At six cities	2,872,000	2,613,000

THE sales of real estate in San Francisco in 1876 aggregated $24,000,000.

RAILROAD DISASTERS.

A Record of Train Accidents for the Past Four Years.

The Railroad Gazette has compiled and published records of railway accidents for four complete calendar years. The number of accidents and of persons killed and injured in them for each of these years have been:

	1873.	1874.	1875.	1876.
Accidents	1,283	980	1,201	982
Killed	276	204	234	328
Injured	1,172	776	1,107	1,097

The number of accidents thus appears to have been nearly the same last year as in 1874, but fatal injuries were more than for any preceding year reported. This is due largely to the catastrophe at Ashtabula, by which eighty persons lost their lives—nearly one-fourth of the victims of all the train accidents of the entire year. Without this, however, the accidents were more than usually fatal, one of the causes of which, doubtless, is the unusual amount of passenger traffic last fall, there having been more accidents to passenger trains than usual. The average number of killed and injured per accident for the four years has been:

	1873.	1874.	1875.	1876.
Killed	0.215	0.209	0.195	0.334
Injured	0.914	0.800	0.923	1.117
Killed and injured	1.129	1.009	1.118	1.451

Thus 1876 enjoys the distinction of having had the deadliest accidents. If we were to omit the Ashtabula disaster, there would still be 0.253 killed and 1.128 injured per accident; so that this disaster was not needed to give it this distinction.

The accidents for a series of years compare in number as follows:

	1876.	1875.	1874.	1873.
Collisions	279	278	260	392
Derailments	665	840	654	815
Other accidents	48	83	66	76
Totals	982	1,201	980	1,283
Average number per day	2.69	3.29	2.68	3.51

The record of 1876 is more like that of 1874 than any other. Both years had a mild winter, and the accidents resulting from broken rails were comparatively few. The very large number of accidents from misplaced switches this year is noticeable, and suggests that railroads may have been employing too cheap labor. The number of accidents for which no causes are assigned is smaller than heretofore.

Of the derailments for which causes are assigned, the percentage due to each of the chief causes was as follows in the several years:

	1876.	1875.	1874.	1873.
Broken rail	10.6	17.8	9.9	22.2
Misplaced switch	12.9	13.1	15.4	14.4
Cattle on track	9.7	8.2	10.3	10.8
Wash-out	8.5	7.1	9.5	6.0
Loose or spread rails	9.3	6.5	9.7	2.6
Broken axle	8.1	6.3	4.6	4.3
Accidental obstruction	7.7	6.0	11.7	8.8
Broken wheel	4.7	6.3	4.6	5.9

As indicating the effect of severe weather on track (not necessarily on iron, however), we give below the breakages of rails reported for the first and third quarters, respectively, of each of the four years:

	1873.	1874.	1875.	1876.	Total.
First quarter	65	20	90	36	211
Third quarter	5	5	3	3	16

This indicates that there were eleven times as many accidents by broken rails in the cold as in the hot quarters of the year, and the effect of the severe weather is further shown by a comparison of the breakages in the cold winters of 1873 and 1875, with those in the milder winters of 1874 and 1876.

A more general classification of the causes of derailments gives the following:

	1873.	1874.	1875.	1876.
Defects or failures in permanent way	200	146	261	165
Defects or failures in rolling stock	73	63	101	76
Negligence, carelessness or malice	96	107	114	119
Unforeseen obstructions not malicious	111	109	142	107

The great calamity at Ashtabula will doubtless cause renewed attention to one class of accidents, at least. We have chronicled during the past four years ninety-eight cases of the failure of a bridge or trestle, nearly every one under a train. None of them had results anything like as serious; but that most of them were comparatively harmless was much more "accidental" than the failure of the structures themselves. The one lesson of the accident record of 1876 likely to be longest remembered is, how terrible may be the results of an error in the construction of a bridge, or of negligence in its inspection.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

To Destroy Lice.—There are various specifics; among the simplest and most effective are these: Put two ounces of powdered lobelia seed into a quart of boiling water; let the decoction stand a few hours, and, with a sponge, wash the skin night and morning. Here is another: Take linseed oil, one ounce; Pyroligneous acid, four ounces; spirits of turpentine, one ounce. Apply two or three times a day. When the vermin have disappeared, the skin should be washed thoroughly with soap and water. The animals should be liberally fed with nutritious food.

Dividends.—Many farmers look upon other men who get immensely rich out of business as in very much more fortunate circumstances than themselves, and still there are very few kinds of business that pay regularly better dividends on investments in improvements than in farming. Take, for instance, tile draining. It is the universal testimony of those who have made investments in it that the money is refunded in three or four years. A railroad investment that would pay 20 or 30 per cent. on the investment would be a remarkable corporation. Still this is what money put into tile-drainage returns.

To Prevent Mice from Girdling Fruit-Trees.—A correspondent of the Western Rural, giving his experience with this pest of the orchard, tells how he cleared his orchard, as follows: "Find where the mice burrow around in the orchard and dig a hole there twenty inches deep as you would for a fence-post; make the sides smooth; throw in an apple. The mice will go in and they cannot get out. I catch from one to five per day in each hole until they are all gone. I have had abundant experience in this method; and know it to be successful. Soon as the cat finds it out, you need have no further trouble about taking them out. She will attend to that matter."

Lazy Farmers.—Laziness prevents a man from getting off his horse to put on the first rail that gets knocked off the fence, and through this lazy neglect a whole field of corn is seriously damaged. Laziness keeps a man from driving one nail when one would do, and finally costs a carpenter's bill for extensive repairs. Laziness allows a gate to be off the hinges, to lie in the mud, or stand propped by rails—or a stable or a barn to leak and damage hundreds of dollars' worth of provender. Laziness, in short, is the right and proper name for nine-tenths of the excuses given for bad farming. But far the most prolific of the many wastes that are due to laziness is the waste of ignorance.

Waterproof Blacking.—If ever one needs a good, water-proof blacking for boots and shoes, it is at this time of sleet and snow. The following recipe for making a water-proof blacking comes to us highly recommended: Dissolve an ounce of borax in water and in this dissolve gum shellac until it is the consistency of thin paste; add lampblack to color. This makes a cheap and excellent blacking for boots, giving them the polish of new leather. The shellac makes the boots or shoes almost entirely water-proof. Camphor dissolved in alcohol, added to the blacking, makes the leather more pliable and keeps it from cracking. This is sold at 50 cents for a small bottle. By making it yourself, $1 will buy materials for a gallon.

Seasonable Hints.—Be sure to have the ground where you put onions next spring rich, and, to make it so, cover it over with manure now, run it over in the spring, and rake off all the coarse parts. Throw your coal ashes around your fruit trees and under the currants and gooseberries. Don't throw away or sell wood ashes, but use them around your peach and other fruit trees. Carefully examine with a sharp instrument, the peach trees wherever gum is escaping, and kill the grubs. If not done before, trim currants, grapes and gooseberries; cut up the cuttings six to ten inches long, and bury below frost for spring setting. There is nothing better for hot-beds than leaves mixed with barn-yard manure, as they produce heat for so long a time. We advise hauling now from the woods and throwing them under the horses and cattle. To grow good roots from cuttings of quinces, currants, gooseberries, flowering shrubs, etc., it is well to take off the cuttings first open, spell and bury in earth, so they will callous over before planting out in the spring. Cut scions of apples, pears and cherries now, and bury in sand for grafting.

About the House.

A certain way to keep ants from sugar barrels, lard cans and preserve jars, says one who has tried it, is to tie a string wet with kerosene around the barrel, can or jar. Repeat the wetting of the string with the kerosene oil every few days.

Baked Tapioca.—Soak eight table-spoonfuls of tapioca in a quart of warm water or milk, till soft; then add two table-spoonfuls of melted butter, five eggs well beaten, spice, sugar, and wine to taste. Bake in buttered dish, and without lining.

To Whiten the Complexion.—Squeeze a little lemon juice on a soft, wet rag, and pass the rag over the face a number of times before retiring at night. Repeat the operation as often during the following day as you find it convenient, allowing the juice of the lemon to dry on the face. In a week or so you will experience great benefit.

Flannel Cakes.—Mix three table-spoonfuls of flour with one pint of cream; add two eggs, and beat the whole well till quite smooth; then add slowly half a pint of new milk, into which has been put a teaspoonful of baking powder. Beat all well together, and fry with lard, a little of which should be made hot for each cake. Eat with powdered sugar, mixed with cinnamon or grated nutmeg.

Brown Soup for Invalids.—Take one table-spoonful of flour and brown it; put it in a bowl and mix with it one ounce of butter, stir them together to a smooth paste; then add half a pint of boiling water, with a slice of toasted bread cut in small pieces and just enough salt to taste; if approved, a little black pepper may be added. When animal food is forbidden, this may be used as a substitute for a richer soup.

The Mumps.—In mild cases very little treatment is required. Keeping the face and neck warm, avoiding exposure to cold and damp, drinking warm infusions of balm, spearmint or sage, and taking occasionally, if there be some severity of symptoms, four to six grains of Dover's powder, or the compound powder of jalap, if there be costiveness, is about all that is required. The diet should be very light and simple.

Indian Meal Doughnuts.—A teacupful and a half of boiling milk poured over two teacupfuls Indian meal; when it cools add two cupfuls wheat flour, one of butter, one and a half of sugar, three eggs and a tablespoonful nutmeg or cinnamon; if not stiff enough, add equal portions of wheat and meal; let it rise till very light; roll it about half an inch thick; cut it into small diamond-shaped cakes, and boil them in hot lard.

A Desperado Slain by a Woman.

Dave Raggio, a notorious Chicago thief and desperado, was recently shot by a woman whose premises he had invaded. Mrs. Mitchell, the name of the woman who gave the villain his quietus, related to a reporter the circumstances of the affair: She said it was about 8 o'clock, or a little past, on Saturday night, that she came off Wabash avenue, along Harrison street, to her apartments. When on the latter thoroughfare she happened to glance up at the window of her sitting-room, which fronted on the street, and noticed that the gas, which she had left burning there, was turned out, or down very low. She did not take much notice of it, thinking that her servant was there and had attended to it. She went around on State street, and proceeding up stairs walked straight into her bedroom, and facing the looking-glass proceeded to take off her fur cloak. The sitting-room was on her right hand as she stood in this position, and the front of the bed on her left, while the door she entered by was directly behind her. Before she had time to get her cloak off a slight sound caused her to glance towards the darkened sitting-room, and she then noticed a man close to her and another back in the shadow. The near one immediately struck her on the arm or shoulder, and she, simultaneously retreating to save herself, fell on the side of the bed on her left side. With her left hand she drew the revolver from her pocket, and quickly changing it to the other hand fired it at the man nearest her. This is the shot she thinks that told, if any did, for the man threw up his arms and then contracted them, saying, "O, God!" and the two of them started out. She regained her feet, having first fired in a kneeling attitude, as she had been pushed, or had fallen, and fired again, this time pursuing them, and fired a third shot down the stairs at them, which broke the glass in the stairway door.

Making War by Contract.

An ingenious pamphlet has been written by a German on improvements in war. Believing that war is but a natural outbreak of the pent-up forces of humanity, which must from time to time occur, he proceeds to show that its horrors are in a great measure due to the injuries inflicted on peaceful civilians by a wanton destruction of life and property. War, he maintains, if properly conducted, should in no way affect non-combatants, except in so far as they must suffer by reason of bereavements; and, moreover, much may be done to make it less disagreeable to actual combatants. With this view, he suggests that some neutral territory be set aside by the European powers, and devoted entirely to bloodshed. No fighting is, under any pretense whatever, to take place out of this territory, which is to be fitted up for war in the most elaborate fashion. There is to be a training-school for nurses, a college for surgeons and large hospitals. Prisoners of war will be confined in suitable buildings specially prepared for their accommodation. There are also to be vast cemeteries and depots for artificial limbs, etc. These conveniences will be open to all nations wishing to fight at fixed and reasonable charges. Weapons of every description—and, in fact, all the appliances of war—may be bought or hired; but no credit is given, and the charges for battle-fields are to be paid for before the first gun is fired. And the profits, after payment of expenses, will be devoted to the maintenance of the widows and orphans of the fallen.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Maniac's Vision and a Watcher's Nerve.

A gentleman in Connellsville had lost his reason, and, pending his committal to Dixmont, Mr. R. M. Sibbett was sitting up with him one night to prevent him from doing himself bodily injury. Near midnight, when the only occupants of the room were Mr. Sibbett and his crazy patient, the latter, who was in bed, reached under the pillow, and, drawing from beneath it a revolver, cocked the weapon and pointed it at Mr. Sibbett, accompanying the act with a statement that he had a vision, and than an angel from heaven had commanded him to shoot the watcher at his bedside. Mr. Sibbett looked at the man an instant and then coolly said: "Why, that pistol isn't loaded." This had the effect of diverting the patient's mind from his purpose, and also aroused his curiosity as to whether the revolver was really loaded. He got out of bed to examine it, and in an unguarded moment Mr. Sibbett snatched it from him. He found that four of its six chambers were loaded. He then, as a precautionary measure, closely examined the room and bed, and under the pillow from which the revolver was taken he also found a hatchet.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

Homeopathy appears to be making headway in France. From statistics just published by the Academy of Science we learn that there are seventy homeopathic doctors in regular practice in Paris and over 300 in the provinces. Since 1869 three homeopathic hospitals have been founded—two in Paris and one in Lyons.

THE ORIENTAL CONFLICT.

The Approaching European Campaign—An Invasion of Turkey No Holiday Job.

(From the New York Times.)

Russia has evidently gained all from the conference she could have expected. She has now united Europe on her side so far as moral influence is concerned. She has gained several invaluable months for needful preparations. The mobilization of her armies has evidently been a grand fiasco. The Russian journals are not permitted to report the movements of troops, but enough leaks out to show that large bodies of men were kept for days at little stations waiting for transportation; that provisions and water failed, and the utmost confusion prevailed. Many regiments proved, too, mere skeletons, so that Russia seemed in some such condition as France [illegible]. This, however, by the lapse of the necessary time, has been remedied, and the empire is every day girding itself for the struggle. A certain change has, it is true, come over the popular spirit; but this is probably no more than the [illegible] which always precedes a great war, and the discontent which official stupidity and maladministration produce in all countries.

We observe that certain military writers in Europe predict an easy "promenade" of the Russian armies from the Pruth to Constantinople. This is altogether improbable. Any one who reads Moltke's account of the campaign between Russia and Turkey in 1828-9, in which he served personally, or any other good history of the various wars between these two powers, will see that an advance from the Danube to Adrianople by the Muscovites is likely to be anything but an easy task. The physical peculiarities of the Danube are all in favor of the Turks. The high banks are on the Turkish side, while such islands as might form good supports for bridges are near the other bank, leaving the broad and difficult stream between. The left shores are low, wet and marshy, the roads upon them often quagmires, and the whole country so malarious that the Russians have usually lost more in former campaigns from disease than in battle. The river can be crossed on the ice, or at least partly so, during such a winter as this; but the Russians evidently have no liking for a winter campaign in such a difficult country, and in a month from now the ice will begin to break up and the roads to be impassable.

At every suitable crossing the Turks have heavy works, besides several strongly fortified places. In former years the Russians have crossed on the many narrow channels near the mouth of the Danube, but now the Turks command the Black sea, and their gunboats ought to control all the lower stream. The Russians, if they succeed in crossing, must do it quite far up, by marching through Servia. By this advance they might, to a certain degree, turn the posts on the Danube and some in the Balkans. But the danger would be that they would leave the Austrian corps of observation directly in their rear in the Carpathians. Provided a full understanding were had with Austria, there would be no danger in this. Otherwise, it would be fatal to such an approach to Constantinople. It is doubtful if any Russian army would venture a march on Adrianople with Shumla unmasked. This place is a sort of fortified post at the foot of the Balkans, toward the river, capable of holding 150,000 men. Its siege and capture would be a very difficult matter. Varna, which lies near the sea, would be impregnable with the superiority of the Turkish fleet. And, indeed, this fact alone would compel the advance of the Russians to be by interior lines to Adrianople.

When it is remembered how tenaciously the Turks defend fortified places, how much better equipped they are than was the case in 1828-9, and even in some respects better provided than in the Crimean war, it will be seen what a task the Russians have taken on themselves in "driving the Turk from Europe." In former campaigns, disease and sanitary neglect have terribly thinned the Russian ranks, while the blunders of their commanders have cost them many defeats. In the last war the Turks, under British officers, were so obstinate in defense that the forces of the Czar scarcely crossed the river. In that, as in this, the Ottomans controlled the sea. Everything points to the march to Constantinople being, far from a "promenade," in fact, a long and bloody struggle. The Turk has counted on this in his obstinacy at the conference. He could not lose more than he might by a campaign—the chances of war offer many escapes and opportunities. It is natural, too, that Russia desires all the time possible for such a severe contest.

The Surplus Geneva Award.

The Americans are puzzled to know what to do with the money paid under the Geneva award. They have paid up all claims, and the Alabama Commission ceased to exist at the end of the year, but there is a surplus of £1,800,000 remaining undistributed. Part of this has accrued from interest, but the whole sum now lies at the disposal of Congress and the President. It is said that there is a strong feeling in the United States in favor of returning the balance to Great Britain, and we can only hope that it may be influential enough to affect the action of Congress. Such an act of political honesty would do more to make future abitrations possible, and to restore the confidence of Great Britain in the American people, than a dozen treaties, and we are not without hope that it may be performed. There is sometimes deficiency of justice over there, especially about boundary claims, but there is never a deficiency of generosity. This country does not want the money, but it does want evidence that the Americans, in pressing the Alabama claims so sharply, sought only justice.—London Spectator.

One More About Gen. Nye.

It is related that he was trying a case in the Southern tier, the presiding Judge being peevish and irritable, as well as rather dull. Gen. Nye had not only cross-examined a witness at great length, but had frequently put the same questions, which the Judge had frequently ruled against as improper. At last the patience of the Judge was exhausted, and he rebuked Gen. Nye, and petulantly asked him, "Gen. Nye, what do you think I am sitting here for?" Nye looked up at the Bench, and, with a grave countenance, but a twinkle in his eye, answered coolly and composedly, "You have got me this time, your Honor!"—Utica Observer.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.

Organization and Number of the Denomination in the United States.

(From the New York Sun.)

From the latest statistics, it appears that out of the 40,000,000 inhabitants in the United States there are 6,000,000 of Roman Catholics. Opening "Sadlier's Catholic Directory and Almanac" for this year—a work approved by ecclesiastical authority and in common use among the Catholic clergy and laity—I find that the whole territory of this country is divided into seven provinces, containing eleven archdioceses, forty-six dioceses, and eight vicariates apostolic. The provinces are Baltimore, with eight dioceses and one vicariate apostolic; Boston, with six dioceses, all in New England; Cincinnati, eight dioceses, embraced in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana and Kentucky; Milwaukee, five dioceses and one vicariate, included in the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan and Dakota Territory; New Orleans, seven dioceses and one vicariate, and embracing five Southern States; New York, including the States of New York and New Jersey with their seven dioceses; Oregon, three dioceses and one vicariate; Philadelphia, five dioceses; St. Louis, seven dioceses and two vicariates; San Francisco, three dioceses; and the province of Santa Fe, with its one diocese and two vicariates. These dioceses, archdioceses and vicariates are under the ecclesiastical rule of as many archbishops, bishops and bishop coadjutors, and at the head of these and the hierarchy is now the first appointed American Cardinal or Prince of the Church, His Eminence Cardinal John McCloskey, Archbishop of the Archdiocese of New York. In addition to these higher clergy are five mitered Abbots, whose rank is almost equal to the Bishops. Under these prelates there are about 5,000 priests, including both seculars and those living in monasteries or religious houses. These last belong to that vast army of celebates in the Roman Catholic Church who are formed into orders or communities, living under a rule. These orders are composed of both men and women, known as monks, friars, or brothers, and nuns and sisters, such as the Sisters of Charity, who are religious vestals, but not nuns or cloistered religious. Again, the large corps of workers known as the Christian Brothers, the Franciscan Brothers, and others are celebates, but not priests. They devote themselves mainly to the work of education; they do not preach, or celebrate mass, or perform any of those offices relating to the sacraments, which pertain strictly to the priesthood. The "Catholic Directory" gives us also a list of the names of about 5,000 Roman Catholic clergymen in the United States, and from Thomas O'Kane Murray's "History of the Catholic Church in the United States" we gather these figures: Total number of monks or men living in religious houses, under the rule of twenty-seven different religious orders in the United States, 2,954; religious houses for men (termed variously monasteries, retreats, abbeys, priories, and convents), 228; colleges and seminaries presided over and instructed by these celebates and some secular priests, 75; number of students attending the same, 13,943. These colleges and seminaries are authorized to confer degrees, and are generously and amply provided with libraries, apparatus and all the appliances and aids necessary to enable them to bestow a liberal education. Besides this part of the work of education, these religious and priests do a part of the work of teaching in various pay schools and academies, and also in the 1,700 free Catholic common schools of this republic, with their attendance of over half a million of children. In these common schools are engaged also large numbers of the Sisters of Charity and other women belonging to other religious orders. There are forty-four regular orders for women in this country, with a membership of about 10,000 professed nuns or sisters, besides novices and postulants or candidates for membership. These ladies own and live in 600 convents or religious houses, conduct over 400 academies, about 250 pay schools, 111 asylums, and manage and nurse the patients in 66 hospitals. This is believed, however, to be a very small estimate. They form, moreover, by far the largest number of teachers in the free parochial or Catholic common schools mentioned above. These, it will be remembered, draw no part of the common school fund in any of the States, but are supported by the voluntary contributions of Roman Catholics themselves.

A Startling Scene in Church.

Last Sunday week, after the first hymn had been sung in the Congregational Church at Genesco, N. Y., a wealthy and respected resident of the town rose in his pew, took out his watch, and, addressing the clergyman, exclaimed: "There is a devil in this church, and I give her just five minutes to live." At the same instant he drew a revolver and pointed it at a lady seated in a pew in front of him. The lady was discreet. She rose quietly and left the church. The preacher gave out his text, but his sermon fell on dull ears, and there was gossip without end after the benediction. The gentleman had been summoned home from Albany to look after his daughter, but when he arrived he had learned that she had run away with this lady's son and been married at Mount Morris a few days before. He was convinced that the elopement had been planned by the mother-in-law, and was unable to repress his indignation in church.

An Eagle Carries Off a Pig.

On Monday afternoon last the scholars attending the Fegely school, in Pottsgrove township, this county, saw a very large bird alight on a tree about 300 yards from the school-house, on the Gue property, carrying in its talons a small sucking pig, which it began to devour. The children scampered off in the direction of the tree, when the bird went sailing away, leaving behind it the two hind legs of the young porker. From the description given of the bird by the children, it was no doubt an eagle.—Pottstown (Pa.) Ledger.

MANIAC MURDERERS.

Horrible Butchery of a Woman in Louisville by Her Son.

A shocking case of matricide occurred in Louisville, Ky., a few days ago, Tim McCarthy, a boy aged 19 years, splitting open the head of his mother, aged 65, with a hatchet. When the affair became known, and a man went to the house, young McCarthy was found sitting on a chair by the side of his mother's body, crying bitterly. He tapped him on the arm and said: "Tim, go back with me." He started up and drew back, saying: "Joe, leave me here until I see my mother die." He was allowed to sit by her side until she died, and a policeman came to take him away. The poor old woman was doubtless sitting in a chair when the boy found the fatal hatchet with which the killing was done, and standing over and in front of her, dealt the cruel blows upon her. If there had been a struggle, the evidence of it had been removed. All that told of the awful tragedy was the shrunken form of the dead woman, that frightful hole in her head, and the crimson spots upon the floor. In his cell in jail a reporter asked him why he killed his mother. He was silent for some moments, but when the reporter turned to leave he said: "Yes, I struck her in the head with a hatchet. Well, they surrounded the house and were going to burn it. I did not want to see my mother burned to death, so I killed her." Here he burst into tears and slowly walked away. The murderer has for some time been afflicted with a mild type of insanity, caused by an enlargement of the brain.

A Staten Island Lunatic Kills His Mother and Mutilates His Sister.

A terrible tragedy was recently enacted at Egbertville, Staten island, N. Y. Patrick Dolan, a young Irishman, has for some time been of unsound mind. His aged mother and a sister, not willing to place him in an asylum, took him to Egbertville, hoping the quiet of that village would aid to restore his reason. Dolan seemed harmless, and the prospects of his recovery promising. But, at 3 o'clock on the morning of the tragedy, he rose while his sister was sleeping, went to the woodshed and got a club. Thus armed, he stole back to the house and mounted to the room in which his mother, an old lady of 70 years, was sleeping, and began to assault her. The first blow injured the old lady severely, but she managed to get out of bed and elude her crazy son for some time. An opportunity finally offered, and he felled her with a blow, mutilated her body in the most horrible manner, and then sought another victim. His sister Ann, who had been aroused, escaped him with cuts on the head and limbs, which will probably not prove fatal. The neighbors were startled by the cries of her mother and herself, and, before Dolan could be secured, he had hurt Lawrence Curry severely, and would have killed him but for the arrival of his son, Sylvester, who had a fearful struggle with the madman before a rope could be procured, and the latter bound. He was arrested and placed in the Richmond jail. Heretofore he has borne a good reputation, and was not a drinking man. No cause for his insanity is known.

A Prison-Keeper Brained by a Crazy Convict.

While A. J. Casler, one of the keepers of the Auburn (N. Y.) prison, had a gang of eight convicts shoveling snow in the prison yard, a few days ago, Wm. Barr, one of the prisoners, struck Casler over the head with an iron shovel, causing death almost instantly. Barr was under a ten years' sentence for robbery, which would have expired in July of this year. This crime will probably insure the execution in March of Thomas, the negro convict, who killed another keeper, and for whom an effort for reprieve is making.

How a Forger Paid William M. Evarts.

The most clever forgeries which had been ever known, up to the time of their occurrence, were those of Monroe Edwards. This man really possessed commercial genius, and had he devoted himself to legitimate business he would have become a merchant prince. He preferred fraud, however, and bore the consequences. It is thirty-four years since Monroe Edwards was convicted. William M. Evarts was then a young lawyer, and was retained in the defense. It is said he got his pay in a forged check. Edwards had great personal elegance and grace of manners. He went to England with forged letters from Daniel Webster, traveling as John P. Caldwell. The aristocracy welcomed him to their festal halls, and he actually borrowed £1,000 to return with. In this city he forged $25,000 on Brown Brothers & Co., and by three clever forgeries in Philadelphia he raised $66,000 more. His trial in this city was the occasion of James Watson Webb's duel with Tom Marshall. The latter was one of the counsel for the defense, and made severe reflections on Webb, who challenged him and got a bullet in his leg. Edwards was sentenced to Sing Sing for five years, and died before the expiration of the sentence.—Utica Herald.

Another Pacific Railroad.

There is a very modest Pacific railroad project before Congress. It only asks for $10,000 or $15,000 to enable a survey to be made, under the direction of the War Department, of a line from Austin, Texas, crossing Mexico, and terminating at a harbor on the Gulf of California called Topolovampo bay. The length of the proposed line is only 800 miles. A bill making the appropriation is now on the Senate calendar, backed by a report of the Committee on Railroads. The route indicated is the shortest available line for a road connecting the road system of the East and South with a good harbor on the waters of the Pacific ocean.—Washington Cor. New York Tribune.

A Plan to Divide California.

Pacific coast politicians say that a project will soon be agitated for dividing California and making a new State out of the southern portion, together with the western part of the Territory of Arizona. The boundary line between the old and the new State would run directly eastward from Point Conception, and the capital of the latter would probably be Los Angeles. It is urged in support of this project that the interests of Southern California are separate and diverse from those which center at San Francisco and Sacramento, and that, as the southern section develops in population and wealth, as it will rapidly do as soon as it has railroad communication with the East, it will demand a distinct political existence.—Washington Cor. New York Tribune.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 15, 1877.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

MONDAY, February 12th, 1877.

DEAR COURIER—The city is overflowing with an influx of strangers, and all the hotel lobbies are filled to the brim. Excitement has run riot here ever since the joint commission made its first decision by a partisan vote for the Republicans. They feel much encouraged at the outset, and are now depending entirely upon its political complexion to carry them through. Hundreds of them here feel that they have no chance if the the facts are laid bare, and the decision of the commission not to go behind the Returning Boards, is almost an assurance to them of victory. When arbitration was first suggested, and even during the consideration of the bill creating the commission, it was understood that every fact should be brought out and a fair count made. The sole object was to see who was fairly and honestly elected, and no technicalities were to be employed to secure this end. Now what is the effect of the very first decision of this high tribunal? By a strict party vote they declare that no matter how much fraud may have been used to carry a State, they have no right to go behind the returns as certified to by the Governor. It it had been necessary for the Returning Board in Florida to throw out ten thousand Democratic votes to carry that State for Hayes, yet this high commission starts out with the decision, that it will not do to investigate how a State was carried so the Governor certified to the same and transmitted that result to the President of the Senate. Supposing a Returning Board had existed in Indiana, and it had met according to law, and thrown out enough precincts and counties to count in Blue Jeans by fifty thousand, yet according to their ruling of this commission it would not go behind the returns because the Governor had certified to the report of the Returning Board. This is certainly not the spirit of the law which made this commission, and many friends of Mr. Tilden would regret to see him counted in by such ruling, if he were dependent on these contested States for his election.

It is evident that Judge Bradly will make the next President. It was at first thought that the fine judges would vote in harmony with each other. It was desirable, as a means of satisfying the public mind, that the decisions reached by the commission should not rest on divisions by a party line. But the first important vote showed that this was a delusion. It then became evident that the fourteen members first appointed would act throughout as thick-and-thin partisans, seven persistently standing by the claim of Hayes, the other seven by the claim of Tilden, and that the fifteenth member holds in his single hand the power to determine who shall be the next President. From the moment that it became evident that the ten Senators and Representatives and the first four judges would vote as staunch partisians on every question, standing uniformly seven against seven from that moment it was apparent that Justice Bradley is invested with an amount of political power to which there has never been a parallel in the history of the United States nor of any other republic. Judge Bradley will turn the scale in every vote of the long series by which the final result is to be reached. Thus far he has voted with the republicans in every essential and with the democrats in every non-essential question. The fact that he is a republican himself creates presumption that he will pursue a similar course throughout. That he will pursue this course to the end there is no good reason to doubt. It is still in his power to make Mr. Tilden President by voting with the democrats on the Louisiana case or on the Oregon case. He can, but will he? The Louisiana case has, some peculiar features which distinguish it from that of Florida; but those features are not the ones on which the democrats have heretofore rested their hopes. Their case, as they had gotten it up, consisted of a great mass of evidence which went behind the action of the Returning Board. Not a particle of that evidence will be received by the commission, and the order which rules it out spikes all the guns of the democratic battery. Nothing is left for them but to dispute legality of the Returning Board and the elegibility of two of the Hayes electors. There is little chance of their convincing Judge Bradley on either of these points, and nobody doubts that the other seven republicans will steadily vote against them. The two electors who had held federal offices resigned previous to the 6th of December, the day on which they were appointed by the Electoral College to fill vacancies. with these grounds to stand upon it is certain that the other seven republicans, and probably that Judge Bradley also, will vote to give all the electoral votes of Louisiana to Hayes. Had Judge Davis instead of Judge Bradley been selected as the fifth member from the Supreme Court the result might be different; but Judge Bradley has thus far given the democrats no reason for hoping that he will make Mr. Tilden President. While the democrats have been disapointed over the result so far, they have not relaxed a single effort to secure a fair count. The House will vote to day, and enter its protest against the counting of Florida for Hayes, but as the States have alredy voted to sustain the decision of the commission, as the two Houses must agree there is no possible chance of changing the result. The next State with two sets of certificates is Louisiana. Trumbull and Carpenter will present the case on the democratic side, and every effort will be made to show whether the Returning Board was legally constituted, which expressly command that its members shall be five in number and selected from all parties, while it had but four, Republicans.

The struggle is by no means ended. There are a number of other questions to decide, and several that will effect the result directly. If Bradly can vote in each case for party, then Hayes' chances are good, but should he change and vote for the right instead of party then I believe Tilden will have a show for the position to which our four millions of votes have called him.

The Republicans felt very jolly over their first victory, some of them gentlemanly, some of them arrogant and insolent. A clerk in the department said he wanted to enjoy all he could now, as the thing might be reversed in the end. Another said he didn't care a darn for the constitution, so they counted in Hayes The scene on the streets when the decision was first announced, about 5 p. m., was quite animated, a thousand newsboys seemed to spring up from the pavements yelling their "extras" and reaping a harvest from the crowd, which was about the only good I see accomplished in the whole thing, as these gamins look terrible destitute. Little knots of men could be seen everywhere, talking over the ground, while the hotels were literally swarmed with a bustling seething mass of humanity. What an excellent opportunity it gives one to judge of human nature by the effect those political results have on individual character. There stands a florid faced jolly fellow who looks as though he would like to laugh a full hour, as he asks, "What do you think of it?" Nothing but the actual inauguration of Hayes will ever relieve him of a lingering doubt. Here's another fellow, who slaps his friend on the shoulder and says, "Well, Bob, our time now, and yours next. Lets take a drink." He is generous hearted. But listen to the laught of that long, lean cadaverous looking cuss. Its more of a sneer, as he looks contemptuously upon all those not on the winning side." He is always on hand when some one else treat or deals out the cigars. Another looks straight into your eye and asks your opinion, when he knows it better than you do yourself. This is a wonderful world and humanity is its greatest feature.

You have doubtless heard about the breach-of-premise case against Senator Cameron. It is a curious affair, some giving it credence, while others look upon it as a joke. The lady is a Mrs. Oliver, who secured a place in the Treasury department through the Senator. She is rather good looking, and dresses very neatly. Some of the boys in the department, however, are of the opinion that she is lacking in mental caliber, which has been noticable for a year past. The senator stoutly denies the allegation, and it may be after all only a black-mailing affair.

I want to give a description of some of the celebrated ladies here just by way of diversion, and in the interest of your lady readers, as soon as I can find a chance amid the great multiplicity of political affairs now claiming so much attention.

The following from the Garrett News is well written, the language, in itself, good; but the sentiment put forth is vily slanderous upon the citizens of Auburn, base in its meaning. Were such an article to appear from any point worthy of notice, it might go far toward injuring the unimpaired reputation of Auburn, but being the essence of a few squatters in a mud-puddle, it is like chaff before the wind. Spring is drawing near and the little frogs begin to croak, mark their peepings in the following;

MR. EDITOR.

In sparcely settled sections of country there is a oneness of feeling and sentiment conductive to the whole that disappears as population and wealth increases, and individuality is sharply defined and so on from rural communities to that of the populous metropolis until it becomes absolutely necessary for a people to protect themselves from the avarice of the outside barbarians. In the course of events new lines of communication between distant points opened, centers of trade spring up along its line taking from older ones some of theirs, or diverting from it the future accumulations incident to the new inspiration given. It often happens that a business point suppose they have a patent to all the business of a certain section, as irrevocable as the patent of a King in feudal times. Less than two years ago the town of Garrett was laid out for a manufacturing town, and the Railroad Company commenced the erection of shops, on an extensive scale which served to arouse the ire of our Auburn neighbors which has been nursed from that time until the present. It has become self evident to even the casual observer that Auburn business men are determined to fight to the bitter end, all interest in Garrett—have refused to have their dirt swept by Garrett made brooms after admitting they were suited with the quality, but wishing it to be understood distinctly that they did not want to have anything to do with Garrett or anything manufactured in the place. Is it possible the 15 or 20 thousand dollars paid each month by the R. R. company has anything to do with it. Garrett has been promised benefits in the erection and equipmet of its school building. Now what are the facts; no teacher residing in Garrett is employed. Let Garrett protect itself instead of playing into the hands of her open enemies. The prospects never were better for the future of Garrett than at present. The time is not far distant when the Canada Southern Railroad will make Garrett its terminus increasing largely the working force in the shops and yard, to accomodate the immense traffic of the Erie Railway alone, making the C. S. & B. & O. Railroads their Chicago terminus. Then the Eel River will come here sure and in its wake as sure as fate, comes the Saganaw Road, and in time the court house of DeKalb County leaving the old mossbacks setting on their haunches, wondering why, all this has happened. These things are just as sure to take place as the morrows Sun is to rise in the East, and the present proud city of Auburn may become the quiet out-of-town residence of the wide awake enterprising business man of Garrett, with its fifteen thousand inhabitants.

RICHELEAU.

Richeleau, do you suppose your mudhole, [illegible] vagabonds, as is state by the News, in its remarks of the drunken brawl that occurred there recently, which says: "These vagabonds in human form attack anyone they come across upon occasions of this kind, and no one who happens out at such a time is safe," can have any attractions to arouse the ire or jealousy of the people of Auburn?

God forbid that they should have desire to appropriate the immortalityof that country mudhole. We acknowledge that Garrett contains some as fine famillies as grace any city on God's footstool, but they are compelled to live in a perfect h—l while they remain there. Tis true, Garrett, what there is of it has been built in a short space of time, but what has it amounted to, nothing more than business for the sheriff, if items which have appeared in the different papers throughout the county be true, and further the article states that the "business men of Auburn have refused to their dirt swept by brooms made at Garrett." We have taken particular pains to inquire into this statement, which has proven to be false, a lie black as night.

See stupidity of the backwoods author when he says Garrett is sure of the terminus of the C. S. Railroad, with the Saganaw road following in its wake.

From the gramatical part of [illegible] compostions, one would naturally suppose he did have some sense, but this last statement knocks the bottom clear out of that supposition as no sane man would think of such a thing; and again "the court house will be moved there." They need a small army or something there to keep the peace, for according to another statement of the riot there, the News says in regard to the roiters, that, "maddened by whisky, such scenes are pleasant to them and they are only satisfied when they are pounding away at some poor wretch who happens to come within their reach."

If it should be the DeKalb county courts that are needed, which they will have "sure as the sun rises," they will need half a dozen railroads to run in stone enough to build a foundation for such a building. Pooh, croak you little frogs, for soon another cold snap will drive you back to your holes.

An amusing incident occurred at the south part of town last week. A man whose name we withold, had been in the habit of whipping his better-half, and took it upon himself to give her a chastising the other day, which he did. The following evening the wife went to church and came home to find the doors locked against her, and all her entreaties to be admitted, proved useless. The next morning in company with her mother, the wife hired a man to remove her portion of the furniture to the residence of her parents, and when loaded and ready to start, the wife-whipping husband made his appearance, and begged of his wife not to leave him all forlorn, but the driver was ordered to go ahead, which he did, the abused wife following behind, with the husband holding to her apron-string, loth to let her go, all the while imploring her to return to his bed and board. Thus he followed her to the home of the mother; but here is where the laugh comes in. The goods were not unloaded at the mothers, but were hauled back and replaced in their former position in the house of her liege lord and master.

Sheriff's Sale,

BY virtue of an exection to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein Barney and Joseph Trentman are plaintiff's, and Joseph H. Ford and Francis D. Ryan are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of eight hundred and eighteen dollars and thirty-seven cents with interest on said judgment and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on Saturday the 10 day of March 1877,

Between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day at the door of the Court House of DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate to-wit:

The middle one-third of lot number sixty-eight (68) in the original plat to the town of Auburn, in DeKalb County, Indiana bounded by a line commencing at a point twenty-two feet south of the north east corner of said lot, running thence west to the west line of said lot, thence south twenty-two feet, thence east to the east line of said lot, thence north twenty-two feet to the place of beginning.

If such rents and profits will not sell for sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment interests and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment interests and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

Mr. John Steffer, who has been employed at Sammy Pomeri's, has taken a walk. His whereabouts are unknown.

We received a short but pleasant call from Miss Anderson, of Pontiac Michigan and Miss Born, of this city, on Saturday last.

J. O. Twitchell, Gen. Ag't. for W. W. Kimbal's Music House, Chicago, spent Sabbath in Auburn. Mr. T. is a fine musician.

"Valentine's Best," "The Famous Circassia," and the "Imported Havanah;" the best brands of cigars in town, at Rickel's.

"The times are so hard," says an old Irishman, "that he has parted with all his elegant wardrobe except the armholes of his waist-coat."

Enos Casebeer, who has been in a feeble condition for several months has almost entirely regained his health and begins to look quite robust.

The adjusting agents of the fire insurance company in which Mr. Zacher's goods were insured, have been busy this week paying their losses.

J. E. Beugnot has two new How Sewing Machines which he will sell way down below cost, and give the purchaser any reasonable length of time.

A. O. Miller will assist the Waterloo band in a dramatic entertainment which will be given in a short time for the benefit of the band of that place.

"A man! a man! a he man!" Oh, Tom, Tom, Tommy, you are a brick and what a fine looking "lady" you make. Your dancing was so graceful and superb.

Mrs. U. E. Babb, of Hicksville, Ohio, and Miss Jennie Collar, of Garrett, sister of Dr. A. H. Collar, of this place, were in attendance at the mite on last Friday evening.

The ceremony did come off at the mite last Friday evening, but a large number of those present could not see it. For their information we will tell them. It was "Inadvancing."

Rev. Geo. D. Hartsuck, of this city, has received the appointment of Moral Instructor at the States Prison at Michigan City. We congratulate Bro. Hartsuck, on his good luck.—Kendallville Standard.

Spring goods arriving every day, at prices to suit the times at Sam, Pete & Max, Star Clothing House, Fort Wayne, Ind. See change in their advertisement in another column.

An old man from Kansas, who claimed to have lived on grasshoppers two years, was on our streets last Saturday, making fun for the boys. He was "how come you so."

Mr. Zacher is moving his stock of groceries in the old bank building next to the St Nicholas Saloon. He will soon be open again to supply his numerous customers.

DR. HARTER'S LIVER PILLS have proved of the greatest benefit in relieving and curing obstinate and dangerous diseases, where other remedies have failed. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

The disease which has been so fatal to the swine in this section of the country during the fore part of the winter, has almost wholy abated, so we are informed.

Mrs. Dr. Smith, of Columbus Grove, Ohio, daughter of Henry Ford, of this place, who was visiting her parents and friends in Auburn last week, returned to Ohio Monday morning.

The members of the Catholic church of Auburn, have purchased for their church the "Fourteen Stations," painted in oil and neatly framed, costing one hundred and ten dollars.

During the season of Lent, which begins on Ash Wednesday and closing on Easter Sunday exclusive, there will be services in the Catholic church on Wednesday and Friday evenings of each week, commencing at 7 o'clock.

Teachers, whose schools will soon close, and desire to make presents to their pupils, will do well to examine the reward cards at Houser's Book Store. He has every variety and style which are calculated to make the heart of the pupil glad.

John Leasure wants us to give him a puff on the manner in which he washed and cleaned one of the front windows of the Excelsior Hardware Store. All right, John, we will. We think the frosting yet remaining on the glass looks excellent.

On Thursday afternoon, Feb. 22nd, a business meeting of the society will be held at the Presbyterian church, at 3 o'clock sharp. MRS. R. ELSON, Sec.

The social connected with the Presbyterian church, will be entertained next Wednesday afternoon and evening, February 21st, by Mrs. S. W. Ralston. A cordial invitation to all.

Simon Snyder will sell agricultural implements for his brother D. D. Snyder. Those of our readers wishing farm machinery will do well to call and see Mr. S., or reserve your orders till Simon calls on you.

There is talk of a neck-tie party to be given in a short time by the ladies of the Presbyterian church. Hurry it along, as our neck-tie is getting rather thread-bare, and we shall soon have to comply with the wishes of our "devil."

We have been informed that there was no insurance on the mill of Theron Clark, which was burned on Wednesday morning of last week, and the total loss of everything is badly felt by Mr. Clark.

Will Baldock, of the Fort Wayne News, got a good "take" recently in the shape of a young lady by the name of Miss May J. Moffitt, a grand-daughter of Enoch Zollars, of Fort Wayne. He can now advertise for cabbage, potatoes, wood, coal, &c.

Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthama, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Lungs and Chest are readily cured by Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, a remedy which never fails to give satisfaction. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Printing is a science, and, like all sciences is the fruit of knowledge which comes only by study. Like all sciences it came in the fullness of time, when the world had been prepared for it, but it came only to him who had qualified himself with its handiworks from beginning to end (Gutenburg).—De Vinne.

We heard a young lady remark at the entertainment on Tuesday night, that she would like to pinch that dutchman's cheek, and another remarked that the clothes of the school mistress didn't fit her (him) very well, and that the waist couldn't have been cut after the latest pattern.

A petition has been signed by the citizens of Hicksville to present to the Ohio Legislature, for the relief of J. D. Phillips, treasurer of Hicksville special school district who was robbed of over four hundred dollars some time ago at Auburn Junction while on his way to Bryan to pay a debt or bond held against Hicksville special school district.

It was feared last Thursday night that an attempt would be made to fire the store buildings of S. W. Ralston and F. E. Davenport, and accordingly the streets were patrolled all night by watchers. Should any one be caught at such an act the halters would be too good for them, and shooting too merciful.

We are to have another boot and shoe store in Auburn, W. J. Austin & Co., of Indianapolis, being the firm, and have located in the Odd Fellows Building, directly under this office. The firm will open as fine a stock of boots and shoes as can be found in DeKalb county. Keep a sharp lookout for their advertisement in the COURIER in a short time.

Our Dramatic Company tendered their services to Mr. T. A. Clark, on last Saturday evening, and played for his benefit. Tickets were sold for one dollar each, by which they realized a snug little sum for Mr. C. The play was as advertised, "Black-eyed Susan" and "Po-ca-hon-tas," which was well rendered, Po-ca-hon-tas creating a great deal of mirth.

The Kendallville Standard says, Hank J. Long returned from Washington Saturday evening, on a ten days furlough. He is a typo on the Congressional Record, and the long speeches of the members of Congress on the Presidential question makes it busy work for the printers to keep up with them. Come around this way Hank. We will be glad to shake hands with you.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—Scorfula was considered incurable until the great discovery of "Holloway's Pills and Ointment" flashed upon the world. Diseases which baffled the skill of the medical school, readily yield to these peerless remedies. Scurvey, Erysipelas, Saltrheum, Itch, and and cutaneous Eruptions are curable by them. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

DR. HARTER'S ELIXIR OF WILD CHERRY being entirely free from mineral, and depending on vegetable matter for its tonic properties, can be taken with impunity by the most delicate lady, as by the sedenary student whose system has suffered by over-taxation of the brain. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Mr. Peterson of the COURIER seems to be troubling himself a good deal about our "school marms." We doubt if it is reciprocated, and if it is, we think it is bad taste.—Garrett News.

"Reciprocated!" "Bad taste!" Mr. News; how that sounds. Are you getting discouraged? Well, well, they have became aware of your being a married man, so there is no straw left for you to grasp at. Don't undertake to "soft soap" them in such a manner as to make them think your a "foine young fellah and pwart youa hawah in the middle.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The almost impassable condition of the highways since last we sent in our "budget" has materially lessened the receipts of produce, though on Thursday and Saturday last, quite a number of teams came in "light" from the north with wheat. Monday and Tuesday we noticed but few arrivals. Yesterday there was a slight increase and the market closed with the following quotations: Wheat, No. 1, amber, $1.40, No. 2, $1.30; Oats, 33c; Corn, 50c; Clover seed, $8.75; Potatoes, $1.00; Butter, 16c; Eggs, 15c; Hogs, live weight, 5¼@5½; dressed 6@6½ Hides, green, 5c; Poultry, 5@7c.

A two-penny daily picked up somewhere by one of our republican brethren the other day, containing a bogus dispatch announcing the election of Hayes, came nigh unto playing the very devil with the hilarious rads in town. Keep cool, don't count the Hayes chickens until they are hatched. The "gray" wins, and that's the Tilden bird.

The branch store of S. J. M. Loomis, of Kendallville, under the management of P. Draggoo, for the past year, was closed last week and the stock removed to Kendallville.

M. Boland and family, of Auburn, spent last Sabbath in town.

The spring-like weather that we have been enjoying of late is a forcible reminder that the wood-chuck lied on the 2d ult. Still it would be well for poor robin red-breast not to emigrate north too soon.

It will be seen from the proceedings in the Florida case, that the sucking-in business has been inaugurated by the Hayesites, and that the buldoze or bust plan will be adopted throughout the entire count. The radical yell goes up—"all's well—Louisiana and Oregon sure for Hayes." Probably ere the COURIER goes to press, Louisiana will have been passed, and if the right triumphs the State will be awarded to the Democratic electors. Watch and pray.

John Beaver, foreman of this section on the Lake Shore road, bought of John McKee his house and lot last week, purchase money, $250. Mr. McKee will undertake to follow the plow the approaching summer, having leased a farm of Geo. Slayman.

On last Thursday evening an enjoyable social party, consisting of a number of our young people, as the invited guests of Miss Hattie Helmer, assembled at the residence of our townsman, Mr. J. H. Helmer. All those present join in the highest praise of the necktie party of Thursday evening, and pronounce it a most happy affair.

A bill now before the Indiana Legislature to change the present Road Law of the State, a copy of which was sent in for consideration by Senator Mercer, and passed upon in a public meeting at Adams Hall on last Wednesday, was returned, having received the almost unanimous protest of that meeting.

It is rumored that the present School Director will receive the appointment of Post Master at Corunna.

We regret to learn that Billy W—— was stung by bees on the night of the —— at Fairfield Center.

Theo. comes home earlier than former days.

Charley Aichele, the present efficient treasurer of the city of Kendallville, will probably be a candidate for re-election. Mr. Aichele is a sterling democrat and emphatically a reformer. He has brought the city out of debt and placed it upon a sound financial footing.

Dr James D. and Lyman Bacon, brothers of F. B. Bacon, Druggist at Kendallville, left for California on last Monday.

LOVELAND.

JUNCTION.

ow about the Canada Southern Railroad.

Dame Pence has returned.

Quite a crowd from Auburn and Garrett visited the Junction on last Sabbath.

Mr. Spangler is clearing up some of his low land preparatory to opening up the avenue.

Are Esquire's coming down? Ask Mr. Hines who got off the train at this place last week.

Does "Occasional" know which side of his bread is buttered? If so why does he go back on his employers by suggesting that the merchants of Auburn withdraw their patronage from the B. & O. railway.

Our singing school closed last Friday evening. It was pronounced success, by those interested. Financially speaking most of the class did their duty promptly, and a little time we think will make matters all right with the rest. Cannot we have another term?

Look out for wood thieves, and be careful to keep a stick on top of your pile and wait for events.

What is more annoying than to have the night trains awake you from your peaceful slumbers calling for a lazy flagman.

We overheard a traveling man remark that the Junction afforded the best connections of any place in Northern Indiana.

Alphonso squirmed over our remarks of last week, and threatens to lay us low if there are large words enough in Webster's Dictionary to do it this week. We warn him that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones. By the way, where is Dell? We have not heard of his vamoosing the place yet, and would be glad to hear from him once again.

The Doctor who was famous as landlord at the Stamets house last winter, stopped off one day last week and opened his trunk, took out several yards of new muslin and measured it, after which he placed it back. We wonder what he was at.

The D. E. R. & I. railway are drawing the boss coach of any of the three roads that pass through here.

As a reporter of passing events it becomes our duty, however painful that duty may be, to chronicle important events transpiring about us. The last is, Alphonso has turned to a squirt gun.

DON PEDRO.

GARRETT.

The weather is very lovely.

Business is picking up slowly.

The Rev. Mr. Welch still continues his series of meetings in this place.

We think Garrett needs a little reformation.

Dr. Sturgeon has moved into his new house on Peters street. School marms and all have gone hither.

August had another racket with the boys last Sunday night in his saloon. Gust let up.

The boys, and even some of the men, amuse themselves by fastening tin cans to dog's tails to see them run. One of these poor dumb victims went up into Dr. Larbois office last Saturday night to have an operation performed to relieve him of the cause, but the doctor would not perform the operation without counsel. The dog not feeling just right about his treatment jumped upon the table, switched the cans into the doctor's medicine cases, knocking down two or three rows of bottles and then wagging his tail to the doctor he went out.

Some of our citizens are getting so hightoned that they retire to the country Sunday mornings for breakfast.

B. D. says the gentlemen that were at his house last Sunday morning were very big eaters.

Mr. Litman has returned from Texas, where he has been for some time for the benefit of his health. He is much improved in health.

We are annoyed a great deal of nights by some fellows shooting on the streets. Nearly all the fellows carry pistols in their hip pockets and the result will be, some of those pistols will "go off" and blow some of their brains out.

Litman undertook to ride Joe Hyman's horse last Sunday, and got ditched. He says you might as vell dry to ride a dixan ox as dad tam horse.

Our friend Billy McKee, an engineer on the B. & O. railroad met with a sad accident a few days ago at Chicago Junction; while oiling his engine he had his arm through one of the iron drive wheels, when another train was backed up against his and broke his arm, but he is recovering quite rapidly.

DE MONTA.

Last Saturday evening after church as two young men were escorting their ladies home, one of them suddenly left the side of his partner and jumped over a ditch into the middle of the road and shouted, fire! fire! at the top of his voice, and turning to his lady, while a deadly pallor overspread his face, he says: "Why, my God! it is your house." The cause of the alarm was a lamp in a window shining on the roof of a wing of the house.

A certain young fellow threw out some slanderous remarks about another young man's sister Tuesday night, and the consequence was that young man No. 1 went home holding his jaw in his hand. Served him right, and he ought to have had more of it, but we think this will learn him to keep his mouth shut, at least till the swelling gets out of his face. Slandering the name of young ladies has become too popular among such puppies.

We are informed that Weamer & Weamer, publishers of the Auburn Republican, [illegible] by Mr. Parker, of The Garrett News, for libel, Mr. Parker claiming that he was injured to the amount of $5,000. Go ahead, boys, and Benlize all you want, we won't enter suit against you, because it helps to advertise us and let people know we are an establishment worth noticing. We are the best natured when some one is driving at us.

It was conceded by all present at the entertainment given by our dramatic company on Tuesday night, that it was the best effort ever made by them. In the play of "Black-eyed Susan," the characters were sustained in such a manner as reflects credit upon the company. We have not space to personate each character, but this we will say, that Miss Ula Yandes, as Po-ca-hon-tas, rendered her part above the average, which, together with her make up, made her look charming, as also Miss Stella Yandes. John Knoder, as the inimitable dutchman, was far ahead of himself, and could not be bettered. J. H. Barbrett is an easy, graceful performer, and carried his part in an excellent manner. D. Kalm, as William, rendered his part exceedingly well, but as king Tuscaroras, was simply immense. But Tom, the graceful Tom Leasure, would "put it down," and when he came to act the role of the school mistress, he "would bring it up," much to the amusement of the audience, who could not withhold themselves longer, but burst forth with peal after peal of laughter. We would like to mention all the characters, but space will not permit, suffice it to say that it was the best entertainment ever given by our amatuers. To be appreciated it should be seen. Our amatuers need take no back seat for any company.

With increasing cold weather, comes those dreadful Coughs and Colds, which are so easily and effectually cured with Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. It is always warranted to give satisfaction. Price only 25 cents. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Holloway's Pills.

"I had no appetite; Holloway's Pills gave me a hearty one."

"Your pills are marvelous."

"I send for another box, and keep them in the House."

"Dr. Holloway has cured my headache that was chronic."

"I gave one of your pills to my babe for cholera morbus. The dear little being got well in a day."

"My nausea of a morning is now cured."

"Your box of Holloway's Ointment cured me of noises in the head. I rubbed some of your Ointment behind the ear, and the noise has left."

"Send me two boxes; I want one for a poor family."

"I enclose a dollar, your price is 25 cents, but the medicine to me is worth a dollar."

"Send me five boxes of your pills."

"Let me have three boxes of your pills by return mail, for chills and fever."

I have over 200 such testimonials as these, but want of space compells me to conclude.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDER,

And all eruptions of the skin, this ointment is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Invariably cures the following diseases:

DISORDER OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel or with aches and pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys these pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

For Stomachs out of Order, no medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these pills; they remove all acidity occasioned by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasm—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and stomach.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the best known in the world for the following diseases: Ague, Asthma, Billious Complaints, Blotches on the Skin, Bowels, Consumption, Debility, Dropsy, Dysentery, Erysipelas, Female Irregularities, Fevers of all kinds, Fits, Gout, Headache, Indigestion, Inflammation, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Lumbago, Piles, Rheumatism, Retention, Stone and Gravel, Tic-Douloureaux, Tumors, Ulcers, Worms of all kinds, Weakness from any cause, &c.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

None are genuine unless the signature of J. Haydock, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be suspicious.

 Sold at the manufacture of Prof. Holloway & Co., New York, and by all respectable druggists and dealers in medicines throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

THE DUEL.

BY THOS HOOD.

In Bedford town, of old renown,
There lived a Mister Bray,
Who fell in love with Lucy Bell,
And so did Mr. Clay.

To see her ride from Hammersmith
By all it was allowed,
Such fair outsides are seldom seen,
Such angels on a cloud.

Said Mr. Bray to Mr. Clay;
You choose to rival me,
And court Miss Bell, but there your court
No thoroughfare shall be.

Unless you now give up your suit,
You may repent your love:
I who have shot a pigeon match,
Can shoot a turtle dove.

So pray before you woo her more,
Consider what you do:
If you pay court to Lucy Bell,
I'll pay it into you.

Said Mr. Clay to Mr. Bray,
Your threats I quite explode;
One who has been a volunteer
Knows how to prime and load.

And so I say to you unless
Your passion quiet keeps,
I, who have shot and hit bull's-eyes,
May chance to hit a sheep's.

Now gold is oft for silver changed,
And that for copper red;
But these two went away to give
Each other change for lead.

But first they sought a friend apiece,
This pleasant thought to give—
When they were dead they thus should have
Two seconds still to live.

To measure out the ground not long
The seconds then forbore,
And having taken one rash step,
They took a dozen more.

They next prepared each pistol pan
Against the deadly strife,
By putting in the prime of death
Against the prime of life.

Now all was ready for the foes;
But when they took their stands
Fear made them tremble, so they found,
They both were shaking hands.

Said Mr. C. to Mr. B.:
Here one of us may fall,
And like St. Paul's cathedral now
Be doomed to have a ball.

I do confess I did attach
Misconduct to your name,
If I withdraw the charge, will then
Your ramrod do the same?

Said Mr. B.: I do agree,
But think of Honor's Courts!
If we go off without a shot
There will be strange reports.

But look, the morning now is bright,
Though cloudy it begun;
Why can't we aim above, as if
We had called out the sun?

So up into the harmless air
Their bullets they did send;
And may all other duels have
That upshot in the end!

THE FACE IN THE GLASS.

The morning express from New York arrived at Chicago at 8 o'clock, and brought its usual medley of passengers, among them one very strange one. A dead woman was found in one of the sleeping-cars—a young and exceedingly lovely girl, with hair like silk and features exquisitely perfect and fair.

She lay in the lower berth of a section as if asleep; only, when they turned her and looked in her face, the large, black eyes were staring with a look of agony and horror in them that even death had not been able to remove.

The upper berth, did not seem to have been occupied, and there was nothing about her to indicate that she had died by violence except that look in her fixed eyes and a slight distortion of the lovely features.

Upon one of the long, silky curls which lay across her throat, was a small piece of soft, slightly adhesive wax, which, finding it impossible to remove otherwise, the curl containing it being severed, was laid aside for future examination.

It was learned upon inquiry that she had come upon the train at Detroit, in the night, and alone.

The section had been engaged for her beforehand, by a woman of middle age seemingly, though none of the officials at the ticket-office could give more than a general description of her, she having worn a veil, and only partially lifted it at any time. Nothing was discovered to really excite suspicion of unfairness, though an uncomfortable air of mystery hung about the affair.

The exceeding beauty of the dead girl, the richness of her clothing, the costly jewels in her ears and upon her hands, the absence of any baggage, even a traveling bag, the fact that an elegant portemonnaie containing notes to a considerable amount was found in the pocket of her dress, but no papers or address of any sort, no name—these circumstances were discussed and commented upon, until curiosity grew weary.

At the inquest the jury gave in their verdict in accordance with the report of the doctors—"Died of congestion of the lungs." Many came to look upon the beautiful, dead face, drawn by the noise the papers made about the affair; and she was at last recognized by friends from Detroit, whom she had lately been visiting, as a Miss Tracy, from California. But they could give no explanation of the mysterious circumstances attending and preceding her death. She had left them without telling them where she was going—had gone out that afternoon ostensibly to call upon an acquaintance, and had not returned. That was all they could tell.

The body was sent to her father in San Francisco, and the matter dropped. But there was a general feeling that a mystery remained back of all; it might be a dark and terrible one.

I was a young girl of 17 at this time, and chanced to be on the train, and the very car, with the dead girl, though I did not know it till long afterward.

It happened in this way:

I had been visiting a school friend, and was summoned home suddenly by telegraph to attend the wedding of a sister, whose betrothed, being called abroad unexpectedly, wished to take his bride with him. Hence the sudden marriage. I got aboard the train at a town about six hours' ride from Chicago, at 3 o'clock in the morning, and, not feeling inclined to sleep, took a seat in the small compartment of a palace-car, called the drawing-room. I sat with my back to the main portion of the car, and so close to the door on the side by which passengers entered that no one would be likely to know I was there, except by actually looking inside.

The lights were turned low, but sufficient remained to enable me to see in the mirrors about me most of the interior of the car outside my own retreat. There was not much to see, the berths being mostly all closed. But for that very reason, perhaps, I noticed a hand which was holding slightly apart the draperies of a section half way down the car. The hand glittered with several evidently costly stones upon the small fingers, and that was enough of itself to attract my attention.

When a face, the most beautiful I had ever seen in my life, presently followed the hand, looking cautiously out, and quickly retreating, my interest increased: the face was so white—the large eyes so anxious.

Her anxiety, though seen but for a moment, affected me. I could not help wondering what she was looking for, and I watched her berth constantly (in the mirror) to see if she would look out again. She did repeatedly.

At last I saw her face brighten into an ecstasy of joy, and at the same moment the figure of a man slipped swiftly along the aisle, and stopped beside her an instant. I could not see his face. He climbed instantly to the upper berth, without even removing the cap, which he wore instead of a hat, close down over his forehead.

I could not see his face then, but, after a time, when the cars stopped at a small place about twenty miles from Chicago, I saw the same man, with his cap still on, coming back along the aisle.

I had one glimpse of his face in the mirror—a brief one—but in that instant he lifted his eyes, and in the glass our eyes met. He stood staring a moment, and then, with a glance around him of savage bewilderment, dashed by and disappeared.

I cannot describe the creeping, icy thrill which that one look, encountered only in a glass, sent through me.

The face, too, haunted me, more by its expression than its features—a handsome, wicked, sneering face, that fascinated and repelled at the same moment—a face whose ghostly, livid whiteness it sickened me to remember, whose terrible eyes in that one flash of meeting had seemed to look abject fear and savage threatening at once.

I cowered down in my seat, and covered my face with my shawl, afraid to look lest I should meet that awful glance again, and finally fell asleep, not waking till we were entering Chicago.

I had no baggage—I had left my trunk to be sent in the next train—and I got off at Twenty-second street.

As I left the car, I remembered noticing that one section in the middle of the car remained undisturbed and closely curtained still. The conductor had addressed the occupant several times, but when she did not answer supposed her to be still sleeping, and did not discover that it was the sleep of death until after the arrival of the train at the depot.

In consequence perhaps of my having left the car at Twenty-second street, I was not remembered, or called as a witness at the inquest, and as my sister was married at 12 o'clock that day, and I went away with her to New York and remained there some weeks after she had sailed with her husband, I did not happen to hear of the finding of that dead girl in a sleeping-car, in a long time.

A year passed. My sister was still abroad. I was having a good time in society, of which I was extremely fond.

I had lately formed the acquaintance of a gentleman who brought a letter of introduction from my sister. He was an Englishman, but had lived much in Paris, and had met my sister there, and had been able to extend her and her husband some courtesies, which she in her letter asked me to return as far as lay in my power.

I was obliged, therefore, to be polite to the gentleman, though I had taken a violent dislike to him. I could not account to myself for my aversion, but it was insurmountable.

He was very handsome and distinguished-looking, but I never met him suddenly without a start, and a chilly shrinking as if I had met him somewhere before, under terrifying circumstances. He seemed very rich, and I am ashamed to say that, in spite of my dislike, when he asked me to marry him I hesitated about refusing him, because I did not like to lose the eclat of being attended by him—an attendance which I knew the girls generally envied me. I did not give him a decided answer.

About this time, Ralph Winston came home from California. Ralph and I had been children together, and very easily grew the best of friends now. The Englishman chanced to be in New York when Ralph first came. The two met at our house and in my presence, and it was evident at sight that this was not the first time they had met; and that they entertained a mutual dislike for each other, though both acknowledged the introduction like strangers.

"Have you ever met Mr. Byers before?" I asked Ralph, at the first opportunity.

"Yes."

"And you don't like him?"

Ralph shook his head emphatically.

"Why not?"

"Do you know how he got his money?"

"No."

"Well, I'll tell you, one of the prettiest girls in San Francisco fell in love with his handsome face. She was a rich heiress, and as good and true a girl as she knew how to be. Her father hated Byers, and would never consent to her marrying him. She would not marry him without her father's consent. But just as soon as she came of legal age to do so, she made her will, and gave all her money to Byers, at her death. She was visiting in Detroit afterwards, and went away without telling her friends there where she was going, or even without taking a trunk with her. The next they heard of her she was found dead in a sleeping-car at Chicago."

Here Ralph repeated to me those particulars of the tragedy which I recounted at the beginning of this recital.

"Byers, of course, got all her money," Ralph went on, "and took it so greedily and unscrupulously that everybody who knew the circumstances was disgusted. He was in Europe at the time of her death, and came posting to California after the money as soon as he heard of it; and when he had got it, went posting back again. Everybody in San Francisco despised him."

Ralph's story affected me very strangely.

"Was Byers suspected of knowing anything about her death?" I asked.

"There was some mystery about it. But the inquest had decided that she died a natural death, and Byers was abroad at the time, so they could not connect him with it. But I have always suspected, and so have many, that he knew more than he was willing to tell."

Ralph and I were sitting at one extremity of the two parlors. A large mirror was near us, and exactly opposite this mirror in the other parlor was another.

As Ralph said these words, I looked round the rooms involuntarily in search of Mr. Byers.

He was nowhere to be seen, but glancing accidentally in the glass near me, as I turned to address Ralph again, my words froze on my lips. For there, staring at me from the mirror, was the very face whose reflection had scared me so in the drawing-room of the sleeping-car a year before. The very same—handsome, wicked, sneering—in the eyes the same expression of mingled fear and threatening, on the face the same livid and horrible whiteness, and as our eyes met in the mirror he knew me again, as I knew him.

I could not look away. I thought I beheld a vision. It was only by a supreme effort that I kept my senses, so strongly did the old horror and terror of that face, which had held me once, hold me again now.

"Ralph," I said in a low voice, "look where I am looking, and tell me if you see anything."

Ralph obeyed.

"I see Cecil Byers glowering at us like a demon," he said. "He hates me for loving you, I suppose; and let him, only don't you marry him, Lou. I could bear to lose you myself better than to see you the wife of that devil."

Cecil Byers! Odd as it may seem, I had not recognized that awful face in the glass as his, till Ralph named him. I put my hand in Ralph's arm.

"Take me away out of this room, quick," I said. "I never want to meet Cecil Byers again. I am sure I shall scream or faint, or do something dreadful if I do."

Ralph got me out of the room by the nearest door, one which led out upon the terrace, and then I quietly fainted away, a thing which I never did before or since. At the moment I recognised the face in the glass as the face of Cecil Byers, that moment the whole circumstances of the strange story Ralph had just told me seemed to rise before me like monsters. I was back in the drawing-room of the sleeping-car again. I was watching in the mirror opposite me that section half way down the car from which I had beheld the palest and loveliest of faces look with anxious eyes. I was recalling the figure of the man I had seen go gliding toward her, and I remembered now, though it had scarcely occurred to me at the time, and never been recalled since, that as I left the car at Twenty-second street, that very section remained shut in by its draping curtains, just as it had all night. Suddenly the awful conviction burst in upon me that Cecil Byers was a murderer, and that I had almost seen him do the deed.

Was it any wonder I fainted? The next day I went with my father before a magistrate and told my story. I had to do it. The angel face of that poor murdered girl haunted me till I did, and would have haunted me till I died, if I had not, for I believe she had been murdered. My story seemed very little when it was told, but when it was proved that I was on the car that very night, or rather morning, on which the dead girl was found, and when I swore positively that it was Cecil Byers I saw go to her berth and come away from it, the matter began to look worthy of investigation.

It was found that Byers had been seen both in Chicago and Detroit before and after that poor girl's death.

He must have scented danger, for he had left Chicago, they found, when they went to arrest him for the murder. They followed him, however, and captured him in New York. He was very bold and defiant at first, but ultimately confessed the cruel deed.

He had met the unfortunate girl out walking, and had persuaded her at last to consent to a secret marriage. She had always been firm enough in her refusal before, but now she had not seen him in a long time, and he was very eloquent, and she did love him, and she was of age. Besides, he promised never to claim her as long as her father lived, unless by his consent; so she yielded. They went on the cars separately, he joining her afterward.

He watched from the upper berth till she fell asleep, and then creeping down, smothered her by holding a plaster of thick wax over her mouth and nostrils. No wonder her eyes wore such a look of agony and horror even in death. When Byers was asked why he killed her, he answered almost coolly:

"I needed the money, and I knew it might be a long time before I got the handling of it if she lived."

"But when she was your wife you could have claimed it."

"Ah, that was just it. She could not be my wife, because I was already married. It was my wife who engaged the section in the sleeping-car for her."

"Where is your wife now?"

"Dead," was the sullen answer, "as she deserved to be."

He deserved to be hung, but he was not. He sickened with some kind of fever in the prison, and died there, without ever having shown much signs of repentance. Such natures as his are incapable of true repentance, I believe.

Too Hasty.

Having been lately quite often cheated by those who advertised with us, we became rather too hasty in being suspicious of the Chicago Ledger Company. Upon inquiry we find that the company is not only wealthy, but that the Ledger has a tremendous circulation, and better still, the company are very gentlemanly. The Ledger is a large-size 48 column literary family paper, and is full of good things every week. The terms of this paper being only one dollar per year, and 15 cents for postage, make it the cheapest weekly paper in the world. Three copies for 10 cents.—Akron (O.) Commercial.

VIRGINIA has a national banking capital of $3,580,913, and pays an internal revenue of $7,343,789. The six New England States have a national banking capital of $160,517,266, and pay only $5,575,554 revenue.

PRE-HISTORIC RELICS.

Interesting Archæological Treasures Unearthed in Iowa.

[From the Davenport Gazette.]

Cook's point, on the river bank just west of the city, bids fair to become renowned as the depository of the most remarkable archæological treasures ever discovered in the Mississippi Valley; and the Davenport Academy of Sciences will soon have extensive fame in connection therewith. It is only some two years ago that that earnest academician, Rev. J. E. Gass, pastor of the First German Lutheran Church, made the grand discovery of copper axes and hatchets—some of them cloth-bound—with pottery and human remains, in one of the mounds on the Cook property; and now the same gentleman has another streak of pre-historic luck, in a "find" that will create a sensation among scientists who are delving after knowledge of the pre-historic man—that is if the articles prove to be of no later origin than the ones lately found of that mysterious yet numerous individual.

As Mr. Gass and Mr. L. H. Wilrodt were exploring a mound, they came upon some small slabs of dark shale, the surfaces of which were covered with yellow clay. These were found near some human bones. On removing the clay, what was their astonishment to find that they had secured pictured rocks of great value. The largest was 12x9 inches, and 1½ inches thick. In rubbing the clay, this slab split in two—and one face of each of the plates of shale were covered with etchings—or rather deep scratches with some metal instrument. One picture represents a scene of sacrifice, evidently. A fire blazing, in the center is a ring; on one side of the blaze is a prostrate human figure, and on the other side are two more beings, all bound, and around the fire and bodies fourteen persons are dancing. In an upper corner is the sun, with long and short rays, opposite is the moon. We are sorry to state that, since this slab has been exposed to the public gaze, persons have tested the shale by scratching it, and thus what was a well-formed face in the moon has been most wholly obscured by scratches. The other represents animals of various kinds—some creeping, some walking, and all much as a little child might draw on a slate. One of the animals is a three-legged monstrosity with a body shaped like a mushroom—it couldn't have been intended for a turtle, as its legs are too long for that. Then there are various circles, with peculiar marks inside. There is a picture of a hunter with bow in hand, he having just shot a deer which lies near him. So it seems the pre-historic man killed deer with bow and arrow, as do the Indians of our era. Another slab, six inches square, shows a series of circles, with twelve figures between each circle—while outside of the outer circle are twelve peculiar figures that are neither human nor animal. The distances between the figures is exactly the same in the margin as is that between the rings. In the center is a small ring from which are marks pointing to the outer signs. This is supposed to be a sort of zodiacal record. Members of the academy who have examined these treasures have no doubt as to their antiquity—in fact the best posted feel convinced that they are of the same age as the copper implements found in mounds which surrounded this one, from which these stone tablets were taken. And we ought to have said before that some of the bones found in the mound are copper-stained, and near them small pieces of copper were found.

It is believed that these tablets will be deposited in their proper receptacle, the cabinet of pre-historic relics in the Academy of Science. Another thing, they ought to be immediately placed where they may be viewed and not handled, for the shale "chips off" easily. Mayhap some skilled person in deciphering hieroglyphics will come along and translate these strange pictures. But they ought not to be taken away from here for that service.

That Monster Sea Serpent.

The London papers have the following concerning the wonderful snake, whose appearance off the coast of Brazil has been recorded.

Yesterday Capt. Drevar, of the ship Pauline, and a number of the crew of that vessel attended before Mr. Raffles, the stipendary magistrate at Liverpool, and made the following declaration:

We, the undersigned officers and crew of the bark Pauline (of London), of Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster, in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, do solemnly and sincerely declare that on July 8, 1875, in latitude 5 deg. 13 min. south, longitude 35 deg. west, we observed three large sperm whales, and one of them was gripped around the body with two turns of what appeared to be a huge serpent. The head and tail appeared to have a length beyond the coils of about thirty feet, and its girth eight or nine feet. The serpent whirled its victim round and round for about fifteen minutes, and then suddenly dragged the whale to the bottom, head first.

Again, on July 13, a similar serpent was seen about 200 yards off, shooting itself along the surface, head and neck being out of the water several feet. This was seen only by the Captain and one ordinary seaman.

A few moments after it was seen elevated some sixty feet perpendicularly in the air by the chief officer and the following seamen; Horatio Thompson, Owen Baker, William Lewarn. And we make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true.

Severally declared and subscribed at Liverpool aforesaid, this 10th day of January, 1877.

Before T. S. Raffles, J. P. for Liverpool.

Signed: Geo. Drevar, Master; Horatio Thompson, John Henderson Landells, Owen Baker, William Lewarn.

A FRENCH railway company at Ivry is building a novel car, to be used on the little railroad between Bayonne and Biarritz. It is of iron, paneled with wood, and will seat ninety-two passengers. It has a baggage-room and a smoking-room, separate compartments for three classes of passengers, and an interior stairway leads to a covered upper story, from which a fine view of the scenery of the route is afforded.

THE PACIFIC COAST.

Its Vast Wealth and Resources—Some Big Figures.

The San Francisco Journal of Commerce, in its review of the past year, gives some interesting items of information. The population of California received during the year an increase by immigration, etc., of 55,000, making the population of the State 900,000, the population of its principal city, San Francisco, being 280,000. The import trade of the State amounted to $80,000,000, the export trade to $50,000,000, and the manufactures to $61,000,000. The tonnage of vessels coming into San Francisco alone amounted to 726,309 tons, and the outward-bound tonnage to 760,770. The yield of gold and silver on the whole Pacific coast has been $100,000,000 for the year, making since the memorable year of 1848 the enormous amount of $1,760,000,000. The wheat crop for the year 1876 is spoken of as worth between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000, the principal wheat lands being in the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys. The wool crop is estimated at 56,000,000 pounds, worth $9,000,000, and the wine crop at 11,600,000 gallons. These several crops are from the State of California, which is only a portion of the great fertile lands to the west of the mountains. The exact returns from other States and Territories are not given, but their capabilities are shown, and rough estimates made of their productions when properly cultivated. These computations are something too enormous to find ready belief from those who have learned to consider the Pacific slope as mainly a field for mining enterprise. For instance, it is calculated that the area of wine-growing lands on the Pacific coast is 30,000,000 acres, which would produce, at a low estimate of value, $6,000,000,000 worth of wine, or twenty times the amount of the whole of the wine crop of France. This, however, is all in the possible future. The estimate of lumber on that coast, from Southern California to Alaska—which, by the way, would include a large strip of British territory—is reckoned at 4,000,000,000,000 feet. The present production of gold is put at $55,000,000, of which California produces $20,000,000; the production of silver being between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000. The Pacific coast at present imports from 250,000 to 350,000 tons of coal per annum, although there are coal veins in the neighborhood. In California the yield of quicksilver is between 60,000 and 70,000 flasks this year, and the Pacific coast has supplied the rest of the United States with from 7,000 to 8,000 tons of lead. There are large quantities of copper on the coast, but, surrounded by more alluring wealth, the veins appear to be left untouched by the inhabitants. While these enormous fields of wealth are inviting population, it appears that immigration during 1876 was 30,000 short of what it was in 1875, and that of the 85,000 people who arrived in the State during the year only 35,000 remained.

Experiments in Gas Suffocation.

An interesting experiment has been tried with the stove in the room in which Mr. Shattuck, of Providence, R. I., was suffocated recently by coal gas. The stove is a retort gas stove. Three pigeons were used in the trial, which began one hour after the gas had been lighted in the stove. The thermometer registered 60 degrees. One of the birds was placed in an open cage suspended from the ceiling so as to hang at about the height of an ordinary-sized man's face, and the others were disposed, one on the bed that had been occupied by Mr. Shattuck, and its mate on the floor. Eight minutes after being incarcerated the pigeon in the cage at the ceiling retired to the corner of its cage, and made but slight movements. When thirty minutes had elapsed this bird was dead, while the birds on the bed and on the floor evinced some uneasiness. At the expiration of forty minutes the bird on the bed became motionless. The bird on the floor lived five hours. It was then placed in the cage, and expired in half an hour.—Boston Herald.

Destitution in St. Louis.

The following pitiful story is told by the St. Louis Republican: "A couple of days since, a female teacher in one of our district schools in the northwestern portion of the city sent word to the parents of a boy, complaining of his restlessness and inattention during school hours. The mother of the boy called at the school-room and stated that her boy had not eaten a mouthful of victuals on the morning of the day on which the complaint was made, nor a mouthful of supper the previous night. Furthermore, the woman made the rather remarkable and painful statement that two-thirds of the children in the school had scarcely anything to eat on account of the poverty of their parents, and were sent to the school for the purpose of keeping warm, as in many cases the parents were not only destitute of food, but failed to keep up a fire. It is stated that, on these instances of destitution coming to light, a meeting was held and a committee appointed to solicit subscriptions for the relief of the destitute parents of the children."

The Fearful Ride of a Tramp.

He boarded a train at Omaha, and, after having been ejected from several trains, he reached Green river, in Wyoming. Here the train men became more vigilant, and the dead-head saw that he must find a secure hiding place. Accordingly, while the train men were busy, he crawled into the fire-box of a stationary engine that was standing on a flat car, and which was going through to San Francisco. Soon after the train started some one shut the engine door, and the man was a prisoner. He could not sit down, and could barely turn around, and in this way he rode for four days and nights, without a mouthful of food or drink, excepting a few crackers he had in his pockets. When the train arrived at Verdi, Nevada, a distance of nearly 900 miles from Green river, he attracted the attention of the conductor by scratching on the inside of the engine with his finger nails. He was liberated almost dead with cold and hunger.—Truckee Republican.

MAKING EYES.

So many things a girl can make
I cannot fathom why
So few can turn us out a cake,
Or make an apple pie.
Because they can make, galore,
Fair bouquets, wreaths, and ties;
But they delight in something more,
And that is "making eyes."

A girl can make a man a fool—
See history for that—
Can make a dress by fashion's rule,
Or trim a dainty hat,
But oft—from gaping crowds apart—
I've pondered with surprise
On this; her rarest, dearest art,
You know, is "making eyes."

A woman makes the moments fly,
She makes the cash fly, too;
For husbands say she makes them buy
Whatever comes in view.
But this I know, O modern belle—
It is no vain surmise—
The art in which you most excel
Is that of "making eyes."

BOSTON advertisements of 1808: "Much wanted—a neat, well behaved female, to do kitchen work in a small family at Charlestown, near Boston. She may pray and sing hymns, but not over the fish-kettle; may go to meeting, but not to believe in the divinity of Elias Smith; nor belong to the whining congregation of midnight worshipers. Enquire at the Repertory office, near Boston."

THEY all happened to meet one another at the corner. In silence, and with a gravity savoring of sadness, they simultaneously touched their hats and extended their hands. A move was made on a neighboring bar-room and, looking into one another's eyes, they drained without a word, the last of the rosy. When it was asked who they were, the only response that came was, "We were not nominated."

JUST LIKE HIMSELF.—"Why doesn't this fire keep up?" asked a husband pettishly, as he pranced around half dressed, and furtively poked the stove-grate, late one bitter morning. "It's so much like you!" piped out his wife, from her warm bed. "Like me!" exclaimed he, stopping in his work. "How so?" "Because," said she, roguishly, "it will go out nights!" He only mumbled something to himself, and returned to his work.

The Printing Business.

Rowell's Newspaper Reporter and Printers' Gazette confirms other evidence in reporting the newspaper and printing business in New York city at its very lowest ebb. Never a year, it says, in the memory of the oldest printer has the business been more unprofitable; the circulation and advertising patronage of the newspapers have fallen off alarmingly; not one of the large book and job offices has even a fair supply of work; competition was never so active, and prices are absurdly low. There are now in the city 500 printers out of work, and, though the nominal prices for piece-work range from 40 to 45 cents a thousand, many offices pay but 30 cents, and weekly wages range from $15 and $16 to $18 and $19, and first-class Adams pressmen are down to $20. The country printing offices, as a rule, we think, are in better condition than this; certainly the year 1876 was an average good one with them for hard times; but we fear 1877 is to borrow its quality from the present condition of things in the cities.—Springfield Republican.

CANCELING POSTAGE STAMPS.

Some Devices Which the Postoffice Department Has Tried.

[Washington Cor. New York World.]

Every year in something over 30,000 offices the Postoffice Department cancels a thousand million postal stamps of one sort and another. It was really a little more than this last year—1,049,797,507—but a few thousand more or less make small difference. The thousand million give work enough. One third the stamped envelopes and the postal cards cancel themselves, in a sense. No one can use them twice. The stamps nobody has been able to cancel fairly and completely, and within the past month the department closed two years of experiment no wiser than it began. No one has got past the pad, the stamp and the printer's ink with which the department began thirty years ago and which it uses still. Down in one corner of the Postoffice building there is a room full of some 400 or 500 fruitless inventions. A new ink is generally the stronghold of canceling genius, and to the fat inks—printer's—and metallic inks—writing fluid—the three principal acids, caustic potash and a drug-shop of other chemicals have been added by genius at work on a letter-stamp. There is sulphuric acid ink there which came from Cincinnati, warranted to cancel a stamp, and which eats a hole through the envelope into the bargain. There is one of caustic potash, backed by a distinguished chemist, which blisters a man's fingers at touch and has its effects on the glass bottle which holds it. Nitric acid is at the bottom of another ink, and fills the air as it is used with the fumes familiar to laboratories. All these inks do too much. Most of them do too little. Your average inventor never tests his invention. A shelf full of inks—warranted to stand acids—have been washed clean and dry from canceled stamps with ordinary soap at the wash-stand in the corner. One such ink a man brought a precious bottle of from St. Louis. Was doubtful about trusting the bottle out of sight, for fear of losing his "secret." Saw some stamps canceled with it in his sight by Mr. Hasen, in charge, and the stamps washed clean ten minutes after with soap and water. Of the whole bottled array of inks not one has stood the acids and the alkalis of the Patent Office chemist. Last on the list is his ink; a Smithsonian chemist settled him, and the department still uses printers' ink of the best quality. No one improves on that.

There are other ways to cancel stamps by genuine cancellæ. They have all been invented—a good many separate times. People in small offices have invented hooks to harrow the surface of the stamp. That takes too much time. In a large office a single motion from pad to letter must dispose of stamp and postmark. Men with a vague idea of this have put together an elastic stamp, which jabs a stamp full of holes. A little steam and a flat-iron smoothes that. And there is one ingenious contrivance which brings a disc down with a half-turn at the stamping—a slanting slot does the work—and rips half the features off G. W. or Franklin. Somewhere along the ten-thousandth letter this dulls and takes a blow like a sledge-hammer to do its work. The New York office cancels 200,000,000 stamps a year, and the New York clerk takes more kindly to the firm, light tap of a wooden stamp. No invention has displaced that any more than the ink.

Golden Jubilee of Pope Pius IX.

Preparations on a grand and extensive scale are being made by the Catholics all over the world, to celebrate, by a great and imposing religious demonstration, the approaching golden jubilee of Pope Pius IX. Two columns of pilgrims will start from America—one from the United States, under the charge of the Xavier Union of New York city, and the other of Irish Catholics from Montreal. The latter will visit the celebrated grotto of Lourdes on the way. Fifty years ago, some next 21st of May, the present Pope was called to the Archbishopric of Spoleto, and this anniversary of his preconization is to be celebrated with all the pomp and pageantry of the Romish Church. The Pope will hold audience in the Vatican, and the Roman aristocracy, the Catholic youth of Italy and foreign deputations will take part in the ceremonies. Cardinal McCloskey, of New York, has called upon the faithful of his jurisdiction to contribute to a testimonial which will worthily show "their affection and homage for the Holy Father." This testimonial, and other presents and donations, will be exposed in a hall of the papal palace on the occasion of the celebration. On June 3d next, the anniversary of the Pope's consecration, another grand religious festival will take place, this time in the basilica of St. Peter in Chains, that being the church where he was consecrated. The Pope is now 85 years old, and very feeble. He may not live to the day of his golden jubilee, but if he does it is safe to say that no event in the later history of the church will be celebrated with more extravagant rejoicings and solemn services than this anniversary of the Holy Father, who has now occupied the Pontifical chair longer than any of his predecessors.

A Strange Story.

The New York Herald publishes a most remarkable story, of which the following are the main facts: Elizabeth Mary Sanxay was born in Mulberry street, in 1827, and was married in 1841 to her cousin, Louis Gordon Keith, a naval Captain in the United States service. On the death of her husband she remained in Baltimore under the care of her cousin, Archbishop Eggleston, who placed her in supervision of St. Vincent's Asylum for Orphans on First street in that city. A year later Mrs. Keith and her infant daughter were kidnapped and conducted by one Lovegrow to the Mount Hope Lunatic Asylum, where the mother was forcibly detained for seven years, being mourned as dead by her relatives. She finally regained her liberty through the interference of Archbishop Hendricks, and returned to her father in this city. In search of health she went to Williamsburg, Va., where she was again kidnapped and confined in a lunatic asylum for eighteen years. She was finally liberated by a military commission, appointed by Maj. Gen. Hancock, by which she was pronounced sane. Even then she was detained on various pretexts for some months, but was finally restored to her brother, R. Ealby Sanxay, who had been informed of her existence.

A GLITTERING TITLE.

The Citizens of the Black Hills Ask for a New Territory.

The white inhabitants of the Black Hills now number some ten thousand. Living in a chaotic state, with no laws to protect them and their capital save the prompt law of brute force, they are begining to manifest a desire to come to some understanding with the Federal authorities concerning a government such as the people of other Territories enjoy. At the present time their situation is peculiar, inasmuch as under Territorial laws and Indian treaties they are virtually without representation either in National or Territorial affairs. In fact, by the Sioux treaty of 1868 they are interlopers, to whom the Government at Washington is not bound to afford the slightest protection. The miners, however, claim that they are not trespassers, as the later treaty of 1872, by which the Black Hills country was set apart as an Indian reservation, was never ratified by Congress. Failing in an attempt to come under the Government and laws of Dakota, they have now held an election and appointed Dr. C. W. Meyer, one of the editors of the Black Hills Pioneer, to first represent them at Yankton, the capital of Dakota, and then proceed to Washington and lay their wants and wishes before Congress. They will ask to have the country extending from the 101½ to the 107th degree of longitude, and from the 43d to the 47th degree of latitude, embracing about 80,000 square miles, erected into a new Territory, to be known as Eldorado. The Black Hills proper only contain about 40,000 square miles, but the new settlers have an eye to agricultural as well as mining pursuits. To the northwest of the Black Hills country is a district as finely timbered as any in the world. Red and white ash, pine, spruce, cedar and oak are very plentiful. It is a rich agricultural land and capable of raising all kinds of vegetables. The Belle Fourche, Spearfish and other streams abound with fish of several species, while beyond the foot-hills no man considered a lunatic who cannot kill three or four deer and elk in a day.

It seems to be now well understood that every gulch in the hills is rich in gold to a greater or less degree, and nothing but the protection of a stable government and the introduction of hydraulic machinery is needed to make the new Territory worthy of its chosen name—Eldorado. Dr. Meyer says: "The quartz formations have puzzled the oldest miners in the West as well as some of the foremost scientific men in the country. All the theories of the past have been that clearly-defined walls are necessary to protect the precious metal by nature's supreme law. All our quartz is conglomerate in character, and instead of going in veins is built up in mountains, and seems to have been located in the present shape when in a soft, lava-like state. It all contains free gold in greater or less quantities. I have picked specimens that would pay $1.50 an ounce. From eight ounces I have extracted $5, $4.10 from seven ounces, and $2.40 from ten ounces of this conglomerate rock. We have the quartzite that contains free gold, but in minute, floury particles. The gold districts of the Black Hills are Deadwood, Whitewood, Custer, Bear and Sand gulches, which form the boundary lines of a large area where gold abounds on every hand."

The silver districts are Custer, Bear Buttes and False Bottom. The supply is considered inexhaustible, and the doctor declares that he has known the galena ore to assay $830 per ton. The ore contains a small quantity of arsenic, but not sufficient to render its working detrimental, and is easily reducible, even by the most crude method.

Should Congress refuse to organize the Territory of Eldorado, then the people will ask to become a part of Wyoming, as their interests are more nearly identified with those of the citizens of that Territory than with these of Dakota.

A New View of Hard Times.

A singular reason is now given for the hard times which are pressing so heavily upon all the civilized countries of the world. It is alleged that they are largely caused by labor-saving machinery, the Pacific railroad, the Suez canal, ocean steam navigation, and the electric telegraph.

The London Economist—a high authority—recently stated, in support of this nove theory, that the tonnage of the sailing crafts thrown out of employment by the opening of the Suez canal reaches the enormous figure of 2,000,000. That would be 2,000 vessels averaging 1,000 tons each. It is stated that the time and expense of transacting East India business in Europe has been reduced four fifths by the Suez canal, steam navigation and the telegraph. Corresponding reductions have been made in the time and expense of transacting the commercial business of the globe, the Pacific railroad having done for the new world what the Suez canal has done for the old.

The merchant in London, New York or Paris can now order goods by telegraph, as he wants them from any part of the commercial world, and the regularity of steam communication enables him to depend upon their arrival within a certain time. This renders unnecessary the vast accumulations of goods in the chief commercial cities, with their warehouses and trains of employes, which have hitherto entailed such an enormous expense upon commerce.

Owing to all these changes, and to the productiveness of labor-saving machinery, hundreds of thousands of people have been thrown out of employment, and a general dislocation of business affairs has occurred. But a re-adjustment of all these matters is now rapidly going on, and when everthing shall be once more got into good running order the benefits of all these changes will be felt in every channel of trade.

A WESTERN clergyman's wife received thirty-six sugar spoons from different persons as Christmas presents. They hadn't a pound of sugar in the house as she counted up the spoons.

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

Wonderful Restoration of a Paralytic Through its Influence.

The Chicago Tribune gives an account of a lady, Mrs. Janette M. Robinson, living in that city, who had for years been in a paralyzed condition from the effects of a fall, being restored to full health and strength through the medium of prayer. The lady was visited by a representative of the Tribune, and the following is given as her story:

The extent of the paralysis was such that when they stuck needles in my flesh it had no effect on me whatever, and I wouldn't have known they were doing it if I hadn't seen them. Well, it was getting on towards the end of the seventh year of my paralysis, when one day, the 24th of July, 1874—how well I remember it!—I was feeling quite badly, I knew I wasn't getting any better, and I began to think that I was just entering upon the eighth year, and I was just as I was before. I was reading, I remember, in the twenty-first chapter of Matthew, and I stopped at this verse: "All things whatsoever ye ask and pray, believing, ye shall receive." That is just as it reads. I stopped right there. It struck me so forcibly—that passage did—that I couldn't read any more. I thought God just said these words, and I laid hold on them. I thought God could help me. After I read that passage and studied on it, I then thought I should pray to God for help, because He says He will give it; and I thought I would wrestle till morning in prayer, in imitation of Jacob, to see what the Lord would do for me. I prayed mentally that He might restore my health, and I made up my mind that I would pray all night, as Jacob did, and maybe I would get the blessing before morning. After I had decided on that point, as I was sitting in the chair, I felt such a strong impression to kneel and pray. I was still praying in my mind, for I could not talk, but I did'nt obey the first call. The impression, however, became so strong the second time—much stronger than the first—to kneel and pray, that I thought it was a call from God, just as Samuel was called. I felt that God called me. I never felt such an impression before. I went to the foreside of the bed, took my crutch, and pulled the pillows on the floor, and kneeled down on them. I said just as Samuel said, "Lord, here am I. What wilt thou have me do?" Then I prayed that the Lord might remove my affliction and restore me to health. All this time I prayed in my mind, but all at once the blessing came. My jaws gave such a snap, and my tongue gave a leap. My jaws snapped as though they had been broken, and so loud that you could hear it in the next room. The strange thrill went all through me, right down to my toes. The first thing I heard was the sound of a voice in the room. I knew there was no one in it but myself, but still I heard a voice. I opened my eyes to see who was in the room, and I found I was all alone. I still heard the voice, and I put my hand up and put it right in between my teeth, and I found that it was indeed my own voice, and that it was repeating the Lord's prayer. When I felt that my prayer was answered, I remembered that I was asking for the blessing, and it had come. I felt that all the contracted muscles and the jaws and tongue gave way, so that I could talk and praise God for his goodness to me. Every nerve and muscle seemed to feel touched with the divine power that imparted strength and activity to every organ in my whole system. It continued so, and found I could talk as well as ever. When I felt that the Lord had heard me, that my message had reached His heavenly mind, and had brought down the blessing, I laid my head on the bed and wept for joy as I thought of what He had done for me. Then I arose from my knees and went across the room, almost to the door of the next room, before I felt that I had no crutch or cane to support me.

Finding that I was alone, I stopped, and saw that my hand, which had before this been turned in by the paralysis, as well as my limb, was straight, and I could open my hand freely, and I walked right along into the other room to see the woman that used to come in and see me. She had been in a little while before, but I had felt so badly that I couldn't talk to her. I now walked in and called her by name, and as soon as she saw me she couldn't walk a step; she was so perfectly overcome with wonder that she couldn't move or speak. She said to me, "What has happened to you?" and I told her to come and see what the Lord had done for me. She came in, and I showed her my limb, my arm, my teeth, my tongue, and I could talk just as well as she could. I frightened the woman so much that she was just as still as a ghost. I then walked across the street to my neighbors and told them what had happened, repeating to them the Lord's prayer. They were as much overcome at hearing me speak as the woman had been. And they all wept, just as I did, for joy.

Savage Warfare in South America.

A letter to the Panama Star and Herald, dated Palmira, Jan. 3, says: "On Dec. 18 it was reported that the Conservatives intended to rise in the cities of Cali, Palmira and other places. On the 20th they attacked the city of Cali, overpowered a small guard at Cuartel, freed the political prisoners, and succeeded in organizing a force of about 300 men, badly armed, and began to prepare for resistance. Before many days, however, the Liberals surrounded Cali with a force of about 2,000 to 3,000, and on the 24th attacked the Conservatives, who tried to defend themselves for a time, but soon succumbed. The Liberals were exasperated, believing the Conservatives had abused the confidence which had been placed in them. Therefore Gen. Pena, the leader of the Liberal force at Cali, gave orders that no prisoners should be taken alive, and that the town should be delivered over to the troops. The consequence of it was that every Conservative that was caught, with or without arms, was cut down. The houses were sacked, all the furniture destroyed, and all other kinds of outrages committed. All the storerooms and warehouses of merchandise disappeared. Foreigners shared the same fate as the natives. It is reported that the number of killed reached 300, including women and children. Dr. Vincenti Borzero, aged 70, one of Colombia's earliest Presidents, was shot down. The town of Palmira was threatened, but escaped by paying a heavy ransom. President Parra issued a proclamation declaring that peace negotiations in Antioquia have failed, and war, as the only means of reducing the rebellion, is an unavoidable necessity."

Bad Times in England.

I never recollect the time when the domestic trade of England was in so depressed and wretched a state as it is now. Go where you will, and ask whom you will, and you will hear the same thing. "There is nothing doing; we think ourselves lucky if we can pay our expenses." As for the demand from the United States for English goods, it seems to be almost a thing of the past. The great steamers go out from Liverpool and London in ballast, week after week.—London Cor. New York World.

CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION!
and wants the one that was planned before the opening of the Fair and required the labor of my large corps of Artists, Photographers, Engravers and Draughtsmen for ten months to execute the illustrations, every one of which was made expressly for this work. This is the only History yet written, and in it are only authentic illustrations giving a complete panorama of the Exposition from its inception to its close—pictures of active life within the Centennial Grounds—Art Exhibits surrounded by visitors, giving at once a correct idea of dimensions by comparison—State Days and their attendant pageantry—Character sketches true to life—in fact, such a vivid portraiture as gives the reader a perfect knowledge of all branches of the Exhibition.
Every one on seeing specimen pages and prospectus of Frank Leslie's Historical Register
OF THE Centennial Exposition!
involuntarily expresses a desire to possess it—the secret of the extraordinary success of our Agents, who universally pronounce it the easiest book to sell they ever handled. 20, 30 and 50 subscribers a day are reported from scores of Agents. The book contains 338 mammoth pages, equal to 1,842 octavo pages, and would make three such books as are announced as Centennial Histories, etc., 600 pp. Our 1,188 exquisite Engravings cover a surface equal to 1,284 full octavo pages. In fact, our work is equal in size to three 8vo. books of 600 pp., with 451 full-page illustrations in each, and printed on paper three times the weight and cost used in ordinary octavo books.

The Enemy of Disease, the Foe of Pain to Man and Beast,
Is the Grand Old
MUSTANG LINIMENT,
WHICH HAS STOOD THE TEST OF 40 YEARS. THERE IS NO SORE IT WILL NOT HEAL, NO LAMENESS IT WILL NOT CURE, NO ACHE, NO PAIN, THAT AFFLICTS THE HUMAN BODY, OR THE BODY OF A HORSE OR OTHER DOMESTIC ANIMAL, THAT DOES NOT YIELD TO ITS MAGIC TOUCH. A bottle, costing 25c., 50c. or $1.00, has often saved the life of a human being, and restored to life and usefulness many a valuable horse.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES.

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on the increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent, (even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

TEAS! TEAS!

The reduction of 10 per cent has placed teas so low that now they are as cheap as before the war We have a good tea at 25 cents and the very best Gunpowder or Young Hyson at 65 and 90 cents.

To our citizens and the traveling public, we would say that this is the popular resort at Waterloo. First door south of the railroad.

The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad Company has settled with the widow of one of the victims of the Ashtabula bridge horror by the payment of $5,175, and other claims will now, doubtless pour in on them.

The protracted meeting at this place has closed. Ten additions to the Methodist church were made during their progress.—Garrett News.

Rev. J. W. Welch, of Auburn, conducted the meeting above spoken of, and deserves much credit.

Skilling is a literary "cuss." Why don't he write a book and publish it in the Auburn Courier. | Garrett News.

We have the facilities for doing that kind of work Bro. Parker, and will knock off one third on the price to Mr. Skilling sould he desire a book published.

A vicious cow made dash at a small boy in the court yard on Friday, but luckily the boy succeded in getting out of her way. We do not know whose cow it was, but this movement showed that she is too dangerous to run at large on the streets. The owner should attend to keeping her out of the streets.—New Era.

He was a pious insurance agent—one of those fellows who always has the tender side of their soul on the tips of their fingers. He wanted to insure the life of a widow lady in one of the best companies in the world. He called the name of the company. Suddenly the lady remembered she had read of the company's bankruptcy and surprised told the agent. Piety at once vanished and he struck out with a d—n.

We understand there is a man in this town whose business is, selling countefeit money and dealing in many other spurious operations. He furnibes bogus money for 20 cents on the dollar. The country is full of thieves, burglars, counterfeiters and bad men. People should look out and always be on their guard for such fellows.—Garrett News.

It would be well for the people of this and other places to be on their guard, and if occasion permits, make short work of such persons.

As we passed a grocery the other day, we heard the following remark from a lady:

"Mr. ——, I cannot make any use of that sugar I bought here the other day for this reason. There wasn't enough sugar for table use and not enough sand for plastering purposes, therefore I cannot make any use of it."

The clerk gave back the ten cents she paid for it and she went off rejoicing.

The Goshen Democrat: We have recently been told of a strange noise that was heard while the last burial ceremonies of a prominent citizen were taking place at the cemetry early in the fall. While the casket was being lowered into the grave, or immediately after, it is said that a rumbling, muffled noise was heard to seemingly issue from the grave. Some say it was a kind of a growling noise like is heard from wild animals in a menagerie. Whether it is all the imagination or not, it has excited the curiosity of quite a number of our citizens.

State School Commissioner Smart has issued a call for the meeting of the National Teachers' Association at Washington, March 1, 2, and 3. The following subjects have been arranged for consideration: "Organization of an educational museum and the provision of plans and means for its operation," further consideration of "Plans for publications connected with and growing out of the centennial." "The proportion of popular education in the south," "the proposed reduction of salaries," and "The relation of secondary instruction of high schools to the public schools."

We are informed that Miss Cowan of Columbus, Ohio, the accomplished daughter of Hon W. Cowan, of that city and sister to W. W. Cowan, the attorney of the Balimore & Ohio R. R., has in contemplation a visit to Angola in compliance with the earnest desire of a number of our best citizens to hear her upon the rostrum. Miss Cowan has gained no little celebrity as one of the most accomplished readers in the west, and her rendition of some of her selections has drawn the praise and commendation of many of the best cities of the country. We certainly shall be pleased to have the privilege of hearing Miss Cowan and to have the citizens of Angola enjoy the advantages of a visit from her. It is to be hoped that prompt steps may be taken to have Miss Cowan come as soon as protracted meetings now being held in our church shall close, and a proper opportunity can be afforded by the public for such a visit.—Steuben Republican.

The people of Angola would be well repaid for their trouble should they succeed in securing the accomplished Miss Cowan, we have attended one of her readings, therefore do not speak from heresay, but of what we know.

RENARKABLE FECNUDITY.

William Gochenour, who resides near Bourbon, was married nearly ten years ago—but not quite. During this time his wife has presented him with ten children, all alive and doing well; or, at least, they were a few days ago. The first six were twins, and came into the world a pair at a time. The other four came trooping along after, one at a time; but the idea of being parents of ten children in less than ten years, shows a fecundity on the part of the good woman that is, to say the least, remarkable.—Indianian.

Pshaw, Reub, thats nothing, we know of a couple in Port Huron, who have been married nine years, and have twelve children, tripplets twice. Pass it around, the first man ain't no where in this country.

News-paper advertising offers such facilities for addressing all clases from which customers would be likely to be attracted, that it is now recognized by business men having faith in their own wares as the best of all possible salesmen—one who never sleeps and is never weary—who goes after buisness early and late—who accosts the merchant in his store, the mechanic in his workshop, the lawyer in his office, the student in his study, the cultivated woman at the family fireside—and who can be in a thousand places at once, speak to a million people each day, saying to each one the best thing in the best manner.

The above is clipped from the Plymouth Republican. We recommend it as a sure cure for hard times.

When anybody dies, gets married, runs away, steals anything, builds a house, makes a big sale, whips her man—or his wife—breaks his leg, or gets the stuffin' kicked out of him by a mule, or does anything that is in any way remarkable, and you believe that you know as much about the occurence as anybody else, don't wait for some other man to report it, or trust us to find it out by instinct, but write and send us an account of it, or come and tell us about it the first time you come to town. This is the way news is supplied, and it takes a good supply of that necessary article to make a good paper.—See if you can't improve this year, and let us know all the news of your neighborhood.

Bridegroms will take notice of the following which we clip from an exchange: "The length, vigor and mental labor that accompanies a marriage notice is regulated by the amount the groom sends to the printer. For instance a dollar bill will get a few well chosen lines commorative of the event, two dollars will secure a better notice, but we let ourselves out when the happy groom, in the exuberance of his feelings, sends us a $5 note. Some of the finest writing that we have ever cone has been brought out under this last stimulus. Besides it's fashionable price every where!" We, too, are susceptible of inspiration under a like stimulus.

The above taken from the New Era hit us like a hot "slap-jack" on a frosty morning. Who couldn't, write better with his eye resting on that V lying before hime. W could spin out a yarn longer than the Atlantic Cable. You young chaps in a matrimonial state of mind, give us a trial on that five dollar business.

Hymn-Singing —Commodore Vanderbilt was a sharp, clear, hard, business man, who made a great railroad convenient, comfortable, safe, and sure for the public, which ought to be grateful for what he did. He sang hymns at the last, and doubtless with sincere emotion. But probably there was not much singing of hymns during the characterisitic transactions of his life. "I am glad he liked the hymns," said Mr. Beecher: "But if he had sung them thirty years ago, it would have made a great difference. He did not sing hymns as long as he could get about." The preacher drew a comparison between the deaths of the Commodore and Mr. Bliss, the hymn-writer and preacher, who perished in the terrible Ashtabula catastrophe. He said, indeed, that it was not fair to compare the obscure sweet singer of Israel with the famous railway king. But as a Christian moralist he felt that he ought to say how much greater a work in the world the singer seemed to him to have done.

He did not sing hymns as long as he could get about. It is true of very many more of us than the Commodore. But it is pleasant to think of those who do, of the men and women who, having no ear for music, are yet singing hymns all the time; of lives that, poor and obscure and lonley, are as sweet and inspiring as the loftiest hymns. "Be a good man, my dear," said Walter Scott to his son, as he died. He did not say, be famous, be successful, be conspicuous, be rich. To sing hymns, too, is well; but there is something better; for the one thing of which in this life we may be sure is that a good life is perpetual Te Deum.—Editor's Easy Chair, in Harper's Magazine for March.

Politics and Collection Plates.

Recently a radical, who is also a Preacher, tackled 'old Uncle Remus on the subject of politcs.

'I understand, old man,' said he, 'that you are a Democrat.'

'I dunno' bout dat boss.'

'Well it comes pretty straight.'

'I know dey got two sides, one what dey call Demmycrat an' de udder what dey call Radikel, but I don't bodder wid 'em w'en de wedder git as stiff as dis.'

'But I hear you vote the Democratic ticket every time.'

'I wote wid my young master what I nussed w'en he want no bigger dan a buck rabbit.'

'Now, dont you know that this is going back on your color.'

But hit aint gwine back on my belly, an' of I don't tend ter dat de fus' cole rain dat come 'long mout wash de right outen me. I ain't takin' no chances in dis bizness, boss. I'm a gettin' ole, an' de ol'er I gets de hungrier I gets—Iiduz for a fac'.'

'Look at me. I vote the Republican ticket, and I'm not losing any of my flesh.'

You sorter preaches 'round like, don't you, boss?'

'Sometimes. Yes. Why?'

'Caze date whar de fun comes in. I don't get no chance for ter feed outen no beaver hat, an' I don't eat offen no plates what dey [illegible] up church kleckshuns in. I'm a mighty lonesome ole nigger, an' I has ter scuffle 'long de bes' I kin, widout enny congregashun at my back.'

The preacher looked at his watch, and said that he would talk some more another day, while Uncle Remus, with a serene smile upon his face, went down the street singing:

Oh! whar shill we go w'en de great day comes
Wid de blowin' uv de trumpets an de bangin' uv de horns?
How manny poor sinners will be cotched out late
An' fine no latch on the golden gate?

He Proved It.

A lengthy, round-shouldered man named Abraham Dix came out with a prompt "not guilty" on the end of his tougue.

"Not guilty of what?" asked his Honor.

"Of anything, sir. I'll defy any human being to pint out a mean act in my life I came to Michigan when it was a howling wilderness, and I've tended right to business ever since. I've growed up here, and every body knows I'm XXX and as good as the wheat."

"At eleven o'clock last night," mildly remarked his Honor, "you halted on Monroe Avenue, pulled off your coat and flung it down, slapped your vest on the walk, rolled up your sleeves, and you were about to attack a pedestrian when the officer interfered. It's a very plain story the officer tells.'

'Judge, were you ever vacinated?' asked Dix, while a grin spread all over his face.

'I have been.'

'And do you remember how the blamed thing itched and burned and buzzed till you almost yelled out?'

The court nodded in a distant manner.

'That's just what ailed me,' continued the prisoner. This arm got to itching and taking on till I got my back up and was bound to get my nails on that spot, if I had to stand in my stocking-feet.'

'Can you prove that you have a vaccination sore on your arm?'

'Can I prove it! just hold on!'

His coat came off in hurry and up went his shirt-sleeve, till a great red spot as big as a California pear stood out to view.

'Put on your coat and go,' said the court, and Abraham Dix made a chuckling noise in his throat as he backed out.

Chased by a Ghost.

[By Theophilus Jones.]

Holy Writ prophesied that there was a time coming when old men should dream dreams, and young men see visions; and are happy to say the time is at hand. Our friend John L——g, saw a vision or something else, and furthermore was chased by "it." "We will to you the tale unfold," a tale that will make every hair on your head stand on end. But listen to me tale of horror. It was but a few nights ago that it came to pass, as the servant man of John, whose sir name is Long, had passed from within the house, he saw, as it were, a light, not natural to this common earth. Straightway he betook himself into his masters house and told John what he had seen, who forthwith with all his household hastened to the door to behold the supernatural phenonenon. Some thought it was a devise of the evil one, but John, wise beyond his time, saw that in it was not evil to him and his house, but good. He straightway lifted up his voice and told his servants to pass into the house They were all gathered togather and numbered, and both old and young men, and such as were men of valor and renown, and men, such as fine workers in railroad wood. He had two souls to seek to gladden his soul. He caused himself to be made captain of this goodly army and told them how one time as he was returning from Cedar [illegible] in the woods, hard by Stonestreet, and that it was revealed unto him that there was much riches hidden there, but for fear of the wrath to come, prevented him from approaching the mystic spot. He tried to prevailed on one Amons, to go with him to the enchanted spot, but he being an officer of state, did not deem it consistant with his official position to meddle with spiritual things, and as John ceased speaking he commanded his servants to be brave and fearless, and not to doubt but that he would bring them back to their own country again, but George, a fine worker in rails, laid hold on a weapon and secreted it about his garments. John told his servants to move forward. They went on until they approached quite near the spirit haunted woods. John not feeling well, placed himself in the rear of his servants, and commanded them to approach very silent, it being about the third hour of the night the spirits were not fully awake yet, and they might secure the treasure without fear or molestation. Then with fear and trembling past up to the place to ascertain if there were sekels secreted there. But as they came near the monster appeared to them. John beheld the sight with fear and horror, and his soul almost died within him, as he thus gazed, the phantom seemed to draw to him, and with a shriek turned and fled, the phantom in hot persuit. As he thus ran he drew near the highway, called Eel River, and fled. He approached a bridge over which he thought to pass quickly, but not so. As he passed over the phantom gained on him wonderfully and as he ran he looked behind him and saw that the phantom was drawing near him. He turned off of the highway that leads to Logansport and sought a nearer route to his house, and as he came to the creek, called Cedar, saw that the water was very deep, for as he ran into the brook he disappeared With much splattering reached the other shore and hastened on that the evil spirit might not lay hands on him and that he might escape with his life. He at last reached the house and a great joy filled his soul to think he was again permitted to cross the threshold of his house alive. As he stood by the fire he began to ask himself many foolish question, as "how in the world he got wet," and "if he really saw a ghost, etc." He remembered that he had not seen his servants since they had fled, and a great fear took hold on John to think that his servants was no more, and he had escaped with his life. As he thus thought, behold his servants entered, and there was great rejoicing in that house. John asked the boys how they stood the racket, and they said they escaped by the skin of their teeth." George winked at the fine carver of rialroad wood, while John stood shivering at the fire, nearly used up, and as he stood warming the rear extremity of his coat, the thing that had pursued him drew near the house and looked into the window. The light from the house fell upon the countenance of one of his nearest neighbors. Being filled with mischief he secured a sheet and a lamp, which he hanged into a tree and the sheet he wound around himself, then hid himself in the brush. John did not go very near his wicked neighbor, and smite him under his coat-tail until it was a burden for the unrighteous one to assume a sitting position.

The rest of the acts of John are not written in the books of "Fox's Martyrs" and every mans hand is raised against the neighbor. By day, he is hid like a fox, in his hole, and by night, like a troubled spirit, he wondereth from place to place. Let the unrighteous profit by reading this mans fate.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St, Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables, routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

"OUT OF THE MOUTH OF BABES."

My little niece and I—I read
  My Plato in my easy chair;
And she was building on the floor
  A pack of cards with wondrous care.

We worked in silence, but alas!
  Among the cards a mighty spill,
And then the little one exclaimed,
  "Well! Such is life! Look, Uncle Will!"

I gave a start and dropped my book—
  It was "Phædo" I had read—
A sympathetic current thrilled
  Like lightning through my heart and head.

I eyed with curious awe the child,
  The unconscious sibyl, where she sat,
Whose thoughtless tongue could babble forth
  Strange parables of life and fate.

Yes, such is life! a Babel house,
  A common doom hath tumbled all,
King, Queen and Knave, and plain, and trump,
  A motley crew in motley fall!

We rear our houses as Pharaoh's tomb,
  Nor brass could build so sure a name;
Yet, soon or late, a sad collapse,
  And great the ruin of the same.

Ah, such is life! Oh, sad and strange
  That Love and Wisdom so ordain!
Some ere the Builder's hand have yet
  One card against another lain;

Some when the house is tiny still;
  Some when you've built a little more;
And some when patience hath achieved
  A second, third, or higher floor.

Or should you win the topmost stage,
  Yet is the strength but toil and pain—
And here the tiny voice rejoined,
  "But I can build it up again."

My height of awe was reached. Can babes
  Behold what reason scans in vain?
Ah, childhood is divine, I thought—
  Yes, Lizzie, build it up again!

THE IRISH LEAR.

BY CHARLES READE.

There is a legend almost as old as Lear, of a father whom his children treated as Goneril and Regan treated Lear; but he suffered and survived, and his heart turned bitter instead of breaking. Of this prose Lear the story is all over Europe, and, like most old stories, told vilely. To that, however, there happens to be one exception, and the readers of this collection shall have the benefit of it.

In a certain part of Ireland, a long time ago, lived a wealthy old farmer whose name was Brian Taafe. His three sons, Guillaum, Shamus, and Garrett worked [illegible]. The old man had a great [illegible] them all, and, finding himself growing unfit for work, he resolved to hand his farm over to them, and sit quiet by the fireside. But, as that was not a thing to be done lightly, he thought he would just put them to the trial. He would take the measure of their affection. Proceeding in this order he gave them each £100, and quietly watched to see what they did with it.

Well, Guillaum and Shamus put their £100 out at interest, every penny; but when the old man questioned Garrett as to where his £100 was, the young man said: "I spent it, father."

"Spent it?" said the old man, aghast. "Is it the whole £100?"

"Sure I thought you told us we might lay it out as we plaised."

"Is that a rason ye'd waste the whole of it in a year, ye prodigal?" cried the old man; and he trembled at the idea of his substance falling into such hands.

Some months after this he applied the second test. He convened his sons, and addressed them solemnly: "I am an old man, my children; my hair is white on my head, and it's time I was giving over trade and making my sowl aisy." The two elder overflowed with sympathy. He then gave the dairy-farm and the hill to Shamus, and the meadows to Guillaum. Thereupon the two vied with each other in expressions of love and gratitude. But Garrett said never a word; and this, coupled with his behavior about the £100, so maddened the old man that he gave Garrett's portion, namely, the home and the home farm, to his elder brothers to hold in common. Garrett he disinherited on the spot, and in due form. That is to say, he did not overlook him nor pass him by, but even as spiteful testators used to leave the disinherited one a shilling, that he might not be able to say he had been inadvertently omitted, and it was a mistake, old Brian Taafe solemnly presented young Garrett Taafe with a hazel staff and a small bag. Poor Garrett knew very well what that meant. He shouldered the bag, and went forth into the wide world with a sad heart, but a silent tongue. His dog, Lurcher, was for following him, but he drove him back with a stone.

On the strength of the new arrangement, Guillaum and Shamus married directly, and brought their wives home, for it was a large house, and room for all. But the old farmer was not contented to be quite a cipher, and he kept finding fault with this and that. The young men became more and more impatient of his interference, and their wives fanned the flame with female pertinacity. So that the house was divided, and a very home of discord. This went on getting worse and worse, till at last, one winter afternoon, Shamus defied his father openly before all the rest, and said: "I'd like to know what would plaise ye. Maybe ye'd like to turn us all out as ye did Garrett."

The old farmer replied, with sudden dignity, "If I did, I'd take no more than I gave."

"What good was you giving it?" said Guillaum; "we get no comfort of it while you are in the house."

"Do you talk that way to me?" said the father, deeply grieved. "If it was poor Garrett I had, he wouldn't use me so."

"Much thanks the poor boy ever got from you," said one of the women, with venomous tongue; then the other woman, finding she could count on male support, suggested to her father-in-law to take his stick and pack and follow his beloved Garrett. "Sure he'd find him begging about the counthry."

At the women's tongues the wounded parent turned to bay.

"I don't wonder at anything I hear ye say. Ye never yet heard of anything good that a woman could have a hand in—only mischief always. If ye ask who made such a road or built a bridge, or wrote a great history, or did a great detion, you'll never hear it's a woman done it; but if there is a jewel with swords and guns, or two boys cracking each other's crowns with shillalahs, or a didly secret let out, or a character ruined, or a man brought to the gallows, or mischief made between a father and his own flesh and blood, then I'll engage you'll hear a woman had some call to it. We needn't have recoorse to histhory to know your doin's; 'tis undher our eyes; for 'twas the likes o' ye two burned Throy, and made the King o' Leinsther rebel against Brian Born."

These shafts of eloquence struck home; the women set up a screaming, and pulled their caps off their heads, which in that part was equivalent to gentle-folks drawing their swords.

"Oh, murther! murther, was it for this I married you, Gullaum Taafe?"

"Och, Shamus, will ye sit an' hear me compared to the likes? Would I rebel against Brian Born, Shamus, a'ra gal?"

"Don't heed him, avourneen," said Shamus; "he is an ould man."

But she would not be pacified. "Oh vo! vo! if ever I thought the like 'ud be [illegible] rebel against Brian Born!"

As for the other, she prepared to leave the house.

"Guillaum," said she, "I'd never stay a day undher your roof with them as would say I'd burn Throy. Does he forget he ever had a mother himself? Ah! 'tis a bad apple, that's what it is, that despises the tree it sprung from."

All this heated Shamus, so that he told the woman sternly to sit down, for the offender should go; and upon that, to show they were of one mind, Guillaum deliberately opened the door. Lurcher ran out, and the wind and the rain rushed in. It was a stormy night.

Then the old man took fright, and humbled himself:

"Ah! Shamus, Guillaum, achree, let ye have it as ye will; I'm sorry for what I said, a'ra gal. Don't turn me out on the high-road in my old days, Guillaum, and I'll engage I'll never open my mouth against one o' ye the longest day I live. Ah! Shamus, it isn't long I have to stay wid ye, any way. Yer own hair will be as white as mine yet, plaise God! and ye'll be thanking him ye showed respect to mine, this night."

But they were all young and of one mind, and they turned him out and barred the door. He crept away, shivering in the wind and rain, till he got on the lee side of a stone wall, and there he stopped and asked himself whether he could live through the night. Presently something cold and smooth poked against his hand; it was a large dog that had followed unobserved till he stopped. By a white mark on his breast he saw it was Lurcher, Garrett's dog.

"Ah!" said the poor wanderer, "you are not so wise a dog as I thought, to follow me." When he spoke to the dog, the dog fondled him. Then he burst out sobbing and crying; "Ah, Lurcher! Garrett was not wise either; but he would niver have turned me to the door, this bitter night, nor even thee." And so he moaned and lamented. But Lurcher pulled his coat, and by his movement conveyed to him that he should not stay there all night; so then he crept on and knocked at more than one door, but did not obtain admittance, it was so tempestuous. At last he lay down exhausted on some straw in the corner of an outhouse; but Lurcher lay close to him, and it is probable the warmth of the dog saved his life that night.

Next day the wind and rain abated; but this aged man had other ills to fight against besides winter and rough weather. The sense of his son's ingratitude and his own folly drove him almost mad. Sometimes he would curse and thirst for vengeance, sometimes he would shed tears that seemed to scald his withered cheeks. He got into another county and begged from door to door. As for Lurcher, he did not beg; he used to disappear, often for an hour at a time, but always returned, and often with a rabbit or even a hare in his mouth. Sometimes the friends exchanged them for a gallon of meal, sometimes they roasted them in the woods; Lurcher was a civilized dog, and did not like them raw.

Wandering hither and thither, Brian Taafe came at last within a few miles of his own house; but he soon had cause to wish himself farther off it; for here he met his first downright rebuff, and, cruel to say, he owed it to his hard-hearted sons. One recognized him as the father of that rogue Guillaum Taafe, who had cheated him in the sale of a horse, and another as the father of that thief Shamus, who had sold him a diseased cow that had died the week after. So, for the first time since he was driven out of his home, he passed the night supperless, for houses did not lie close together in that part. Cold, hungry, houseless, and distracted with grief at what he had been and now was, nature gave way at last, and, unable to outlast the weary, bitter night, he lost his senses just before dawn, and lay motionless on the hard road.

The chances were he must die; but just at death's door his luck turned.

Lurcher put his feet over him and his chin upon his breast to guard him, as he had often guarded Garrett's coat, and that kept a little warmth in his heart; and at the very dawn of day the door of a farmhouse opened, and the master came out upon his business and saw something unusual lying in the road a good way off. So he went toward it and found Brian Taafe in that condition. This farmer was very well-to-do, but he had known trouble, and it had made him charitable. He soon halloed to his men and had the old man taken in; he called his wife, too, and bade her observe that it was a reverend face, though he was all in tatters. They laid him between hot blankets, and, when he came to a bit, gave him warm drink, and at last a good meal. He recovered his spirits, and thanked them with a certain dignity.

When he was quite comfortable, and not before, they asked his name.

"Ah! don't ask me that," said he, piteously. "It's a bad name I have, and it used to be a good one, too. Don't ask me, or maybe you'll put me out, as the others did, for the fault of my two sons. It is hard to be turned from my own door, let alone from other honest men's doors, through the vilyins," said he.

So the farmer was kindly, and said, "Never mind your name, till your belly."

But by and by the man went out into the yard, and then the wife couldn't restrain her curiosity. "Why, good man," said she, "sure you are too decent a man to be ashamed of your name."

"I'm too decent not to be ashamed of it," said Brian, "but you are right; an honest man should tell his name though they druv him out of heaven for it. I am Brian Taafe—that was."

"Not Brian Taafe, the strong farmer at Corrans?"

"Ay, madam; I'm all that's left of him."

"Have you a son called Garrett?"

"I had, then."

The woman spoke no more to him, but ran screaming to the door: "Here, Tom! Tom! come here!" cried she; "Tom! Tom!" As Lurcher, a very sympathetic dog, flew to the door and yelled and barked fiercely in support of this invocation, the hullabaloo soon brought the farmer running in.

"Oh Tom, asthore," cried she, "it's Mr. Taafe, the father of Garrett Taafe himself."

"Oh Lord!" cried the farmer, in equal agitation, and stared at him. "My blessing on the day you ever set foot within these doors!" Then he ran to the door and halloed: "Hy, Murphy! Ellen! come here, ye [illegible]."

Lurcher supported the call with great energy. In ran a fine little boy and girl. "Look at this man with all the eyes in your body!" said he. "This is Misther Taafe, father of Garrett Taafe, that saved us all from ruin and destruction entirely." He then turned to Mr. Taafe and told him, a little more calmly, "that years ago, every haporth they had was going to be carted for the rent; but Garrett Taafe came by, put his hand in his pocket, took out thirty pounds, and cleared them in a moment. It was a way he had; we were not the only ones he saved that way, so long as he had it to give."

The old man did not hear these last words; his eyes were opened, the iron entered his soul, and he overflowed with grief and penitence.

"Och, murther! murther!" he cried. "My poor boy! what had I to do at all to go and turn you adrift, as I had done, for no raison in life?" Then with a piteous, apologetic wail: "I tuck the wrong for the right; that's the way the world is blinded. Och, Garrett, Garrett, what will I do with the thought of it? An' those two vilyins that I gave it all to and they turned me out in my ould days, as I done you. No mather?" and he fell into a sobbing and a trembling that nearly killed him for the second time.

But the true friends of his son Garrett nursed him through that, and comforted him, so he recovered. But, as he did live, he outlived those tender feelings whose mortal wounds had so nearly killed him. When he recovered this last blow he brooded and brooded, but never shed another tear.

One day, seeing him pretty well restored, as he thought, the good farmer came to him with a fat bag of gold. "Sir," said he, "soon after your son helped us, luck set in our way. Mary, she had a legacy; we had a wonderful crop of flax, and with that plant 'tis kill or cure; and then I found lead in the hill, and they pay me a dale o' money for leave to mine there. I'm almost ashamed to take it. I tell you all this to show you I can afford to pay you back that £30, and if you please I'll count it out."

"No!" said Mr. Taafe, "I'll not take Garrett's money; but if you will do me a favor, lend me the whole bag for a week, for at the sight of it I see a way to—whisper."

Then, with bated breath and in strict confidence, he hinted to the farmer a scheme of vengeance. The farmer was not even to tell it to his wife. "For," said old Brian, "the very birds will carry these things about; and sure it is knowing devils I have to deal with, especially the women."

Next day the farmer lent him a good suit and drove him to a quiet corner scarce a hundred yards from his old abode. The old farmer got down and left him. Lurcher walked at his master's heels. It was noon and the sun shining bright.

The wife of Shamus Taafe came out to hang up her man's shirt to dry, when, lo! scarce thirty yards from her, she saw an old man seated counting out gold on a broad stone at his feet. At first she thought it must be one of the good people—or fairies—or else she must be dreaming; but, no! cocking her head on one side, she saw for certain the profile of Brian Taafe, and he was counting a mass of gold. She ran in and screamed her news rather than spoke it.

"Nonsense, woman!" said Shamus, roughly; "it's not in nature."

"Then go and see for yourself, man!" said she.

Shamus was not the only one to take this advice. They all stole out on tiptoe, and made a sort of semi-circle of curiosity. It was no dream; there were piles and piles of gold glowing in the sun, and old Brian with a horse-pistol across his knees; and even Lurcher seemed to have his eyes steadily fixed on the glittering booty. When they had thoroughly drunk in this most unexpected scene, they began to talk in agitated whispers; but even in talking they never looked at each other; their eyes were glued on the gold.

Said Guillaum: "Ye did very wrong, Shamus, to turn out the old father as you done; see now what we all lost by it. That's a part of the money he laid by, and we'll never see a penny of it."

The wives whispered that it was a foolish thing to say. "Leave it to us," said they, "and we'll have it all, one day."

This being agreed to, the women stole toward the old man, one on each side. Lurcher rose and snarled, and old Brian hurried his gold into his ample pockets, and stood on the defensive.

"Oh, father! and is it you come back? Oh, the Lord be praised! Oh, the weary day since you left us, and all our good luck wid ye!"

Brian received this and similar speeches with fury and reproaches. Then they humbled themselves and wept, cursed their ill-governed tongues, and bewailed the men's folly in listening to them. They flattered him and cajoled him, and ordered their husbands to come forward and ask the old man's pardon, and not let him ever leave them again. The supple sons were all penitence and affection directly. Brian at last consented to stay, but stipulated for a certain chamber with a key to it. "For," said he, "I have got my strong-box to take care of, as well as myself."

They pricked up their ears directly at mention of the strong-box, and asked where it was.

"Oh! it is not far, but I can't carry it. Give me two boys to fetch it."

"Oh! Guillaum and Shamus would carry it or anything to oblige a long-lost father."

So they went with him to the farmer's cart, and brought in the box, which was pretty large, and above all very full and heavy.

He was once more king of his own house, and flattered and petted as he never had been since he gave away his estate. To be sure he fed this by mysterious hints that he had other lands besides those in that part of the country, and that, indeed, the full extent of his possessions would never be known until his will was read; which will was safely locked away in his strong-box—with other things.

And so he passed a pleasant time, embittered only by regrets, and very poignant they were, that he could hear nothing of his son Garrett. Lurcher also was taken great care of, and became old and lazy.

But shocks that do not kill undermine. [illegible] Brian Taafe's night-work and troubles told upon him, and he neared his end. He was quite conscious of it, and announced his own departure, but not in a regretful way. He had become quite a philosopher; and indeed there was a sort of chuckle about the old fellow in speaking of his own death, which his daughter-in-law secretly denounced as unchristian, and, what was worse, unchancy.

Whenever he did mention the expected event, he was sure to say, "And mind, boys, my will is in that chest."

"Don't speak of it, father," was the reply.

When he was dying, he called for his sons, and said, in a feeble voice: "I was a strong farmer, and come of honest folk. Ye'll give me a good wakin', boys, an' a gran' funeral."

They promised this very heartily.

"And after the funeral ye'll all come here together, and open the will, the children an' all. All but Garrett. I've left him nothing, poor boy, for sure he's not in this world. I'll maybe see him where I'm goin'."

So there was a grand wake, and the virtues of the deceased and his professional importance were duly howled by an old lady who excelled in this lugubrious art. Then the funeral was hurried on, because they were in a hurry to open the chest.

The funeral was joined in the churchyard by a stranger, who muffled his face, and shed the only tears that fell upon that grave. After the funeral he stayed behind all the rest and mourned, but he joined the family at the feast which followed; and, behold, it was Garrett, come a day too late. He was welcomed with exuberant affection, not being down in the will; but they did not ask him to sleep there. They wanted to be alone, and read the will. He begged for some reminiscence of his father, and they gave him Lurcher. So he put Lurcher into his gig, and drove away to that good farmer, sure of his welcome, and praying God he might find him alive. Perhaps his brothers would not have let him go so easily had they known he had made a large fortune in America, and was going to buy quite a slice of the county.

On the way he kept talking to Lurcher, and reminding him of certain sports they had enjoyed together, and feats of poaching they had performed. Poor old Lurcher had been pricking his ears all the time, and cudgeling his memory as to the tones of the voice that was addressing him. Garrett reached the farm, and was received first with stares, then with cries of joy, and was dragged into the house, so to speak. After the first ardor of welcome, he told them he had arrived only just in time to bury his father. "And this old dog," said he, "is all that's left me of him. He was mine first, and, when I left, he took to father. He was always a wise dog."

"We know him," said the wife, "he has been here before." And she was going to blurt it all out, but her man said, "Another time," and gave her a look as black as thunder, which wasn't his way at all, but he explained to her afterward. "They are friends, those three, over the old man's grave. We should think twice before we stir ill blood betune 'em." So, when he stopped her, she turned it off cleverly enough, and said the dear old dog must have his supper. Supper they gave him, and a new sheep-skin to lie on by the great fire. So there he lay and seemed to doze.

The best bed in the house was laid for Garrett, and when he got up to go to it didn't that wise old dog get up, too, with an effort, and move stiffly toward Garrett, and lick his hand; and then he lay down again all of a piece, as who should say: "I'm very tired of it all." "He knows me now at last," said Garrett, joyfully. "That is his way of saying good-night, I suppose. He was always a wonderful wise dog."

In the morning they found Lurcher dead and stiff on the sheep-skin. It was a long good-night he had bid so quietly to the friend of his youth.

Garrett shed tears over him and said: "If I had only known what he meant, I'd have sat up with him. But I never could see far. He was a deal wiser for a dog than I shall ever be for a man."

Meantime the family party assembled in the bedroom of the deceased. Every trace of feigned regret had left their faces, and all their eyes sparkled with joy and curiosity. They went to open the chest. It was locked. They hunted for the key; first quietly, then fussily. The women found it at last, sewed up in the bed; they cut it out and opened the chest.

The first thing they found was a lot of stones. They glared at them, and the color left their faces. What deviltry was this?

Presently they found writing on one stone: "Look below." Then there was a reaction, and a loud laugh. "The old fox was afraid the money and parchments would fly away, so he kept them down."

They plunged their hands in, and soon cleared out a barrowful of stones; till they came to a kind of paving-stone. They lifted this carefully out, and discovered a good new rope with a running noose, and—the will.

It was headed in large letters finely engrossed:

"The last will and testament of Brian Taafe."

But the body of the instrument was in the scrawl of the testator:

"I bequeath all the stones in this box to the hearts that could turn their father and benefactor out on the highway that stormy night.

"I bequeath this rope for any father to hang himself with who is fool enough to give his property to his children before he dies."

This is a prosaic story compared with the Lear of Shakespeare, but it is well told by Gerald Griffin, who was a man of genius. Of course I claim little merit, but that of setting the jewels. Were I to tell you that is an art, I suppose you would not believe it.—Harper's Weekly

SEARCHING FOR THE POLE.

Admiral Porter Indorses the Plan of Capt. Howgate for Arctic Explorations.

Admiral Porter has just written a letter to Capt. Howgate regarding the latter's proposed expedition. In it he says: "In my opinion there is an open sea for 200 miles toward the pole; that there are mountains, from which are precipitated the icebergs which lately blocked up Robeson's channel, and that, had Markham's furthest point been exceeded by sixty miles, the pack would have been passed and open water reached again. Every few years we must expect just such a pack as Capt. Nares encountered, which will probably last for a year or two, and will then break up. If, at the moment of breaking up, men and boats are in readiness to take advantage of the opportunity, a great advance could be made toward the pole. There are no greater hardships to be encountered as high as 83 degrees than have heretofore been surmounted by the intrepid explorers of the Arctic regions, and when one reflects that a party from the Polaris drifted 1,800 miles on a cake of ice, and that an infant and its mother were all that time exposed to the inclemencies of the Arctic regions, we ought to have no doubt about a company of strong, active men, well provided with everything necessary to make life endurable in that desolate region."

The letter continues in substance that the greatest difficulty will be found in keeping up the spirits of the men. To do this the Admiral suggests that each member of the crew selected shall have a knowledge of some useful mechanical trade, and that he be kept occupied at this when in winter quarters. "In the event of such an expedition as you propose," the letter continues, "I see a fine opportunity for utilizing the electric telegraph. Wires could be laid along the ground or ice without much danger of their being carried off by the bears or foxes." In conclusion, the Admiral states that he can see no objection to the proposed expedition, and hopes it may succeed.

Gen. Grant and Charles O'Conor.

The Washington correspondent of a Western journal says: "The President to-day, in conversation, alluded more in detail to the interview between him and Charles O'Conor on Sunday last. O'Conor called on the President with Secretary Fish. The President had been previously notified of the fact that O'Connor desired an interview for the purpose of paying his respects, and to offer an apology for the expressions made in a letter written to a friend many years ago, which, in the heat of the campaign, was exhumed and for the first time published. The language used was that "Grant was a drunken Democrat, picked out of the gutters of Galena by the Republican party for the purpose of ruling the nation." O'Conor told the President that he could remember no such letter, and would not deny that he had written it if he did. He begged to say that the charge was without foundation; that he never, of his own knowledge, or from hearsay, had any information upon which such an accusation could be based. The President said that he had never seen the letter, and only knew of its existence from newspaper comments, adding that he had too much experience in having been personally abused himself as a public officer to seek to aggravate this unpleasant phase of public life by searching for matters of this sort published against him. The President says to-day that he deemed the explanation ample, and was entirely satisfied."

A Woman's Freak.

A handsome boy boarded for a year in a Nashville hotel and conducted a sewing-machine agency. He was active and successful in business, and a pet of the women, with whom he was fond of associating. His youthfulness insured him more freedom with them than would have been accorded an older beau; but one day he hugged and kissed a chambermaid, and was complained of to the landlord. At this point in the story the pronoun "he" must be changed to "she," for the offender confessed to being a woman in boy's clothes. She said that, being compelled to earn her own living, she learned by experience that her sex was a detriment. So she took to trousers, and in that guise she not only did better in business, but was able to bamboozle the women.

The Supreme Bench.

Thus far twenty-nine men have reached the exalted position of the Supreme bench. Of this number nine are now in office, ten have resigned, and ten died in office. Judge Jay, the first Chief Justice, resigned to accept a foreign mission; Judges Ellsworth, Blair, Moore, Grier and Nelson resigned because they became too infirm to discharge the duties; Judge Story resigned to become Professor in the Harvard Law School; Judge Curtis went back to his law practice, and Messrs. Wayne and Campbell "went with their States" in 1861. Judge Davis is the first of this illustrious list to go from the bench to the forum.

An Egg-Shooting Match.

An "egg-shooting match" came off at the Waterside last Friday between John Kelso and F. K. Grain. The distance was twenty-one yards, and the eggs were sprung from a trap in the same manner as "gyro" pigeons. Kelso shot two out of twelve, and Grain ten—the latter, of course, winning the match by "a large majority." This sport is a great improvement on the slaughter of live pigeons, and it tries the marksmanship equally well. It is easy to tell when the egg is hit, especially when it happens to be a bad one.—Stamford (Conn.) Advocate.

THE points in a Saratoga county love story are that Frank was discarded by Lisa in obedience to the dying injunction of her mother; that they parted at the gate of the cemetery; that she gradually pined until at the point of death; that she sent for Frank, but he was on his death-bed with fever; and their bodies were simultaneously carried through the cemetery gate where they had parted.

O ROSEBUD GARLAND OF GIRLS.

BY MRS. JULIA R. C. DORR.

O rosebud garland of girls!
  If the whole glad year were May;
If winds sang low in the clustering leaves,
  And roses bloomed alway;
If youth were all that there is of life;
If the years brought nothing of care and strife,
Not even a cloud to the ether blue—
It were easy to sing a song for you.

Yet, O my garland of girls!
  Is there nothing better than May—
The golden glow of harvest-time,
  The rest of the autumn day?
This thought I give you all to keep:
Who soweth good seed shall surely reap;
The year grows rich as it groweth old,
And life's latest sands are its sands of gold.

PITH AND POINT.

THE pensive mule is not usually regarded as susceptible to pathetic emotions. And he occasionally drops a muleteer.

DR. AYER invented a pill and some sirups, advertised it, and is worth $8,000,000. Ayer you advertising anything?

IN order to become a successful exhibitor at a poultry show, there is no denying that a man requires considerable Cochin.

SHOE-DEALER: "I find we have no No. 12 shoes; but here is a pair of large 9s." Customer: "Nines! Do you take me for Cinderiller?"

THIS blue-glass business is nothing new after all. We suppose the glass-blowers blew glass long before Gen. Pleasonton was born.

"SAY, mister," said a newsboy to a man with a high shirt collar, yesterday, "how do you manage to spit over that collar? Do you use a ladder?"

"WHICHEVER way I turn," said an unfortunate hand-organ man, "I find nothing but grinding poverty." Yet he always carries a barrel of notes. And he always feels cranky.

IF you are sick and broken down, paste a little blue tissue paper over your room windows, and in a little while you will have changed for the better so much that you will hardly know tissue.

A WESTERN paper, in describing an accident recently, says, with much candor: "Dr. Jones was called, and under his prompt and skillful treatment the young man died on Wednesday night."

"I MAKE it a point, madam, to study my own mind," said a gentleman to a lady who had exhibited some surprise at an opinion he had expressed. "I didn't suppose you understood the use of a microscope."

A LITTLE boy was asked the other day if he knew where the wicked finally went to. He answered, "They practice law a spell here and then go to the Legislature!" It was a painful operation for the boy to sit down for a few days.

A LADY recently asked her servant how the mustard-pot had become cracked. The reply, made with all gravity, was that she did not know, but supposed that it must have been that the mustard was so strong that it caused the fracture.

"PAPA," said a little boy to his parent, "are sailors very small men?" "No, my dear; what leads you to suppose that they are so small?" answered the father. "Because I read, the other day, of a sailor going to sleep on his watch," replied the young idea, smartly.

"I HAD nine children to support, and it kept me busy," said Smith to Jones as they met, "but one of the girls got married. Now I have—" "Eight!" interrupted Jones. "No, ten—counting the son-in-law!" said Smith, with a sigh which might have been heard afar off.

TALMAGE talked severely to the physicians last Sunday. His text in itself was a crusher, as follows: "And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet until his disease was exceeding great; yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. And Asa slept with his fathers."

"SAY Pat! suppose Satan was to come along now, and see both of us here, which do you suppose he would take—you or me?" "Oh, faith, yer honor! he'd take me." "How so?" "Well, sir," said Paddy, "he'd take me now, because he wouldn't be sure of me when he came again; but he'd be sure of you at any time, and could afford to wait."

A GENTLEMAN surnamed the American Flagg, who is stopping at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, was the other day the victim of a fearful outrage. It seems this gentleman, who is tall, commonly wears the highest collars ever seen in Frisco. He received a note from a firm of bill-stickers, asking if he did not wish to let out the backs of those articles for advertising.

River and Harbor Appropriations.

In the River and Harbor bill the following items appear for the improvement of rivers: Mouth of the Mississippi, $100,000; Mississippi, Missouri and Arkansas, $65,000; Mississippi, opposite St. Louis, $70,000; Des Moines rapids, Mississippi river, $95,000; Upper Mississippi, $30,000; Rock Island rapids, Mississippi river, $10,000; Missouri river, about the mouth of the Yellowstone, $10,000; Tennessee river, $200,000; Ohio river, $30,000; St. Mary's river and St. Mary's Falls canal, $100,000; Saginaw river, $30,000; Falls of St. Anthony, $5,000; Great Kanawha river, W. THE shadow-face of a man haunts a gas-burner in one of the gambling houses of Topeka, Kan., and may be always seen on the globe surrounding the light. The gambling fraternity are somewhat troubled about the strange apparition, which they think is not according to Hoyle.

BLUE GLASS.

Some Valuable Information from Gen. Pleasonton's Book—The Effects of the Chemical Rays on Animal and Vegetable Life.

Maj. Gen. Pleasonton has just published in book-form a number of addresses, memoirs, etc., written and delivered by him at various times, on the influence of the blue rays of the sunlight and the blue color of the sky in developing animal and vegetable life, arresting disease, and restoring life in acute and chronic disorders to human and domestic animals. During the summer of 1871, says Gen. Pleasonton, a professional gardener in Massachusetts (near Boston), who had been trying for some time to protect his young plants from minute insects which fed upon them, after numerous experiments, all of which failed, succeeded with the blue ray. He made a small triangular frame, covered it with blue gauze, prepared the ground and sowed the seed, covering a portion of the ground with the frame and gauze, leaving the other part exposed to the attacks of the insects. The plants outside the frame were all eaten as soon as they germinated; those under it escaped entirely.

Gen. Pleasonton's explanation of the phenomenon is that the sunlight, negatively electrified in passing through the meshes of the blue gauze, which is positively electrified, excites an electro-magnetic current sufficiently strong to destroy the feeble vitality of the eggs or of the insects themselves, which are in the soil with the seed, leaving the seed to germinate rapidly under its influence.

A lady residing in Philadelphia also informed the General that, having some choice plants in pots in her sitting-room which were drooping, she threw over them a common blue gauze veil, such as ladies wear, and exposed them to the sunlight, and in a short time they were fully restored to health and vigor.

The General also says on the insect question that, having introduced blue glass into the windows of one of the servants' sleeping-rooms, it was noticed that large numbers of flies which had previously infested them were soon found dead on the inside sills of the windows.
